PALMISTRY—MADAME AYERS Palm Readings are minute, clear and logical. She does not generalize or fall back on mere indications of character, but goes straight to the heart of the matter, showing where, when, and why you have failed; what possibilities lie before you, and what moral force must be brought to bear to ensure success in the future. Swiftly and unerringly she lays bare every detail of your character as you alone can know it. She can even describe your relations with others, and the influence they have had on your life. 50c. and $1.00 readings reduced to Ladies, 25c.; Gentlemen, 50c. NEW RAILWAY TO BE ASSISTED.

Three Roads Which Will Receive Provincial Aid.

PREMIER ROSS GIVES DETAILS

James Bay Railway Bonds to be Guaranteed to the Extent of $20,000 a Mile and a Branch of the Grand Trunk Pacific Will Get $3,000 a Mile Cash and 6,000 Acres of Land Per Mile.

Toronto, April 8.—The Government's railway subsidy proposals were tabled by Premier Ross yesterday. Three railways will receive the assistance of the province.

The James Bay Railway will be assisted by the guarantee of its bonds to the extent of $20,000 a mile for its 265 miles from Toronto to Sudbury.

The Huntsville & Lake of Bays Railway will receive $10,000 for a railway one mile in length, connecting two lakes.

The third proposal covers the construction of a branch of the Grand Trunk Pacific from a point on the main line to Port Arthur, at the head of navigation, a distance of about 200 miles. The railway will receive $3,000 a mile in cash and 6,000 acres a mile in land.

James Bay Railway.

In moving the first reading of the bill respecting aid to the James Bay Railway, the Premier said it was proposed to subsidize the railway to Sudbury, a distance of 265 miles. The road had already a subsidy from Sudbury to Parry Sound, 95 miles, of $4,000 a mile, or $380,000; and on the northern section $2,000 a mile and 5,000 acres of land a mile. This grant was cancelled by the new bill.

It was proposed to guarantee the bonds of the railway to the extent of $20,000 a mile. The railway had received a subsidy from the Dominion Government for its 265 miles of $3,200 and if the cost of construction is over $15,000 a mile, the subsidy will be $6,400 a mile. The guarantee of the bonds by the province will place at the disposal of the railway between $25,000 and $26,000 a mile towards its construction. The estimated cost of construction was about $30,000 a mile, and the equipment $2,000 or $3,000 more. If the guarantee was made the construction would be begun at once and completed in three years.

An Additional Spout.

This proposal will give Ontario an additional railway system into the Northwest, and the Premier at some length spoke on the advantages that would accrue to the province. The railway would connect with the Canada Atlantic on the east and the C.P.R. on the west.

The guarantee would run for thirty years, and the bonds bear interest at 3½ per cent. As security, the Government would receive a first mortgage on the railway.

The guarantee of the bonds of a railway, the Premier said, was a new departure in this province, but it was not new in the Dominion. The Manitoba Government had guaranteed bonds to the amount of $10,000,000 for four railway systems. The Dominion Government had guaranteed the bonds of the Canadian Northern to the amount of $13,000 a mile, and had guaranteed the bonds of different sections of the proposed G.T.P.

Mr. Hoyle asked if it was proposed to deviate from the original survey of the Toronto and James Bay Railway through the northern municipalities of North Ontario into Orillia. The Premier said it was not.

Running Arrangements.

Continuing, the Premier showed that the bill provided for running powers being granted to the C.P.R., and no doubt there would be a reciprocal arrangement between the two roads. It was provided that the construction will be of the highest standard. Settlers will get a rate of one cent a mile in and out and their effects will be carried at half the usual rate.

The Premier showed that by withdrawing the old subsidy of $4,000 a mile for ninety-five miles the province would be saving $380,000.

Another line for which a subsidy is granted is a branch of the Huntsville & Lake of Bays Railway, a mile in length, connecting two lakes. The railway will receive a gift of $10,000.

Grand Trunk Pacific.

The next proposal was the aid to the Grand Trunk Pacific. This is a line from a point on Thunder Bay, Port Arthur or Fort William to a point where the railway will connect with the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific. It is proposed to give a subsidy of $3,000 a mile for the 200 miles of the road, and a land subsidy of 6,000 acres a mile. The Premier explained that the subsidy that had been withdrawn from the Parry Sound Railway would be applied on this. The Grand Trunk, the Premier said, should have an independent line to the head of the Great Lakes.

This was not less important than the James Bay Railway. It would connect the Great Lakes with the Grand Trunk Pacific, and open up a new territory for settlement.

In reply to Mr. Whitney, the Premier said the construction would be begun within a year.

The bills were read a first time.

Hon E. J. Davis' bill declaring for the principle of local option in the constitution of county councils was given a second reading in the Legislature last night. The House divided on an amendment of Mr. Tucker to give the bill the three months' hoist. The vote was 42 to 45. The absentees were: Conservatives, Jameson, Gamey, St. John, Krib, Beck; Liberals, Latchford, Stratton, Conmee, D. C. Cameron, John Smith.

One official pair was recorded: Latchford and St. John.

The original motion was then carried on the same division.

Taxation Bill.

The Gibson Taxation Bill was again taken up in committee of the whole House, and a few alterations made. One of these affects non-householders who will now be exempt up to $400 on salary or pension, instead of having to pay on their entire personal earnings. The medical profession tried to have a change made in the business tax of 50 per cent. of the value of the premises occupied, it being held that this would be a hardship on the young and struggling physician as compared with the physician having a large income who may not occupy a more pretentious office. No change was made in this section.

The committee then decided to report the bill, and Major Clark moved that the railway taxation clauses of the Pettypiece Bill be substituted for the railway clauses of the Gibson Bill.

"That's absurd," said the Attorney-General, and the chairman declared the motion out of order.

The Speaker took the chair, and on the motion to receive the report of the committee, Major Clark moved that it be not adopted, but that it be referred back with instructions to incorporate the provisions of the Pettypiece bill.

Amendment Ruled Out.

After the recess Mr. Speaker gave his ruling, declaring the amendment out of order.

Mr. Dryden's Factory Act amendment was considered in committee. An amendment was inserted changing the hours of work. The time for knocking off is fixed at 6.30, but a permit may be secured if it is found necessary to run after that hour. The hour of 7 a.m. for beginning was stricken out of the bill.

Volunteer Land Grants.

Hon. Mr. Davis introduced a bill to amend the Volunteer Land Grants Act. He proposes to extend the time for receiving applications for grants to July 1. This is the third extension, and Mr. Davis said he hoped it would be the last.

Bad Conveyancing.

Henry Carscallen's bill to prohibit non-lawyers from drawing legal documents raised a storm from the representatives of rural constituencies. Messrs. Rickard, Hoyle, Barr, Clark and others declaring that many farmers had to depend on unlicensed conveyancers for their legal work or drive twenty or thirty miles to the nearest lawyer. The lawyers lined up strongly in favor of the bill, and after an hour was spent in thrashing out the question Mr. Whitney stated his position. It was that public opinion was not prepared to accept it. He believed that it would fail in its object, and, therefore, he thought it should not be passed now.

The second reading was lost on the following vote:

Yeas—Ross, Gibson, Harcourt, Caldwell, Preston (Brant), Clarke (Northumberland, Gross Little (Norfolk), Bowman, McKay, Pense, Russell, Cameron (Huron), Tudhope, Davidson, Carr, James, Anderson, Smith (Sault), Foy, Matheson, Carscallen (Hamilton), Willoughby, Reed, Powell, Morrison, Dunlop, Hanna Hendrie, Pyne, Lucas, Smyth, Murphy, Reaume, Carscallen (Lennox), Mahaffy—36.

Nays—Dryden, Davis, Stratton, Evanturel, Auld, Taylor, Richardson, Thompson, McCart, Routledge, Hislop, Lee, Pettypiece, Pardo, Dickenson, Graham, Burt, Rickard, Brown, Stock, Truax, Holmes, Guibord, Michaud, Whitney, Eilber, Carnegie, Munro, Tucker, Joynt, Gallagher, Duff, Beatty, Hoyle, Barr, Fox, Lackner, Downey, Clark (Bruce), Jessop, Macdiarmid, McLeod, Preston (Durham), Sutherland—44.

Mr Lucas withdrew his bill to provide for the garnishment of the salaries of civil servants, and the House adjourned at 11.55.

The Pettypiece Taxation Bill has entered another period of its existence. On Wednesday the Legislature referred it to a special committee of thirteen members. Yesterday morning the special committee met and turned the bill over to a sub-committee of six members as follows: Messrs. Pettypiece, Clark, Duff, Dryden, T. H. Preston and M. G. Cameron.

BAD TREACHERY AT SAMONDA

Two Hundred Thibetans Fired Upon British Officers Who Had Been Invited to a Parley—No One Was Injured—Thibetan Reinforcements at Gyangtse—The British Are Still Marching On.

London, April 8.—A despatch to The Times from Kalatzo, Thibet, dated yesterday, reports that 200 Thibetans at the village of Samonda, in treacherously firing a volley at a party of British officers, whom they invited to parley with them, aimed badly. No one was injured, but the action is supposed to indicate the tactics which the Thibetans intended to employ at Guru. The correspondent adds that reinforcements are arriving at Gyangtse to oppose the British advance.

Col. Younghusband was last reported 16 miles from Gyangtse and expected to reach there this week. The British are still marching on.

STEREOTYPED WAR NEWS.

Censor's Work Makes Much of It Curiously Alike and Uninteresting.

London, April 8.—The brief despatches from the seat of war appearing in the London newspapers during the past few days all have been of a curiously stereotyped character, indicating an active censorship. This applies particularly to points under Japanese control; but from the Russian side also, it is evident, care is being exercised to prevent the news of operations leaking out. The Japanese fleet continues cruising not far distant from Port Arthur.

The Standard's Che Foo correspondent announces that a steamer which arrived there Tuesday sighted Japanese warships off Wei-Hai-Wei.

The correspondent of The Telegraph at Seoul cables that a correspondent at Gensan had telegraphed informing him that it took him six days to travel 183 miles from Seoul to Gensan, owing to the state of the roads.

Russian Mines Placed.

Shanghai, April 8.—The Russians have planted submarine mines off the coast of Takushan (about 50 miles west of the mouth of the Yalu River), as well as in the estuary of the Yalu.

Poisonous Japanese Shells.

St. Petersburg, April 8.—A correspondent of The Vostchny Vestnik states that many of the slightly wounded in the first bombardment of Port Arthur died as a result of the poisonous gases emanating from the Japanese shells.

Entering the Yalu Safely.

Tokio, April 8.—A despatch from Seoul, Corea, says that the Japanese supply steamers are safely entering the estuary of the Yalu River and are landing their cargoes at various points on the Corean shore.

No Confirmation of Ewizung.

Seoul, April 8.—Telegrams have been received here saying that the Russians are occupying six of the largest border towns on the Tumen River, in Northeastern Corea. A Corean Prefect has sent in a report that the Russians and Chinese who were at Yongampho, Corea, have withdrawn to Antung, across the Yalu River. Only a few merchants remain at the former place. The Japanese authorities have no confirmation of a reported engagement between Russians and Japanese at Kwisung.

ADVANTAGES OF TRENTON ROUTE

For the Outlet of the Trent Valley Canal.

RAILWAYS VERSUS CANALS.

Comparison of Cost of Grain Shipment Trent Canal Would Build up Montreal Some Interesting Facts.

There has been too long a delay in the construction of the Trent Valley Canal via Trenton, seeing that in accordance with the application of the policy of the Dominion Government in promoting the first conditions to national development and adequate transportation facilities.

Indeed, the policy of Canada is as it should be, to construct waterways where they will open up her own agricultural, timber and mineral lands, to carry the products of her own agriculturalists and lumbermen to the consuming markets, and also as outlets for the productions of her own distant lands in the North-west.

Therefore, there is great importance attached to the transportation problem.

We have to find what is the cheapest transportation of grain—whether it be by barge, consort or steam-propeller, respectively.

First, barges have the greatest advantages of forwarding grain to Montreal over steamers and steam propellers. Thus the monthly cost of a barge is $100, of a schooner, $100, and a steam-propeller $1,500 each vessel of equal capacity.

Secondly barges also have another advantage, which is that they in the Port of Montreal pay $10 a day for harbour dues, while the 15,000 or 25,000 bushels they carry would pay for storage in an elevator $209, or equal to twenty days demurrage.

But the barges can be towed to the ocean steamers and have their cargoes discharged direct into the ocean steamers, thus saving the charges, $209 for storage in an elevator.

Thirdly, another advantage barges have over schooners and steam propellers is this: The Trent Valley Canal via Trenton and Bay of Quinte being still-water navigation, insurance on grain and barge is only nominal — saving a great deal of money for insurance.

CAPACITY OF BARGES.

Fourthly, another advantage is that a barge conveys 15,000 bushels, but it is now shown that the Trent Valley Canal is eight feet four inches deep, so barges can be so built as to carry 25,000 bushels each. Well, fifteen barges can be towed across 136 miles of clear navigation, being a chain of lakes, and through the canal itself. A single tow of fifteen barges each with a capacity of 15,000 bushels, would carry 225,000 bushels, or with the capacity of 25,000 bushels each, 375,000 bushels, while the capacity of a steam propeller and her consort, if she have any, would hardly be over one-fourth of the 375,000 bushels, or even 225,000 bushels, that can be moved by a tow of fifteen barges along the Trent Valley Canal via Trenton.

The Trent Valley Canal affords such still water as barges require to navigate them, all the way from Georgian Bay to Trenton, and thence down the Bay of Quinte, and the St. Lawrence. No barge of a size suitable for the Trent Valley Canal can encounter and get through with safety, such heavy billows and gales so prevalent in Lake Ontario; she must be well sheltered from heavy waves and storms all the way to Montreal.

The Trent Valley Canal, via Trenton, (and by no other port on Lake Ontario), can only afford such protection. But if the Trent Valley Canal be diverted from Trenton to any port on Lake Ontario, this canal ceases to answer the purpose of still water navigation.

Between the Georgian Bay and Trenton there is a chain of lakes and rivers that are navigable for barges of a larger capacity than those used in the Erie Canal for four-fifths of the entire distance between these points. The Trent Valley Canal will have only 61 miles of canal in a total navigation of 204 miles — the rest being a chain of lakes and rivers.

SAVING OF TIME.

The time saved would be nearly two days in favour of the Trent Valley Canal over the Welland Canal, to Montreal, and hence a difference of about 600 miles would exist in favour of the Montreal route between Sault Ste. Marie and Liverpool via the Trent Valley Canal over the Erie Canal, between the same points.

The Montreal merchants who visited this district to examine the route of the Trent Valley Canal a few years ago, reported that the Trent Valley Canal via Trenton would effect a saving in distance of three hundred and seventy two miles over the Buffalo route, and also 395 miles overt he Welland Canal route as between Chicago and New York. Between Chicago and Montreal there would be a saving of 460 miles. The saving in time would be 68 hours, and 44 hours, to New York city, according to the route taken, and 36 hours to Montreal.

En passant, if Chicago and Duluth merchants desire to forward grain via Trent Valley Canal to Trenton. They will have to tranship grain at Trenton for Oswego, as barges cannot go across Lake Ontario, owing to its heavy billows and storms.

The Montreal merchants added the fact also remains that even three-fourths of the distance of the Trent Valley Canal is already navigated by large steamboats.

An extract from the report of the Montreal merchants laid before the Board of Trade in Montreal, states inreference to the Trent Valley Canal as under:—

"The fertile belt.—The map which accompanies this report shows the large expanse of rich farming land that is available for settlement in the Dominion, estimated to be equal to 600,000 square miles of the finest wheat lands on this continent. If one-quarter of that land were put under wheat and were to yield the very low average of ten bushels per acre, the produce would be 96,000,000 bushels, or more than double the largest wheat crop ever produced in the United States; or the rate of twelve and a half bushels to the acre, a fourth part of the Canadian fertile region would produce 3,200,000,000 bushels, or full cargoes (100,000 bushels each) for 12,000 first-class steamships or iron clippers. But it has been conjectured that at least for some years to come the region might produce twenty bushels to the acre; in that event the product would be about double the above mentioned yield, or 6,400,000,000 bushels."

The above is the opinion of the Montreal merchants. They speak of only one-fourth of 366,000 square miles as yielding 1,200,000,000 bushels, calculating they should produce the same quantity per square mile as there is in the United States, or twelve and a half bushels on'y per acre.

RAILWAYS INADEQUATE.

Can the present railways and canals carry even one-sixth of the 1,200,000,000 bushels that may be produced by only 150,000 square miles in the Northwest intended by nature as the granary of the world? Certainly not. There will be penury of freight for new railways, and even a new canal besides the Trent Valley Canal, which have ultimately to be enlarged and deepened to meet the demand of the great rush of grain in a few years.

The Trent Valley Canal when completed and worked at its full capacity will be able to convey only between one-fifth and sixth of the above yield of wheat. Thus allowing for delays during the season which remains open seven months, the capacity of the Trent Valley Canal may be estimated at 15,000 vessels of say 15,000 bushels capacity each. This means the transportation of 225,000,000 bushels during the open season.

The Trent Valley Canal will be a practical extension of the harbour of Montreal into and through Central Ontario, having a shore line of over 1,000 miles and having an area of over 6,000,000 acres rich in the finest mineral and agricultural products.

REGULATES RATES OF RAILWAYS.

Uniform testimony deduced from practical results in the commercial world is that water routes, when properly located, not only afford the cheapest and best known means of transportation for all heavy, bulky and cheap commodities, but they are also the natural competitors and most effective regulators of railway transportation and rates.

It was remarked that the genius that conceived the construction of the Erie Canal gave to posterity a rich heritage. It has laid the corner-stone of New York's greatness and wealth, supremacy and power. Who now and hereafter administers the trust should preserve surely and improve it if possible.

In the same way the Trent Valley Canal may lay the corner-stone of Montreal's greatness, wealth, supremacy and power.

We must not ignore the fact of the Erie Canal being only six feet deep, with locks, but nineteen feet in width, has been able to successfully compete with the powerful railway monopolies on both sides of the frontier for the last fifty years.

The rapid development of the North-west and increased grain trade of the Western States which should pass down the St. Lawrence, is now demanding shorter and cheaper means of transportation. One of the natural trade-routes between the Georgian Bay and the St. Lawrence for Montreal is the Trent Valley Canal. Barges can be loaded at the Georgian Bay and proceed via Trenton through the Bay of Quinte and St. Lawrence to Montreal without transhipment—the whole route being land-locked. Grain has been carried from Chicago and Duluth to Parry Sound, Collingwood and Midland for from 75 to 90 cents per hundred bushels or $7.50 to $9 per thousand bushels. And the Trent Valley Canal when completed can carry grain from the Georgian Bay at half to two cents per bushel to Montreal—thus delivering grain in Montreal from Chicago or Duluth in the United States and Fort William or Port Arthur in Ontario at two and three-quarter cents per bushel, besides saving much money for premium of insurance by this well sheltered route via Trenton.

LUMBER CARRIAGE

Lumber can be carried by this route from the Georgian Bay to Montreal at $1 per thousand, and other forest products in proportion.

The rates on lumber from Buffalo to New York by the Erie Canal as $1 per thousand for 560 miles.

En passant, it has often been remarked that Canada has lost millions of dollars of traffic earnings by reason of the Trent Valley Canal, which resembles the Erie Canal, not being completed about fifty years ago, when work was first commenced on the canal.

Though the Erie Canal cost $52,000,000 for construction and maintenance, yet it has turned into the treasury of New York $30,000,000 from canal tolls which were levied when the Erie Canal had no competition by Canadian canals.

CANALS VS. RAILWAYS.

D. Stark, C.E., then in the employment of the Dominion Government, in his letter to the Toronto Mail and Empire, stated that after expressing his belief in the barge system of carrying grain through a canal navigation, made a comparison between the relative capacity of a railway and canal, meeting the requirements of a large and heavy through traffic.

First, then, for the carrying capabilities of each: A railway train of 20 cars (a good average load) will carry 200 tons of grain. A tow of barges with, let us say, 600 tons each, will take 9,000 tons. Now from Fort William or Port Arthur a fleet of vessels starts with 9,000 tons, (one tow load) and giving that load a period of, say, 11 days to get to Montreal from the place of its embarkation; what at the same time would a railway be doing towards the conveyance of the same load from the place?

Each train carrying 200 tons, 45 trains become necessary to take the load of a single tow, and therefore 45 engines and 900 cars would be required for the conveyance of 9,000 tons.

Calling the distance from Fort William or Port Arthur in round numbers one thousand miles and allowing with all its various stoppages and detentions a grain train to make a running time of ten miles an hour, it would take about four days to run through with its load of 200 tons, and supposing the other 44 trains to be immediately following it, the whole would scarcely manage, in view of the accommodation required by other traffic, to get through in much less time than the time for the tow. Certainly any saving of time in favour of the railway would be in my opinion, insignificant. Meantime the tow, containing the same load of 9,000 tons, is steadily pursuing its course, and following it comes another, and another, and still another, each with its burthen of 900 tons, and each demanding from the railways its competitive number of 45 trains, so that with four tows of fifteen barges following close upon each other, no less than 180 locomotive engines, and 3,600 cars would be needed to compete with them.

It has been shown that the Trent Valley Canal is eight feet four inches deep, so barges can be built as to carry 25,000 bushels each. Therefore it would require 576 locomotive engines and 5,050 cars to carry the same quantity of grain that four tows of fifteen barges can bring to Montreal.

COMPARATIVE COST OF TRAIN AND BARGE.

A train of twenty cars can be hardly set down as representing a smaller capital than $30,000, so that 45 trains of 20 cars each would cost $1,350,000, in order to oppose a tow of 15 barges that would cost but $100,000. The 45 trains would cost more than 13 times what the tow of 15 barges would.

Before we conclude we had better describe what the harbour at Trenton is like in connection with transportation facilities.

The harbour above the bridge is within the River Trent, over 1,000 feet wide, and is on the same level with the Bay of Quinte—indeed, a continuation thereof, and one and a half miles long between the bridge and Indian Island, where the proposed terminus of the Trent Valley Canal is to be, affording unlimited room for wharfage and dockage on both sides of the river. The average depth of the channel there is 17 to 19 feet. Owing to the great depth of the harbour or river above the bridge a steamer can turn easily by her own steam and also anchor in the harbour.

Such unlimited room for wharfage may also be had below the bridge. Indeed, the town of Trenton owns 22 acres of shoal running parallel with the shore about a half mile long—on a line with the wharves already built there. The town of Trenton is ready to give any quantity of land or shoal required for wharfage for nothing.

Even the Bay of Quinte may be said to be a land-locked harbour extending 60 miles long from Trenton to the St. Lawrence.

This route is completely sheltered and free from danger.

SOME HAPPENINGS IN THE NORTHERN TOWN.

Personal Mention and Other Items of Interest at Lakefield.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Harry Sherin and Master Plater have returned from Toronto, where they spent a couple of weeks.

Mr. J. Moffat spent Easter Sunday visiting his parents in Port Hope.

Mr. S. W. Hilliard is spending the week visiting friends in Toronto.

Masters G. Hilliard and Frank DelaFosse, of Trinity College School Port Hope, are spending their vacation with their parents in the village.

Miss McGorman is spending the week with her parents at Brighton.

Miss Stephenson is in Meaford spending her vacation with her parents.

Miss Alice Sherin, of Barrie, is home for Easter week.

Mr. Newman, of Ridgetown, arrived in Lakefield Monday to take a position on the staff of the Traders' Bank here.

Mrs. E. A. Tanner and Miss Tanner are spending a couple of days in Peterborough, visiting friends.

Mr. John Strickland, of the Traders' Bank, Ridgetown, is spending a few days in the village.

Mr. F. A. Kilbourn returned on Monday from a business trip along the front. Mr. Kilbourn reports an increasing demand for the Monarch brand of cement.

Miss Davidson of Toronto, who has been the guest of Mrs. R. P. Davidson for the past couple of weeks, has returned to her home.

Mr. L. Davidson of Toronto, is spending a couple of days with his brother, Mr. R. P. Davidson.

Mr. George Strickland of the Ontario Bank Staff, Peterborough, is spending a few days in the village this week.

Clementi Lodge, A. F. and A. M. met in their Lodge Rooms on Tuesday evening, April 5th.

Mr. Airriess, merchant of Apsley, is in the village this week, making his spring purchases.

Lakefield is doing a good deal of shipping this spring, and if business keeps up the receipts of the Grand Trunk will exceed last year, which were ahead of any previous year by $13,000. This surely speaks well for Lakefield's prosperity.

Confide in a Woman

How Women Act While Consulting a Male Physician.

A woman is sick; some disease peculiar to her sex is fast developing in her system. She goes to her family physician and tells him her story, but not the whole story. She holds something back, loses her head, becomes agitated, forgets what she wants to say, and finally conceals what she ought to have told, and thus completely mystifies the doctor. Is it any wonder, therefore, that the doctor fails to cure the disease? Still, we cannot blame the woman, for it is very embarrassing to detail some of the symptoms of her suffering, even to her family physician. It was for this reason that years ago Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham determined to step in and help her sex. Having had considerable experience in treating female ills with her Vegetable Compound, she encouraged the women of America to write to her for advice in regard to their complaints, and being a woman, it was easy for her ailing sisters to pour into her ears every detail of their suffering. In this way was able to do for them what the physicians were unable to do, simply because she had the proper information to work upon, and from the little group of women who sought her advice years ago, a great army of her fellow beings are to-day constantly applying for advice and relief, and during the last year many, many thousands every month have written and received valuable advice and help. Nowhere except at Lydia E. Pinkham's laboratory in Lynn is there such an amount of information at hand to assist in the treatment of all kinds of female ills, from the simplest local irritation to the most complicated diseases of the womb. The records of all the many hundreds of thousands of cases as to whic hadvice has been asked are there kept on file by Mrs. Pinkham, and from this vast experience she is able to do more than the family physician for ailing women. Any woman, therefore, is responsible for her own suffering who will not take the trouble to write to Mrs. Pinkham for advice. The testimonials which we are constantly publishing from grateful women establish beyond a doubt the power of LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND to conquer female diseases.

Mrs. Pinkham, in Lynn, Mass.,

PILLS AND PILES.

A prolific cause of piles is the use of cathartics and pills of a drastic, violent nature.

Followed by a reaction on account of the resinous, drying properties they contain.

There are other causes, but no matter what the cause or what the kind of piles, Dr. Leonhardt's Hem-Roid can be regied upon to cure—to stay cured.

It's an internal remedy that removes the causes of itching, blind, bleeding or suppurating Piles.

A guarantee goes with each package containing a month's treatment.

It can be obtained for one dollar at James Lynch's, druggist, No. 166 Hunter street, Peterborough.

Knapp the Roller.

Prescott, April 7.—A. F. Knapp, the inventor of the roller boat, will likely start a shipyard here inside of a month. He asks for dockage only and agrees to employ at least forty men within thirty days.

Mr. Conmee Nominated.

Port Arthur, April 7.—James Conmee was nominated yesterday at the Liberal convention to contest the new riding of Thunder Bay and Rainy River.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at last one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

McPherson & McGregor

(Successors to the F. R. J. McPherson Co.)

Take this opportunity of thanking the public for the very liberal patronage accorded the late firm. Trade has been so satisfactory that Mr McGregor decided to increase his interest in the business and, as a consequence, the firm will be known hereafter as McPHERSON & McGREGOR.

Our specialties are:—

Sanitary Plumbing
Sanitary Ventilating
Steam and Hot Water Heating
Electrical Wiring and Supplies

We wish to draw the attention of the public to a few of the many complimentary testimonials received by Mr. McGregor for the high quality of the work he has installed in Plumbing and Heating:—

From the Firm of Bennet & Wright, Plumbing, Heating and Electrical Contractors, Toronto.

This is to certify that Duncan McGregor has been in our employment steady for about fifteen years and during that time we have found him to be steady, honest and trustworthy. He has given every satisfaction as a practical mechanic in each of the following branches: Plumbing, steam and gas fitting, also electrical and conduit work, and for some time has had charge of some of our largest contracts with satisfactory results.

From Illsley & Horn, General Contractors, Toronto.

The bearer, Mr. Duncan McGregor, had charge of the electric wiring at the King Edward Hotel Building. The job was a large and complicated one and by the way Mr. McGregor handled the work he proved himself a mechanic of more than ordinary ability. We unhesitatingly recommend him as a first class mechanic to anyone needing his services.

From Mr. J. Ross Robertson, of the Evening Telegram.

Mr. Duncan McGregor, who has been connected with the Bennet & Wright Co. for some years, and who has superintended the work of plumbing and heating for the Bennet & Wright Co., is not only in my opinion, but also that of my architect, a fully competent mechanic. His work, my architect informs me, has been most satisfactory. Any thing that has come under my own supervision has been likewise satisfactory.

An Extract Taken from the June Number of Domestic Engineering.

During the recent convention of the Canadian Electrical Association held in the King Edward Hotel, a thorough examination was made of all the electrical work in the hotel, and it was pronounced second to none on the continent. Therefore, great credit is due Mr. Duncan MacGregor, who superintended the entire conduit, electrical and power system for the firm of Bennet & Wright, of this city, who were the contractors for all the different branches of the electrical work in the new hotel.

LICENSED THE CHINAMEN.

Victoria Has a Scandal on Its Hands and Trouble Looms Up.

Victoria, B.C., April 8.—Evidence of gross municipal corruption was disclosed in the judgment of Police Magistrate Hall regarding the granting of licenses to Chinamen to sell whiskey. He found that ex-Mayor McCandless had granted licenses to forty Chinamen at $5 each to sell whiskey to white men. The licenses for a white man to sell whiskey in this city is $300. A thorough investigation is to be made into the matter. The Victoria Licensed Victuallers' Association have determined to sue ex-Mayor McCandless and the late council to recover heavy damages for every gallon of whiskey sold under the licenses now declared null and void by Police Magistrate Hall. The aggregate sum runs into many thousands of dollars.

A Mother's Recommendation

I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for a number of years, and have no hesitancy in saying that it is the best remedy for coughs, colds, and croup that I have ever used in my family. I have not words to express my confidence in this remedy. Mrs. J. A. Moore, North Star, Mich. For sale by all druggists.

If you Pity a Sick Friend

Tell Me His Name. Let Me Help Him

Just write a postal card—only the cost of a penny. All I ask is the name of a friend who needs help. Tell me the book to send.

Then I will do this:—I will arrange with a druggist near him so that he may take six bottles Dr. Shoop's Restorative. He make take it a month at my risk. If it succeeds, the cost is $5 50 If it fails, I will pay the druggist myself. And the sick one's mere word shall decide it.

Don't think that too fair to be possible, for I do just as I say. I do it to convince those who don't know me, and so that everyone who needs help will accept it.

I have learned that the cured ones are fair. I have furnished my Restorative to hundreds of thousands on just those terms, and 39 out of each 40 have paid gladly, because they were cured. I have willingly paid for the rest.

And if I spent a lifetime in perfecting the remedy before I ever offered it to anyone. At thousands of bedsides, in hospitals and homes, I have watched it cure the most difficult cases that physicians ever meet. I learned that it does not fail, save where some cause—like cancer—makes a cure impossible.

My success comes from strengthening the inside nerves. My restorative brings back the nerve power which alone operates every vital organ of the body. Common treatments merely doctor the organs, and the results are but temporary. My remedy restores the nerve power that makes these organs act. No other treatment does that, and there is positively no other way to make weak vital organs well.

My book will explain this. It tells about the only remedy so sure that any man dare offer it on such a plan as mine. Won't you tell me a friend who needs it?

DEED OF A MANIAC.

Awful Experience of Johnnie Chambers at Port Robinson.

Welland, April 8.—Officer McHattie of the Ontario Police Force, Niagara Falls, is investigating into the outrage perpetrated upon little John Chambers at Port Robinson. The affair is as yet shrouded in mystery, but is supposed to have been the act of a maniac.

The little fellow has recovered from the shock of the incident, though he underwent an awful experience. He says that the unknown man sprang on him while he was collecting kindling wood, only 30 feet from the house.

He was carried to the apple tree, 500 yards away, the dog following and snapping at the man's heels, where one arm was thrust into a hole in the trunk and out another one lower down, leaving the boy hanging helpless. The boy's body was then stripped. Two hours later the dog-lead rescuers to the spot.

THEY ACTUALLY DO THE WORK.

Food Eaten is Worthless Unless Digested Some Stomachs Must Have Help.

Food taken into the stomach, which, from the nature of the food or the condition of the stomach, is not digested, is worse than no food at all. This is a true statement as far as it goes, and a great many dyspeptics go only this far with their reasoning. They argue with themselves that because their stomachs do not do the work given them, they must be given less work; in other words they must be starved. It would be just as sensible for a business man who is unable to do all his own work to cut down his business to his own capacity as it is for a man to starve himself to relieve his stomach. The sensible business man employs help and goes forward with his business. Likewise the sensible dyspeptic will employ help for his stomach and give his body proper nourishment.

Stuart's Dyspeptic Tablets actually do the work assigned to them. They relieve weak and overburdened stomachs of a great portion of digestive action. Their component parts are identical with those of the digestive fluids and secretions of the stomach and they simply take up the grind and carry on the work just the same as a good strong, healthy stomach would do it.

On this account Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are perfectly natural in their action and effects. They do not cause any unnatural or violent disturbance in the stomach or bowels. They themselves digest the food and supply the system with all the nourishment contained in what is eaten and carry out Nature's plans for the sustenance and maintenance of the body.

How much more sensible is this method than that employed by many sufferers from weak stomachs. By this means the body and brain get all the good nutritious food they need and the man is properly nourished and equipped to carry on his work and perform his duties. He could not possibly be in proper working condition by starving himself or employing some new fangled, insufficient food that does not contain enough nutriment for a year-old baby. A strong man doing strong work must be properly fed, and this applies to the brain as well as the body.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, by relieving the stomach of its work, enable it to recuperate and regain its normal health and strength. Nature restores the worn and wasted tissues just as she heals and knits the bones of a broken limb, which is of course not used during the process of repair.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50 cents a box, and they are the one article that the druggist does not try to sell something in the place of that is "just as good." Their unqualified merit and success and the universal demand for them has placed them within the reach of every one.

Gianellis Jury Disagrees.

One Man Fined.

Woodstock, April 8.—John Hatton of Eastwood, on whose premises the cocking main took place last week, was in the police court yesterday, charged with allowing a cock fight to take place on his premises. He pleaded guilty, but claimed that he had no knowledge that he had acted illegally, as he merely rented the place to the promoters of the fight. He was fined $10 and $8.55 costs. The cocks confiscated will be sold by auction on the market on Saturday.

Predicts a Bigger Storm.

London, April 8.—(C.A.P.)—The Edinburgh Scotsman (Liberal-Unionist), analyzing the work of the tariff commission, predicts that the present lull in the fiscal agitation is only the presage of a bigger storm than Chamberlain raised when he opened the tariff campaign at Glasgow in October last.

His Finger Chewed.

Stratford, April 8.—A farmer named Sully, from Nissouri, who gave evidence of cannibalistic tendencies Wednesday, was before the police magistrate yesterday afternoon. He, with several others, were drinking in a hotel bar, and discussing with some animation the subject of wrestling. The defendant, it is claimed, suddenly leaped upon a man to whom he had been talking and bore him to the floor. When they were separated it was seen that the man who had been assailed had a badly lacerated finger. The other man had almost chewed it into a pulp.

Horses Overbalanced Car.

Charlottetown, P.E.I., April 8.—A freight train of the Prince Edward Island Railway, which left here for Georgetown, was wrecked yesterday afternoon. One flat car and two box cars containing seventeen horses, left the rails. All the cars overturned and were badly smashed. The horses were taken out through the roof of the cars cut and bruised, but none fatally injured. The accident is supposed to have been caused by the horses over-balancing the cars rounding a curve.

Scrawny People.

People grow thin, scrawny, pale and weak when the blood is thin and watery. What is needed to round off the angles and fill out the form, is not fat but healthy muscular tissue. By enriching the blood and increasing its nourishing qualities Dr. Chase's Nerve Food adds new flesh and tissue to the body as well as new vigour and energy. You can prove this by noting your increase in weight while using this great food cure.

Killed With a Club.

Halifax, April 8.—Charles White, aged 40, died at the hospital in this city yesterday from injuries received in a row on the south shore railway. Last night Henry Boutillier aged 35, was arrested at St. Margaret's Bay on a warrant charging him with causing White's death. The latter was struck on the head with a club and never spoke afterwards. Boutillier will be brought to the city for trial.

Frank Munro Cremated.

Toronto, April 8.—Alone and intoxicated in a little log cabin which he had himself constructed, Frank Munro, a son of the late John Munro, for many years landing waiter for the port of Toronto, met a horrible death by fire last night. He was about 25 years of age, and was intoxicated when last seen. He was once a prominent figure and lost his position in a local bank through drink.

Incubator Caused Fire.

Ottawa, April 8.—Fire destroyed part of the poultry sheds at the Experimental Farm yesterday morning, and consumed a large number of eggs. A few birds were also smothered. The flames started in one of the incubators.

BAZAAR AND NATION TEA A SUCCESS.

Charlotte Street Ladies' Aid met with Gratifying Result.

An Excellent Programme was Rendered A Unique Feature of the Evening Nearly a Conflagration.

The Bazaar and Nation Tea given last night by the Ladies' Aid of Charlotte street church in the Sunday School room was a great success from every standpoint. The attendance was large enough to ensure a most satisfactory financial outcome, and the quality of the evening's entertainment was sufficiently meritorious to please all who were present, and in it the Society sustained its reputation for conducting successful entertainments.

The Bazaar, which opened in the afternoon, and which was well patronized, added not a little to the financial success of the affair. An almost endless array of ornamental and useful articles were displayed for sale, and those who attended the bazaar evidently appreciated the good values offered, as nearly all the goods were disposed of before the evening closed. Tea was served from 5 o'clock to 7.30, and constituted perhaps the most unique feature of the day. Different Nations were represented by tables, and the food served at each was characteristic of the Nation represented. The different Nations were: England, Ireland, Scotland, Canada, Japan and the United States. Four waiters at each table were costumed in dress to identify them with the Nation represented. The becoming costumes of the young ladies and gentlemen thus added to the already beautiful scene. Mr. R. N. Jolliffe in a suit in which green was the predominating colour, represented Ireland, while a number of gentlemen were dressed in the red coats of the Canadian soldier. The Japanese table was particularly interesting, and the food served was characteristic of that progressive Nation, rice eaten with chop sticks forming a portion of the menu.

The rooms in which the affair was held were very prettily decorated, and great credit is due the ladies for the evident pains taken to beautify the rooms, and that their work was appreciated was amply evidenced by the many expressions of delight at the beautiful appearance of the interior.

The decorations, however, were almost the cause of a conflagration. Just as the preparations were being made to commence the evening programme a candle came into contact with the tissue paper decorations on an electric light, and the result was an immediate blaze, which, however, was speedily extinguished by the prompt work of a number of the gentlemen present, and by the presence of mind of Rev. Mr. Jolliffe, who immediately called upon all to be calm, as there was no danger. This had the desired effect, and the panic which was at first threatened was happily averted. Order was soon restored and the excellent programme proceeded with.

Rev. Mr. Jolliffe, the pastor, occupied the chair during the rendition of the programme, which was of a high order of merit, opening with a piano duet given by Misses Gumpricht and Tully, in which the truly artistic musical abilities of the two young lady artists were given evidence to. This was followed by a vocal solo given by Mrs. C. B. McAllister, in the rendition of which she was enthusiastically encored, and to which she responded gracefully. Mrs. McAllister's number was an exceedingly pleasing part of the programme. A selection by the Male Quartette was the next number, and was an enjoyable feature. Miss Moore gave a vocal solo, which appealed to the audience, and in which she was exceedingly well received. This was followed by a solo by Mr. R. N. Jolliffe, who, as usual, was encored. Miss Kendry was next heard in a solo, and her pleasing soprano voice was heard to good advantage in her selection. Mr. Brimlinger followed with a vocal solo, rendered in a manner which received the warm approval of the audience. A duet by Miss Clara Belleghem and Mr. R. N. Jolliffe proved a most enjoyable number. The programme concluded with the Canadian hymn, "The Maple Leaf," rendered by the choir.

BERTRAM-CAMERON WEDDING CELEBRATED.

Former Peterborough Man Married in Toronto Yesterday.

The following account of the wedding of Mr. Melville Bertram, son of Mr. John Bertram, formerly of Peterborough, will be read with interest by Examiner readers, as the groom was well known here:—

"The Bloor street Presbyterian church was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Thursday afternoon at half past two o'clock, when Miss Ruth Helen Cameron, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. K. Cameron, was united in marriage to Mr. Melville Bertram. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Wallace, assisted by Rev. M. Tait of Claremont.

"The bride, who entered the church on the arm of her father, was attired in a gown of white satin, entirely covered with Luxeuil lace. On her hair was a tiara of orange blossoms, covered with a tulle veil, and she carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley with long satin streams. Miss Alice Skinner and Miss Gladys Cameron, attended as bridesmaids, gowned in white mousseline de soie, and mounted over taffetas. White chiffon picture hats sprayed with lilies of the valley with long satin streamers, were worn. The flower girls were little Miss Madeline and Miss Kathleen Trotter, and they wore dainty costumes of white Swiss batiste lace insertion, with large white poke bonnets, and carried baskets of sweet peas. The bridegroom was accompanied by Mr. Norman Mather, as best man. The ushers were Mr. G. o. Bertram, of New York, Mr. George Harmon, of Pittsburg; Mr. H. Ross, of Vancouver; and Mr. Frank Brown of Galt.

"Among those invited were: Mr. and Mrs. Tom Bertram, Mr. and Mrs. J. Cameron, (London), Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bertram, Mr. and Mrs. Cameron Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Richard A. Handel, Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Patterson, Miss Shaw, the Misses Harwood, Miss Stone, Miss Mamy Stone, Mr. and Mrs. P. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Warwick, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Irving, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Warwick, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Pipp, Mr. Atwell Fleming, Mr. G. S. Bastedo. After a reception at the residence of the bride's parents in Markham street, where a large number of guests were present, the newly married couple left for Old Point Comfort to spend the honeymoon. The bride travelled in a smart coat and skirt of green slashed with blue with hat to match.

BAD ACCIDENT AT MILLBROOK.

Mr. J. A. Tait, of Centreville, had His Foot Taken off.

The Millbrook Reporter says: A most distressing accident took place at the G.T.R. station here on Tuesday, while our Manitoba settlers were loading up for the West. Mr. John Tait of Centreville, who was assisting his friends and old neighbours to get away, was helping to drive a cow into a car, and while thus engaged instructions were given from the opposite side of the car to the engineer to move up. This was done, and Mr. Tait's foot was caught between the gangway and the door-frame, and tore almost off, the bones protruding through the flesh. Dr. Turner was sent for and decided that the foot would have to come off. Mr. Tait was taken home and the foot afterwards amputated just above the ankle. It is indeed a severe blow to Mr. Tait to be thus maimed for life, his fine erect bearing being always so noticeable wherever he went. As president of the East Durham Agricultural Society he has always taken a deep interest in that organization, from which it is to be hoped that he will only be absent for a brief period. Just as spring is opening up it comes with double hardship. The sincere hope of all is that Mr. Tait may soon be in and out amongst us again.

LAST TALK TO BOYS.

Y.M.C.A. Hall to-night 7.30 p.m. Lantern views and special music.

MR. D. A. GORDON AN ENTHUSIAST.

On the Subject of Beet Sugar and its Manufacture.

Sees a Bright Future for the Industry in Canada. Farmers Anxious to Grow the Beets.

Mr. D. A. Gordon, of Wallaceburg, the Liberal Candidate for West Kent for the House of Commons, and President of the Wallaceburg Sugar Company, is in town to-day, returning from Ottawa, where he spent yesterday, as he smilingly remarked "on a pleasure trip." This afternoon Mr. Gordon is meeting the Council in Committee of the Whole with reference to the proposition made by him at the Council meeting held on Wednesday night.

Mr. Gordon is a gentleman who is well informed on the subject of beet sugar, and talked most interestingly on the question to the Examiner this morning. Speaking of the Wallaceburg factory, with which he is prominently identified, Mr. Gordon said that the last season had been a most satisfactory one. While he was unable to give exact figures, he thought the output would be in the neighbourhood of 8 or 9 million pounds, almost double that of the preceeding year. When asked whether he attached any importance upon the failure of the Wiarton factory, Mr. Gordon said that it was but an inevitable result of the gross mismanagement and incompetence which had characterized the factory from its inception. No practical man had ever looked for it to succeed, and he was not at all surprised that the looked-for failure had been experienced. Mr. Gordon said that it would only be a matter of a short time before the farmers throughout the country would universally recognize that it was to their advantage to grow sugar beets. The experience of his Company had been that the farmers after the first year's trial were doubling up their acreage in beets.

The sugar manufactured in his factory was sold entirely to retailers, because of some little difficulty that had been experienced with the wholesalers. They now had their own travellers on the road, and the result was most satisfactory.

Mr. Gordon left for the west on the 5.10 C.P.R. train.

PROGRAMME GOT MUCH APPLAUSE.

The Concert Given in S. O. E. Hall Last Night by Chosen Friends.

The programme at the concert given last night in the Sons of England Hall by the Canadian Order of Chosen Friends, received warm applause although the attendance, owing to counter attractions, was not large. Mr. Robert McGill occupied the chair, and the first number on the programme was a recitation by Miss Smith, which was well received. Mr. Carnegie, the popular entertainer, next introduced some miscellaneous views, which were of a high order. After Miss Smith had given another recitation, Mr. R. E. Harding briefly outlined the objects of the Society.

The main part of the entertainment, was then introduced, being a pictorial reproduction of the book "In His Steps." The stereoptican views were excellent and were fully explained by Mr. Carnegie. At the conclusion of the entertainment Mr. John Miller sang "The Holy City," which was illustrated by views, after which the entertainment closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

MARMORA MINES RICH IN METAL.

Mines at Cordova Will Soon Open Again —Excellent Prospects.

(Lindsay Watchman-Warder)

Mr. Arthur Reid, of Marmora, was in town the other day and talked to the Watchman-Warder about the mines and mining prospects of this section of the province.

"There is no doubt but that there are very rich gold deposits over there" said Mr. Reid. "The Cordova Exploration Company of Spain owns the chief mines. Their biggest ones are the Cordova and Delora mines. They are both closed down now; but merely while the manager is away to Europe. On his return it is intended to block out a lot of ore and run at full blast."

"I have seen big blocks of quartz come out of these mines speckled thickly with free gold. The last day and a half the mills ran $1,500 was cleaned up. The company is delighted with the property, but it is a very wealthy concern with big enterprises elsewhere, and is in no hurry about the Marmora property.

"The chief reason for closing down was that the fine new machinery was installed before the underground work had been far enough advanced. You know that, until large quantities of ore have been 'blocked out' enough cannot be got to the surface to keep a mill going. By 'blocking out' is meant tunneling around blocks so that the blasts will be effective. A block that has been dug around will blast out ten times as fast as the solid walls of a shaft. That tunneling process had not been done sufficiently before the 30-stamp mill was completed and for lack of ore at the surface, the mines had to be closed; but when the underground work is completed they will open up again."

TEACHER'S SERVICES WERE APPRECIATED.

Presentation to Miss Weir, Who Leaves Port Hope to Fill Position Here.

New Teacher in Collegiate Institute Highly Respected in Port Hope An Address by Her Former Pupils.

The teachers and pupils of the Port Hope High School gathered together last Friday afternoon in Form III B. to bid farewell to Miss Weir, who has resigned her position as teacher to take a position on the staff of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute.

Mr Kirkconnell, speaking for himself and staff said he was very sorry to see Miss Weir leave. He knew of no better teacher to work with and her assistance was always given cheerfully and satisfactorily. During her seven years' teaching in the school she never wearied of helping anyone who needed help and it was felt that she could not be allowed to leave without some mark of appreciation being given of her good work.

Miss Weir was then presented with a handsome, ebony, silver mounted toilet set and a crescent of pearls Mr. Aubrey Pengelley made the presentation on behalf of the school and Mr. Peter McCaffrey read the following address:

Dear Miss Weir: We have met this afternoon to say good-bye, and we find it the hardest task you have ever set us.

Some of us have been with you daily for several years and cannot realize what the Port Hope High School will be without your presence. Those of us who have been here a shorter time envy the more fortunate students whom you have guided almost through the limits of your department of the school work.

We have been deeply touched by your patience, your kindly interest in us personally, and the unstinted giving of your time and sympathy outside of school hours. If it be any reward, rest assured you have won the devotion of your classes.

We are glad that the promotion you have earned by such faithful services, has come—would that it could have come here!

We wish you happiness and prosperity in your new field, and will learn with interest whatever concerns your welfare. That you may have some tangible token of our feelings towards you, in memory of seven years' faithful work in the High School.

Signed on behalf of the School,

MURIEL READ, HELEN SMALL, LIZZIE MARION BARRETT, EDITH WHITE, HORACE WALLACE, TOM WALSH, HARRY MITCHELL, A. PENGELLY, W. JAMIESON.

Miss Weir, in reply, thanked the school for the beautiful presents and said she would always remember them. If she could move the school and pupils to Peterborough she would be contented. After seven years' teaching she had come to know many pupils. Before she came to Port Hope she did not understand what a Christian Principal really was. She had never had such fair dealing in any other school as she had in Port Hope. Again thanking the pupils and teachers for their gift she sat down amid a hearty outburst of applause.—Times.

INDUCTION SERVICE AT ALL SAINT'S.

Ven. Archdeacon Allen Delivered Charge to Rev. Wm. Major.

Impressive Ceremony Held Last Night—Pleasant Reception in the Basement After the Service.

Rev. Wm. Major, late curate of Trinity Church, Toronto, and the successor of Rev. W. L. Armitage, as rector of All Saints' church, was formally inducted last night. Ven. Archdeacon Allen, of Millbrook, delivering the charge. Rev. S. Clowes Noxon, of Tullamore, Ont., preached the sermon in which he showed the relation which pastor and congregation bore one another. After the service refreshments were served in the basement. Here the new rector was presented with an address. The clergy present made short and appropriate remarks and the pleasant event was brought to a close. Rev. Mr. Major was very highly spoken of last night by the clergy who knew him personally and evidently All Saints' Congregation is to be congratulated on the new rector they have chosen.

Last night at All Saints, in the presence of a large and interested congregation, Ven. Archdeacon Allen of Millbrook, delivered to Rev. Mr. Major, the charge as rector, of that church.

The other clergymen assisting in the induction services were Rev. J. C. Davidson, town, Rural Dean Marsh, Lindsay, Rev. E. R. James, Hastings, Rev. W. L. Armitage, Picton, Rev. S. Clowes Noxon, Tullamore, and Rev. W. H. H. Sparks.

Notwithstanding the solemnity of the services an atmosphere of gladness seemed to pervade the church, and perhaps after all the occasion was one that warranted such a feeling.

At the conclusion of the service a reception was tendered the new rector in the basement of the church. Short and appropriate speeches were delivered, cake and coffee served at the conclusion of that, and a most enjoyable time spent.

After the opening hymn, Ven. Archdeacon Allen arose and said:—"Brethren, we are here assembled together to induct the Rev. William Major as rector of this Parish, he having already been instituted by the Bishop to the cure of our souls."

In reply to this Rev. Mr. Major read aloud his declaration of assent, accepting the offered charge.

After this Rev. J. C. Davidson read the mandate of induction from the Bishop, following which Ven. Archdeacon Allen said, "In the name and on behalf of this parish, and in obedience to the Mandate of the Lord Bishop of this Diocese, we to now induct you into the real, actual and corporal possession of the incumbency of the said Parish, and of all rights, privileges and emoluments thereto pertaining, and in token thereof we give into your hands the keys of this church." Here one of the church wardens stepped forward and delivered the keys of the church into the hands of the new rector.

In reply Mr. Major said:—"I receive these keys of the house of God at your hands as the pledge of my induction, and of your reception of me as your appointed minister. And I on my part do promise by God's help to be a faithful Shepherd over you, in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost."

Handing to Rev. Mr. Major the Bible and the Book of Common Prayer, Ven. Archdeacon Allen said, "Receive these books and let them be the rule of thy conduct in dispensing God's Holy Word, in leading the devotions of the people, in administering the Sacraments of Christ, and in exercising the discipline of the church. And be thou in all things a pattern to the flock committed to thy care."

Then followed the Psalms and Lessons and afterwards the Collect for the day.

Rev. S. Clowes Noxon preached the sermon, his text being, "And I shall set up shepherds over them, which shall feed them, and they shall fear no more, neither shall they be lacking, saith the Lord." Jeremiah 23, 4th verse. In his opening remarks Rev. Mr. Noxon said that the text lent itself very readily to the present occasion. It speaks of a shepherd over sheep, and we are met here when a shepherd is being set up over a flock. Speaking of the Shepherd the preacher said that God Himself sets up the shepherd over the sheep, or in other words it is God who calls a man to preach, and He calls him to preach to a particular people God's work is a spiritual work, and if the pastor is to tend God's flock in God's way he must first hear God's voice and understand His speech. The preacher attributed so much future in the church to the fact that many are man called, not God called. God understands His people. He understands all the conditions surrounding them and for the carrying out of His plan, which is blessing to the shepherd, and blessing to the sheep, there is need of prayer. The speaker also touched on the need of prayer for the chief shepherd of this diocese, the Lord Bishop, whose very seal was set to the call of the new pastor. Secondly, he continued, the pastor has to feed his flock. He is bidden to feed God's sheep with God's Word, and to do that he must first taste of that food, and to do that he must be a man of the spirit. The Bible is his spiritual storehouse from which he must take his store of food. No matter if he is a B.A., if he is not endowed with the spirit he will only get the husk and miss the kernel. A pastor must thus be a man of the spirit. This called pastor will have to have personal supervision over the individual. He is set up over this flock and he is responsible regarding its spiritual welfare. For this the people are important as well. The sheep must be willing to be fed and willing to be watched over. For without their hearty co-operation the pastor can do nothing. Summing up his foregoing remarks the speaker said that the pastor was called to the flock, to feed them, and to watch over them. Thus the flock played just as an important part as the pastor and if they were not willing his labours would be useless. Continuing the speaker mentioned a few kinds of food as he called them, which are distasteful to the flock. They dislike, he said, to hear of Christ, they dislike Bible study and they dislike prayer. The busy pastor, he continued, must multiply himself. He cannot do everything. There are people who can help in some things and be the better for doing them. So he must be assurred of this people's co-operation in this regard. Often the wheel of the parish machinery is stopped by a grain of mere nonsense. This should not be, and would not happen if the people resolved to work in harmony with their pastor. In conclusion he hoped that the best of harmony would exist between the new pastor and his congregation and he wished God's blessing on both.

The service concluded with the benediction pronounced by Rev. Wm. Major.

THE NEW RECTOR A STRONG PREACHER.

His Past Record Has Been One of a Series of Success.

Rev. William Major, who was inducted to the Rectorship of All Saint's church last night is recognized as one of the strongest preachers in the English Church in Canada. His past record has been one of successes, and his acceptance of the Rectorship of All Saint's is considered as an exceedingly fortunate circumstance for the church and parish.

Rev. Mr. Major is a native of England, and received his early literary training in the old land, and his theological training in Wycliffe College, in which institution his record was an exceedingly brilliant one, taking honours in a number of subjects. He graduated from this College in 1896, and was ordained on Trinity Sunday of the same year in St. Alban's Cathedral, Toronto. He was licensed to Gore's Landing, where he remained until 1897, when he was transferred to Cannington and Beaverton. Here he remained almost six years, and this ministry was highly successful. By his genial disposition, integrity of life and his strong pulpit qualifications he endeared himself to his parishioners, who felt keenly the loss sustained by his departure in July 1903 for Toronto, where he was made assistant to the late Canon Sanson, of Trinity Church.

A largely signed petition was presented asking that Rev. Mr. Major accept the Rectorship of that church, but he felt called to All Saint's, and acceded to the unanimously expressed wish that he should be their Rector, and received this appointment from the Bishop on March 5th, 1904.

THE JAP. SILK WAIST

is very strong this year. Our stock is very dainty and complete.

Already he has proved himself a capable Rector, and the parishoners are to be congratulated upon securing such a worthy successor to their former successful Rector. He is very musically inclined, and takes a deep interest in all departments of church enterprise. With the young people, of whom there are many in the church, he is a general favourite, and with all classes of the rapidly growing church he is very popular, and enters upon his work with the hearty co-operation of every member of his church.

RECEPTION GIVEN IN THE BASEMENT.

The New Rector Presented with an Address Short Speeches Given.

At the reception held in the basement at the conclusion of the induction service a very large number of the congregation were present. Mr. J. H. McClellan presided, and there were on the platform Ven. Archdeacon Allen, Rural Dean Marsh, Rev. Mr. James, Rev. W. L. Armitage, Rev. S. C. Noxon, Rev. Dr. Torrance, and Rev. J. A. Wilson, of St. Paul's church, and the wardens.

Mr. McClellan announced that no special programme had been arranged, but he was going to ask the clergymen present to give short addresses. He first called upon Ven. Archdeacon Allen, who said that they were gathered on a very important occasion, the celebration of the marriage of the rector to his people. The success of the pastor, he said, very much depended on the co-operation of the people. Speaking of Mr. Major, he believed him to be efficient, industrious and energetic in his calling. Rev. Mr. Major was fortunate in succeeding an industrious and painstaking man, and the record of his pastorate should be a stimulus for him in his work. You hail, Mr. Major, with joy, and I feel that the joy will be justified, yet while you hail with joy Mr. Major, you should not forget those who laboured before, those who wrought this parish. I speak of Mr. Armitage and Mr. Davidson, (applause.) No one will fail to admire the energy, zeal and hard work which has always characterized the life of Mr. Davidson in his work in Peterborough, and so again it should be a stimulus for Mr. Major in his work. It should strengthen his hands in the work he was engaged in: Let the men and women work with him and he will rise from a Major to a Colonel in the army of servants of God.

Mr. Jas. Edgar, one of the newly appointed church wardens, then read the following address:—

To Rev. Wm. Major, Rector of All Saints', Peterborough.—

Reverend and Dear Sir: The congregation of All Saints' church extends to you and your esteemed wife most hearty greetings and a cordial welcome to your new field of labour, and they trust that for many years to come you will be spared to the duties of rector of the parish.

Leaving, as you have, city duties and associations we recognize that in answering our call you have made material sacrifices. We trust that such will be cheerfully rendered by the members of your church.

We know that this parish will grow and broaden. Its past history has shown this. In united work, both to advance the spiritual life of the church and its temporal objects, we shall, jointly with you, find the reward accorded those who diligently do the Master's work. As the interests of the church advance your responsibilities will increase and it will be our duty, as it shall be our pleasure to share in these and to make your life amongst us agreeable and happy.

We feel that we may safely rest in your hands the interest of All Saints' church. We know that in all relations of the member to his church we may rely on you for advice and guidance and our earnest hope is that as the years roll on you may be enabled to feel and say that in all attributes of the church, its work and people, that the lines have indeed fallen to you in pleasant places.

On behalf of the congregation of All Saints'.

Respectfully and obediently,
JAS. MULHOLLAND,
JAS. EDGAR.

In reply Mr. Major expressed profound surprise. The document which he would always treasure, contained many nice things regarding him, and he trusted that the congregation would find them true. "But I must say," he continued, "a great deal depends on you. You must sustain me with your prayers, which must be sincere and constant. My position is one of great responsibility, and one which almost weighs me down, and as I try to realize my opportunities here, I feel that my success will depend to a large degree on your co-operation. I hope the time will never come when All Saints congregation will be severed from its rector." In conclusion he again expressed thanks for the many kindnesses he had received while here.

The next speaker called upon was the old rector, Rev. W. L. Armitage, who was greeted with great applause on rising. He said that a large number of people had said that it was very natural to see him there that night. But, he said, times have changed. The temporal head is a "Major," I am not "natural," but "minor." Continuing he spoke of the new rector and sincerely hoped the affairs of the parish would go along satisfactorily. He thanked the chairman and Archdeacon Allen for their kind remarks regarding himself and went on to assure Mr. Major that he would have support in this work which he did not at present realize. Passing on Mr. Armitage said that he liked Picton and had been encouraged beyond all expectations in every department of the work.

Rev. Mr. James, of Hastings, who spoke next, said that he had known Mr. Major for six years, and had always heard good accounts of him on every side. People were proud to point to him and say "There is our Rector." Continuing he said that it was so easy to find fault with our clergymen; some people made it their bounden duty to put a false construction on every action and word of a pastor. He hoped this would not exist in All Saint's parish, and his formost wish was that harmony would exist.

The chairman then called on Rural Dean Marsh, of Lindsay, who in opening spoke of the loss the Archdeaconry had sustained by Rev. Mr. Armitage's departure. He knew Mr. Major personally and esteemed him highly; and felt sure All Saint's congregation would also like and esteem him. In conclusion he congratulated both congregation and pastor on the marriage which had been consumated that night.

The next speaker was Rev. Dr. Torrance, who said that he had never attended an Anglican induction before last night and had been deeply impressed with the service. On behalf of the other ministers of the town outside the Anglican circle, he extended to Mr. Major a hearty welcome. He hoped Mr. Major would be a member of the Ministerial Association which had suffered a great loss in Mr. Armitage's removal to Picton.

Rev. J. A. Wilson was also called upon for a few words. He said that when he came into the church he felt a stranger but now he felt quite at home among friends. As secretary of the Ministerial Association he reiterated Dr. Torrance's remarks, and in conclusion wished the new pastor and the congregation prosperity.

The next speaker was Rev. W. H. H. Sparks, who spoke of Mr. Major's ability and hoped the best of harmony would exist.

The chairman called upon Mr. Major for a few words. He thanked the speakers for their kind remarks and felt assurred that he and his congregation would work together and reach unthought of hights in success.

The reception was brought to a close by refreshments being served.

A CANADIAN'S CRIME.

St. Catharines' Man Shoots His Wife at Tonawanda—Afterwards He Shoots Himself—Both Will Die.

North Tonawanda, April 7.—One of the most sensational shootings known to the Tonawandas occurred here late yesterday afternoon, when Frank Gibson of St. Catharines, Ont., shot his wife, May Shanton Gibson, and then fired two bullets into his own breast. The shooting took place at the home of Burton Eckers, Gratwick, a suburb of this city, while the Eckers family was eating supper about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

The wounds of both Mr. and Mrs Gibson are considered fatal, the doctors stating last night that both will die. Gibson confessed to the attempted murder and suicide.

Widow at Windsor Murdered.

Windsor, April 7.—Jonathan George was arrested Tuesday evening and charged with the murder of Mrs. Eliza Williams. A more thorough examination of the murdered woman's home reveals evidence against the suspected George. He was Mrs. Williams' tenant, who lived on the adjoining lot, and had in his possession a rent receipt he had received from his landlady. The receipt had on it bloodstains. There were also traces of blood on the door sill of the house occupied by George.

A hatchet was found in the possession of the alleged murderer, the blade of which, in spite of the fact that it had been scoured, contained blood stains. The prisoner, who seems restless and noticeably disturbed, is a colored man about 65 years of age. He is a teamster by occupation.

Resisted Arrest.

Halifax, April 7.—Three commercial travelers, Ben Myers of Montreal, H. P. Wilson of Toronto, and Charles E. Goathman of Montreal, were arrested here yesterday on warrants charging them with setting fire to the Queen's Hotel. Myers and Goathman resisted arrest and they were roughly handled by the police. Wilson proceeded quietly to the station. All three were released on each furnishing $400 bail to appear for examination to-day.

"Texas" Burdell Eluded Police.

London, April 7.—"Texas" Burdell, the burglar, who escaped from the local jail Tuesday, has not yet been located. No trace of the fugitive has been discovered since he plunged into the underbrush on Springbank Hill, west of the city. Every brush heap and strawstack has been carefully searched.

TEACHERS RETAIN LATIN.

But Must Be Cut Down—Teachers Agreed to It.

Toronto, April 7.—The great struggle over the retention or rejection of Latin in the junior course for teachers was brought to an issue last night by the General Association of the Ontario Educationists. The question was brought to a vote on the amendment to the report of the committee of nineteen brought in by the college and high school departments, which proposed the retention of Latin with a reduction of about half the amount of work hitherto set in the course. This amendment was carried by 132 to 65, and other sections having similar amendments withdrew theirs in its favor. An additional amendment was also carried adding physics and chemistry and a modern language to the course but it is understood that the intention is to make the courses to a certain extent optional.

The general meeting in the Convocation hall was presided over by Principal Young, and the election of officers was first taken up. Chancellor Burwash of Victoria was elected president of the general association, and Robert W. Doan and W. J. Hendry were reelected secretary and treasurer.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

To Take Steps to Enter the Dominion of Canada.

Paris, April 7.—It is understood in official circles, in spite of statements to the contrary, that there is foundation for the reports that Newfoundland will take steps to enter the Dominion of Canada as the result of the Anglo-French settlement of the shore and fisheries questions, which heretofore had interfered with Newfoundland's complete sovereignty. The Temps says that Great Britain's gain in Newfoundland is America's loss, declares the United States has been covetous of the French fisheries, and says France had difficulty in making it understood that the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon were not for sale.

The Duke in Ottawa.

Ottawa, April 7.—The Duke of Sutherland, who arrived here Tuesday night, called on Sir Wilfrid Laurier yesterday forenoon. Justice Nesbitt of the Supreme Court entertained the distinguished visitor at luncheon at the Rideau Club. Some of the Ministers of the Crown were present. The name of the Duke has been put forward in certain quarters as the next Governor-General of Canada to succeed Lord Minto. His visit to Canada, however, is in connection with his investments in this country.

Vessel Turned Turtle.

Victoria, B.C., April 7.—The steamer Tees, which has arrived at Clayoquot from Cape Scott on the way to Victoria, brings news of the American three-masted schooner Kiola, which is lying in the sea off Kyoquot, bottom up, and the Indians helping themselves to her lumber cargo. No sign of the Kiola's crew could be seen, and the Indians have heard nothing of them. It is believed the Kiola turned during the recent gale.

The Ottawa Operators Quit.

Toronto, April 7.—The trouble between the G.N.W. and its operators was extended yesterday, when its total staff of 19 men at Ottawa quit work, owing to a local grievance and as a measure of support to the Toronto workers. Yesterday the company brought three men from Montreal, and have, they say, in the neighborhood of 30 operators working.

A Pretty Story of the Queen.

A pretty story of the Queen has just been told. It seems that Her Majesty met a young dressmaker at Marlborough House, who had brought some work for the Princesses. Taking the girl into a room, she carefully examined the work (being herself an exquisite needlewoman), and asked the girl why she had not used a machine instead of doing it all by hand. The girl, who had no idea she was talking to Queen Alexandra, explained that she had an invalid mother to support and was too poor to buy or hire one. The Queen found that her story was true, and at once sent food and wine to the invalid, adding a special Christmas present for the girl of a good sewing machine, which bore the words, "A gift from Alexandra."

Gibraltar's Caves.

The mighty rock of Gibraltar is simply honeycombed with galleries and chambers, some artificial and some natural, which add greatly to its defensive strength, while the large caverns come in extremely useful as storehouses for provisions and munitions of war. During blasting operations recently at the quarry beneath the Monkey's Alameda, a new cavern of surpassing beauty and extent was discovered. The chamber is approximately three hundred and fifty feet long and seventy feet high, with a width of about forty feet. The stalactites and stalagmites in the cave are of extraordinary length and delicacy, some of the former resembling hanging cords. The entrance to the new cave is near the eastern exit of the Rock tunnel.

THE MOVING OF GRAIN

CHANNELS FOR TRANSPORTATION OF CANADIAN CEREALS TO THE SEA.

Removal of the Tolls on the Canadian Canals Has Resulted in a Heavy Movement of Grain Over the Canadian Lake Route and Thence Down the St. Lawrence—Saves Three Cents a Bushel.

The United States Government has published a brochure written by their Consul General, Mr. A. W. Edwards, at Montreal, relating to American exports of grain through Canadian waterways.

The removal of the tolls on the Canadian canals, says Mr. Edwards, has resulted in a heavy movement of grain over the Canadian lake route and thence down the St. Lawrence, as the exporters can now handle corn for 3 cents less a bushel than by the part-lake and part-rail route to Boston. A record of 1,000,000 bushels of corn within five days is the showing that the customs reports make for the amount of grain brought from Chicago to Montreal. The record, which is for the five days previous to August 23, 1903, is more than 200,000 bushels greater than any amount ever handled in a similar period.

The Montreal Board of Trade reports up to August show that during the year 1903, 9,000,000 bushels of wheat and 4,500,000 bushels of corn have passed through the port of Montreal, as against a little more than 1,000,000 bushels of wheat and 4,000,000 bushels of corn shipped from Boston.

The matter has drawn attention to the channels in which Canadian grain at present moves to the seaboard. From a pamphlet compiled by the Northwestern Miller, the information is gleaned that last year there was shipped from the two Canadian Lake Superior ports, Fort William and Port Arthur, 35,525,798 bushels of grain. Of this total, 18,500,654 bushels, or 38 per cent. was shipped to Buffalo and Port Huron, the balance—62 per cent.—going to Canadian ports as follows:

	Bushels.
Owen Sound	1,308,160
Midland	8,316,972
Depot Harbor	3,515,760
Point Edward	192,901
Meaford	972,684
Goderich	2,759,484
Kingston	4,985,176
Total	22,051,140

The following is the grain drawn from Duluth to Canadian ports:

	Bushels.
Owen Sound	102,000
Midland	1,633,000
Depot Harbor	3,591,000
Meaford	1,065,000
Quebec	574,000
Goderich	100,000
Kingston	58,000
Port Sarnia	19,000
Total	7,142,000

In addition there was also handled 813,000 bushels of flaxseed.

Chicago shipped extensively to Canadian ports as follows:

	Bushels.
Montreal	254,000
Depot Harbor	4,691,000
Port Sarnia	2,349,000
Midland	3,707,000
Collingwood	2,366,000
Meaford	186,000
Goderich	271,000
Other Canadian ports	81,000
Total	13,985,000

Altogether these two United States ports (Duluth and Chicago) shipped to Canadian ports 21,129,000 bushels of grain, as compared with 13,500,654 bushels shipped from the two Canadian ports (Port Arthur and Fort William) to American ports. In other words, almost 20 per cent. of the grain crop of the United States shipped by water from these two leading American inland ports passed through Canadian waterways. The routes chosen are of interest, they were:

	Bushels.
Midland	13,736,972
Depot Harbor	11,797,760
Kifigston	5,013,176
Goderich	3,130,484
Port Sarnia	2,368,000
Collingwood	2,366,000
Meaford	2,223,684
Owen Sound	1,410,160
Quebec	574,000
Montreal	254,000
Point Edward	192,904
Other Canadian ports	81,000
Total	43,171,140

These figures show that 48 per cent. of the grain making use of the Canadian water route was grown in the United States.

Of course, not all of these 43,171,140 bushels were exported, as a considerable portion of the Canadian-grown grain was retained for home consumption. The grain exports from Canadian ports were:

	Bushels.
Montreal	19,934,278
St John's	2,311,872
Quebec	1,629,860
Total	23,876,010

The balance of twenty million odd bushels, less home consumption, as well as the twelve million odd bushels of Canadian grain sent into the United States via Buffalo, were exported as follows:

	Bushels.
New York	7,733,993
Boston	6,610,512
Portland	5,896,078
Philadelphia	1,555,938
Baltimore	104,000
Total	21,900,521

There was, therefore, more Canadian grain exported from United States ports than from Canadian—in fact, nearly as much as was exported from Canadian ports of both American and Canadian—and the Canadian grain is a considerable item in the traffic of these American ports. Last year it supplied over 21 per cent. of the grain exports of New York, 40 per cent. of the grain shipments from Boston, and nearly 65 per cent. of the Portland shipments.

It is estimated in the West that the grain acreage of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories is full 20 per cent. above the previous year.

The Great Lakes and St. Lawrence Transportation Co. had last season ten ships in commission between Duluth and Quebec bringing grain from the West. The vessels are the largest carriers on the St. Lawrence canals, being 256 feet long, 41 feet deep, and carrying 2,250 tons each on 14 feet draft of water. These vesels are able to bring grain to Quebec for from 4½ to 6 cents per bushel.

Origin of the British Museum.

An observer recalls the interesting circumstances of the establishment of the British Museum. The funds for the institution were raised by a lottery, which was authorized in 1753 by an act of Parliament, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, and the Speaker being the managers and trustees, each to receive £100 as an honorarium. The amount of the lottery is said to have been a million and a half dollars (£300,000), which was raised by £3 tickets to provide £200,000 for prizes, varying in value from £10,000 to £10, and £100,000 for the purchase of the Museum's nucleus—the Sloane collections and the Harleian Library; also to provide cases for the acquisitions and to meet other expenses. It will be remembered that the lottery became notorious through the activities of a certain Peter Leheup, who shrewdly cornered the tickets and had them sold at a premium. Leheup was afterwards prosecuted for breach of trust and fined £1,000, which could not have troubled him much, as his profits from the deal were £40,000.

A British Consul's Journey.

Mr. C. W. Campbell, British Consul in Wuchow, has written a report on a journey made by him in Mongolia, giving an account of the mode of life in the interior of China. One very peculiar custom is noted. He says he was particular struck by the numbers of pairs of boots hung in separate wooden cages in the archway of the main west gate of Hsuan-Hua, the valedictory gifts of beneficent prefects. It is the custom in China to invite a departing magistrate, whose rule has been popular, to leave a pair of old boots for suspension in a prominent place as a hint to his successor to follow in his footsteps!

Kidney Disease Results From Colds

Exposure of the Back to Drafts not an Infrequent Cause of This Dreadfully Painful Ailment

The kidneys are very susceptible to cold, so much so that a current of cold air on the back is sufficient to cause congestion of these organs.

It is also a very common thing for heavy colds to settle on the kidneys and give to the most complicated diseases.

While teamsters, railroad men and others whose work subjects them to more than ordinary exposure are especially liable to be overtaken by kidney disease, it is also frequent among indoor workers.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are so wonderfully prompt in their action on the kidneys that they are especially valuable in cases of kidney disease which arise from colds.

Backache, highly coloured urine, pain or smarting when passing water, headache, cramps in the legs, constipation alternating with looseness of the bowels, fickle appetite, vomiting and general feelings of discomfort are among the most common symptoms.

The record of cures effected by means of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills has not been equalled in the history of medicine. In the majority of the homes of Canada these pills are always at hand as an indispensable family medicine.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box. 2

CHAPTER XXXI

Had there been a train back to New York that afternoon Wilford would most certainly have suggested going, but as there was none he passed the time as well as he could, finding Bell a great help to him, but wondering that she could assimilate so readily with such people, declaring herself in love with the farm-house, and saying she should like to remain there for weeks, if the days were all as sunny as this, the dahlias as gorgeously bright, and the peaches by the well as delicious and ripe. To these the city girl took readily, visiting them the last thing before retiring, while Wilford found her there when he arose the next morning, her dress and slippers nearly spoiled with the heavy dew, and her hands full of the fresh fruit which Aunt Betsy knocked from the tree with a quilting rod; her dress pinned around her waist, and disclosing a petticoat scrupulously clean, but patched and mended with so many different patterns and colors that the original ground was lost, and none could tell whether it had been red or black buff or blue. Between Aunt Betsy and Bell the most amicable feeling had existed ever since the older lady had told the younger how all the summer long she had been drying fruit, "thimble-berries and huckle-berries" for the soldiers, and how she was now drying peaches for Willard Buxton once their hired man. These she should tie up in a salt bag, and put in the next box sent by the society of which she seemed to be the head and front, kind of fust directress and Bell was interested at once for among the soldiers down by the Potomac was one who carried with him the whole of Bell Cameron's heart, and who for a few days had tarried at last such a dwelling as the farm-house, writing back to her so pleasant descriptions of it, with its fresh grass and shadowy trees, that she had longed to be there to. So it was through this halo of romance and love that Bell looked at the farm-house and its occupants, preferring good Aunt Betsy because she seemed the most interested in the soldiers, working as soon as breakfast was over upon the peaches, and kindly furnishing her best check apron, together with pan and knife for Bell, who offered her assistance, notwithstanding Wilford's warning that the fruit would stain her hands, and his advice that she better be putting up her things for going home.

"She was not going that day," she said, point blank, and as Katy too had asked to stay a little longer, Wilford was compelled to yield, and taking his hat sauntered off toward Linwood; while Katy went listlessly into the kitchen, where Bell Cameron sat, her tongue moving much faster than her hands which pared so slowly and cut away so much of the juicy pulp, besides making so frequent journeys to her mouth, that Aunt Betsy looked in alarm at the rapidly disappearing fruit, wishing to herself that "Miss Camern had not 'listed."

But Miss Camern had enlisted, and so had Bob, or rather he had gone to his duty, and as she worked, she repeated to Helen the particulars of his going, telling how, when the war first broke out, and Sumter was bombarded, Bob, who, from long association with Southern men at West Point, had imbibed many of their ideas, was very sympathetic with the rebelling States, gaining the cognomen of a secessionist, and once actually thinking of casting in his lot with that side rather than the other. But a little incident saved him, she said. The remembrance of a queer old lady whom he met in the cars, and who, at parting held her wrinkled hand above his head in benediction, charging him not to go against the flag, and promising her prayers for his safety, if found on the side of the Union.

"I wish you could hear Bob tell the story, the funny part, I mean," she continued, narrating as well as she could the particulars of Lieutenant Bob's meeting with Aunt Betsy, who, as the story progresses, and she recognized herself in the queer old Yankee woman, who shook hands with the conductor and was going to law about a sheep pasture, dropped her head lower and lower over her pan of peaches, while a scarlet flush spread itself all over her thin face, but changed to a grayish white as Bell concluded with "Bob says the memory of that hand lifted above his head haunted him day and night, during the period of his uncertainty, and was at last the means of saving him from treachery to his country.

"Thank God!" came involuntarily from Aunt Betsy's quivering lips, and, looking up, Bell saw the great tears running down her cheeks, tears which was wiped away with her arm, while she said faintly, "That old woman who made a fool of herself in the cars, was me!"

"You, Miss Barlow, you!" Bell exclaimed, forgetting in her astonishment to carry to her mouth the luscious half peach she had intended for that purpose, and dropping it untasted into the pan, while Katy, who had been listening with considerable interest, came quickly forward saying, "You, Aunt Betsy! when were you in New York, and why did I never know it?"

It could not be kept back and, unmindful of Bell, Helen explained to Katy as well as she could the circumstances of Aunt Betsy's visit to New York the previous winter.

"And she never let me know it, or come to see me, because—because—" Katy hesitated, and looked at Bell, who said, pertly, "Because Will is so abominably proud, and would have made such a fuss. Don't spoil a story for relation's sake, I beg," and the young lady laughed good-humoredly, restoring peace to all save Katy whose face wore a troubled look, and who soon stole away to her mother, whom she questioned further with regard to a circumstance which seemed so mysterious to her.

"Miss Barlow," Bell said, when Katy was gone, "you will forgive me for repeating that story as I did. Of course I had no idea it was you of whom I was talking."

Bell was very earnest, and her eyes looked pleadingly upon Aunt Betsy, who answered her back, "There's nothing to forgive. You only told the truth. I did make an old fool of myself, but if I helped that boy to a right decision, my journey did some good, and I ain't sorry now if I did go to the play-house. I confessed that to the sewing circle, and Mrs Deacon Bannister hain't seemed the same since, but I don't care. I beat her on the election to first directress of the Soldier's Aid. She didn't run half as well as me. That chap—you call Bob—is he anything to you? Is he your beau?"

It was Bell's turn now to blush and then grow white, while Helen, lightly touching the superb diamond on her first finger, said, "That indicates as much. When did it happen, Bell?"

Mrs. Cameron had said they were not a family to bruit their affairs abroad, and if so, Bell was not like her family, for she answered frankly, "Just before he went away. It's a splendid diamond, isn't it?" and she held it up for Helen to inspect.

The basket was empty by this time, and as Aunt Betsy went to fill it from the trees, Bell and Helen were left alone, and the former continued in a low, sad tone, "I've been so sorry sometimes that I did not tell Bob I loved him, when he wished me to so much."

"Not tell him you loved him! How then could you tell him yes, as it appears you did?" Helen asked, and Bell answered, "I could not well help that; it came so sudden and he begged so hard, saying my promise would make him a better man, a better soldier and all that. It was the very night before he went, and so I said that out of pity and patriotism I would give him the promise, and I did, but it seemed too much for a woman to tell a man all at once that she loved him, and I wouldn't do it, but I've been sorry since; oh, so sorry, during the two days when we heard nothing from him after that dreadful battle of Bull Run. We knew he was in it, and I thought I should die until his telegram came saying he was safe. I did sit down then and commence a letter, confessing all, but I tore it up, and he don't know now just how I feel."

"And do you really love him?" Helen asked, puzzled by this strange girl, who laughingly held up her soft, white hand, stained and blackened with the juice of the fruit she had been paring, and said, "Do you suppose I would spoil my hands like that, and incur ma chere mamma's displeasure, if Bob were not in the army and I did not care for him? And now allow me to catechise you. Did Mark Ray ever propose and you refuse him?"

"Never!" and Helen's face grew crimson, while Bell continued: "That is funny. Half our circle think so, though how the impression was first given I do not know. Mother told me, but would not tell where she received the information. I heard of it again in a few days, and have reason to believe that Mrs Banker knows it too, and feels a little uncomfortable that her son should be refused when she considers him worthy of the Empress herself."

Helen was very white as she asked, "And how with Mark and Juno?"

"Oh, there is nothing between them," Bell replied. "Mark has scarcely called on us since he returned from Washington with his regiment. You are certain you never cared for him.

This was so abrupt and Belle's eyes were so searching that Helen grew giddy for a moment and grasped the back of the chair as she replied: "I did not say that I never cared for him. I said he never proposed, and that is true, he never did."

"And if he had?" Bell continued, never taking her eyes from Helen, who, had she been less agitated, would have denied Belle's right to question her so closely. Now, however, she answered blindly, "I do not know; I cannot tell; I thought I engaged to Juno."

"Well, if that is not the rarest game of cross-purposes that I ever knew," Bell said, wiping her hands upon Aunt Betsy's apron, and preparing to attack the piled up basket just brought in.

Further conversation was impossible, and with her mind in a perfect tempest of thought, Helen went away trying to decide what it was best for her to do. Some one had spread the report that she had refused Mark Ray, telling of the refusal of course, or how else could it have been known? and this accounted for Mrs. Banker's long continued silence. Since Helen's return to Silverton Mrs. Banker had written two or three kind, friendly letters, which did her so much good, but these had suddenly ceased, and Helen's last remained unanswered. She saw the reason now, every nerve quivering with pain as she imagined what Mrs. Banker must think of one who could make a refusal public, or what was ten-fold worse, pretend to an offer she never received. "She must despise me, and Mark Ray, too, if he has heard of it," she said, resolving one moment to ask Bell to explain to Mrs. Banker, and then changing her mind and concluding to let matters take their course, inasmuch as interference from her might be construed by the mother into undue interest in the son. "Perhaps Bell will do it without my asking," she thought, and this hope did much toward keeping her spirits up on that last day of Katy's stay at home, for she was going back in the morning.

They did not see Marian Hazelton again, and Katy wondered at it, deciding that in some things Marian was very peculiar, while Wilford and Bell were disappointed, as both had a desire to meet and converse with one who had been so like a second mother to the little dead Genevra. Wilford spoke of his child now as Genevra, but to Katy it was Baby still; and, with choking sobs and passionate tears, she bade good-bye to the little mound underneath which it was lying, and then went back to New York.

CHAPTER XXXII.

Katy was very unhappy in her city home, and the world, as she looked upon it, seemed utterly cheerless. For much of this unhappiness Wilford was himself to blame. After the first few days, during which he was all kindness and devotion, he did not try to comfort her, but seemed irritated that she should mourn so deeply for the child which, but for her indiscretion, might have been living still. He did not like staying at home, and their evenings, when they were alone, passed in gloomy silence. At last Mrs. Cameron brought her influence to bear upon her daughter-in-law, trying to rouse her to something like her olden interest in the world; but all to no effect, and matters grew constantly worse, as Wilford thought Katy unreasonable and selfish, while Katy tried hard not to think him harsh in his judgment of her, and exacting in his requirements. "Perhaps she was the one most in fault; it could not be pleasant for him to see her so entirely changed from what she used to be," she thought, one morning late in November, when her husband had just left her with an angry frown upon his face and reproachful words upon his lips.

Father Cameron and his daughters were out of town, and Mrs. Cameron had asked Wilford and Katy to dine with her. But Katy did not wish to go, and Wilford had left her in anger, saying she could suit herself, but he should go at all events."

Left alone, Katy began to feel that she had done wrong in declining the invitation. Surely she could go there and the echo of the bang with which Wilford had closed the street door was still vibrating in her ear, when her resolution began to give way, and while Wilford was riding moodily down town, thinking harsh things against her, she was meditating what she thought might be an agreeable surprise. She would go 'round and meet him at dinner, trying to appear as much like her old self as she could, and so atone for anything which had hitherto been wrong in her demeanor.

Later in the day Esther was sent for to arrange her mistress's hair, as she had not arranged it since baby died. Wilford had been annoyed by the smooth bands combed so plainly back, and at the blackness of the dress, but now there was a change, and graceful curls fell about the face, giving it the girlish expression which Wilford liked. The soberness of the dark dress was relieved by simple folds of white crape at the throat and wrists, while the handsome jet ornaments, the gift of Wilford's father, added to the style and beauty of the childish figure, which had seldom looked lovelier than when ready and waiting for the carriage. At the door there was a ring, and Esther brought a note to Katy, who read as follows:

Dear Katy: I have been suddenly called to leave the city on business, which will probably detain me for three days or more, and as I must go on the night train, I wish Esther to have my portmanteau ready with whatever I may need for the journey. As I proposed this morning, I shall dine with mother, but come home immediately after dinner.

W. Cameron.

Katy was glad now that she had decided to meet him at his mother's, as the knowing she had pleased him would make the time of his absence more endurable, and after seeing that everything was ready for him she stepped with a comparatively light heart into her carriage, and was driven to No. — Fifth Avenue.

Mrs. Cameron was out, the servant said, but was expected every minute with Mr. Wilford.

"Never mind," Katy answered, "I want to surprise them, so please don't tell them I am here when you let them in," and going into the library she sat down before the grate, waiting rather impatiently until the door-bell rang and heard both Wilford's and Mrs. Cameron's voices in the hall.

Contrary to her expectations, they did not come into the library, but went into the parlor, the door of which was partially ajar, so that every word they said could be distinctly heard where Katy sat. It would seem that they were continuing a conversation which had been interrupted by their arriving home, for Mrs. Cameron said with the tone she always assumed when sympathizing with her son: "Is she never more cheerful than when I have seen her?"

"Never," and Katy could feel just how Wilford's lips shut over his teeth as he said it; "never more cheerful but worse if anything. Why, positively the house seems so like a funeral that I hate to leave the office and go back to it at night, knowing how mopish and gloomy Katy will be."

SUNLIGHT SOAP

With ordinary soap a woman has to work so hard, and so long on wash day she has no time for preparing any of the family meals. Wash day is a trial, and the good wife faces each with a sigh of despair.

Sunlight Soap makes all the difference in the world. No toiling—no rubbing—no boiling—less than half the labor with much better results. Most women are all through their wash by twelve o'clock when they wash with Sunlight Soap the Sunlight way. It makes child's play of work.

An English School Fete.

There is probably no old English custom so rich in interesting memories as the pancake-tossing ceremony of which the hall of Westminster School was recently the scene. The custom, which is known to the boys by the unaesthetic name of "Grease," has an unbroken history which takes us back to the days of Queen Bess, when as many as 300 boys would scramble in one tumultuous heap for the possession of a solitary pancake. Heneage Finch, first Earl of Nottingham, groveled with the rest long years before he subsided into the no less coveted Woolsack. John Dryden, the parson's boy from Northamptonshire, struggled on the floor with young Christopher Wren, and from the crowd of pancake-snatchers in 1743 you might have picked out William Cowper, Warren Hastings and Charles Churchill, all very small boys, to whom the pancake loomed much larger than the laurels they later won. And among the scrambling crowds of other years were John Locke, Charles Longley (destined to be Primate of all England), Edward Gibbon Lord Raglan and many another boy who was to win much greater trophies in the big world outside the school walls.

Then think of the stories those walls could tell had they but tongues. Edward the Confessor watched the building of the arches on which the "school" rests. King John was signing Magna Charta when the very walls which re-echoed the boys' shouts this morning began to rise on the site of the dormitory in which generations of Benedictine monks had slumbered. Boys were learning their lessons in the same hall years before Oliver Cromwell was born, and for three centuries all the classes of Westminster School were held where the pancake was tossed to-day.—Westminster Gazette.

BUY GRAIN ON BREAKS.

For the time being we look for a trader's market. Buy on breaks and take moderate profits. Good authorities say this is only a temporary halt in the advance and are still talking $1.25 for wheat. We have direct private wires to two of the largest firms on the Chicago Board of Trade and can give unexcelled service in wheat, oats or corn.

Business Meeting of Golf Club Held Last Night.

A business meeting of the Peterborough Golf Club was held last evening in the offices of Dennistoun, Peck, Kerr & Stevenson. There was a large attendance and much enthusiasm was displayed. It was decided to sink a well on the property and other improvements were decided upon. The links are practically dry now and will be opened before long. The playing membership is strictly limited to 60 men and 35 ladies. Mr. Robt. Neill, the president, occupied the chair.

MIDLAND FOOTALL LEAGUE EXTENSIONS.

Will Likely Amalgamate with Prince Edward County League.

An evidence of the standing that the Midland Football League has attained in sporting circles is the fact that other leagues are anxious to affiliate with it. A letter was received yesterday from the secretary of the Ontario Association Football League, asking the Midland League to enter into affiliation with it and later in the day in a telephone conversation with Mr. Fred Richardson of Deseronto, it was learned that the Prince Edward County League, composed of teams from Picton, Deseronto, Belleville and Napanee would like to amalgamate with the Midland League. It is quite probable that this amalgamation will be effected, and if so, the League will be greatly strengthened by the addition of the new league. They would form a district of their own and the winners would play off with the winners of the western groups.

As the date for the meeting to arrange the schedule draws near, the interest in the League increases, and it is believed to be quite within the range of probability that the Midland League will be the largest football organization in Ontario.

CAUGHNAWAGAS HAVE ORGANIZED

Football Team in Shape for the Season of 1904.

Hastings, April 5th.—The members and supporters of the Caughnawagna Football Club met at the McNichol House, Norwood, on Wednesday evening, Mar. 30th, and organized for the coming season. It was decided to enter a team in the Midland League and Mr. T. A. Coughlin was appointed a delegate to the convention. The following officers were elected: Patrons and Patronesses, Mr. and Mrs. P. F. McNulty, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Comstock, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Heffernan; Hon. President, W. Heffernan, sr; President, E. Fitzpatrick; 1st Vice-pres. W. J. Sanderson; 2nd Vice-pres. P. Fallon; Sec.-Treas., Chas. McNulty; Captain, T. A. Coughlan; Executive Committee, Alex. Kempt, Jos. Lonergan, Jno. Fallon, M. R. English.

LACROSSE.

FERGUS TO PLAY SENIOR

It was stated to-day that the Fergus Lacrosse Club, for the past two years intermediate C.L.A. champions, had decided to play in the senior series this season.

The Fergus team is complete and it is believed fully strong enough to hold its own in senior company. Norman Kyle, last year with the Tecumsehs, will play with Fergus this season. Fergus earns the right to play in the senior series by reason of winning the intermediate championship; the other clubs could not keep them out if they wanted to.

With Fergus in the running there would be an ideal circuit with three teams in Toronto. The Queen Citys are determined to gain admission to the series and will likely be successful, as they have men of good standing behind the club. The most foolish reasons advanced yet by anybody are that the Chippewas will get the preference because they are Irish and because they offered to put up $500 that they would finish the season. The Queen Citys say they don't want any favors because they are Canadians, but if admitted to the series will live up to the rules of the association in every respect—and what is more, will give every team in the circuit the hottest kind of an argument on the field.—Star.

The lacrosse enthusiasts of Port Hope are having trouble of their own, as the following item from the Guide indicates: There is an individual in this town who might truly be termed a "knocker." Since the proposal to hand the Ontario equipment over to the Trent Valley League team he has been doing all in his power to oppose it. Of course he is not in any way connected with the Ontario Club, and why he should have so much to say is beyond our comprehension. But perhaps his idea is like some other people, that these sticks are to be turned over to the Victorias of the Town League; but this is very wrong. This team, playing under the name of the Victorias, will be composed of the best material available and will be the only team to represent the town. At the organization meeting it was decided that, should the town league teams amalgamate to form the team for the Trent Valley League it should be under the name of the Victorias, this team having held the trophy for the championship of the town league for two years. No doubt if this is where the trouble is, the Vics would play under the name of Ontarios. Anything to keep peace and quietness.

Bowmanville, April 6.—The annual meeting of the Bowmanville Football Club held yesterday was largely attended. The following officers were elected: Hon. Presidents, D. B. Simpson, K.C., Geo. N. Graham; president, Rev. H. Munro, B. A.; first vice-president, H. McCready; second vice-president, Norman Heatley; secretary, Fred C. Vanstone; treasurer, Arthur W. Morris; manager, Wm. Inch; captain, Dr. J. C. Devitt; press correspondent, Fred R. Foley; managing committee, A. Baker, C. W. Slemon, Geo. W. S. James; grounds committee, Chas. Haddy, Chas. LaPlante, Herb. Freeland.

Rev. H. Munro was elected representative to Peterborough to the meeting of the Midland League Association, with Dr. Devitt alternate. Practice will commence next week, and the team will soon be ready to meet all comers.

SPRINTING

The five-mile road race between A. J. Burns and D. Belland is creating considerable interest and both men are finding backers. The event comes off at 2.30 o'clock to-morrow afternoon from the Oriental Hotel for two and a half miles along the Lakefield road. Both runners are in good condition and the race should be a good one.

CRICKET.

Omemee, April 7.—At a meeting held in the Public Library the Omemee Cricket Club was reorganized, with the following officers: President, J. T. Beatty; vice-president, Dr. G. Stewart Cameron; secretary, Jos. Sherwood; treasurer, H. G. Forster; captain, Chas. F. Bent; committee of management, T. C. Stephenson, Wm. Bradburn, Chas. F. Bent, W. G. Stephenson and A. L. Amys.

Much enthusiasm was shown and the prospects are bright for a good season's cricket. Clubs desiring matches should correspond with the secretary.

G. T. PACIFIC DEBATE

Opposition Favor Line West From North Bay.

THEY WOULD AID THE ROAD

Sweeping Statement By Mr. W. B. Northrup—An Able Argument, Giving Legal Interpretation, By Mr. Wade—Mr. Monk and Mr. Demers Also Speak—Mr. Ralph Smith's Union Label Bill.

Ottawa, April 8.—Four speeches measured the progress made in the debate on the ratification of the Grand Trunk Pacific supplementary agreement yesterday. Mr. F. B. Wade, in an argumentative address in which he sustained the high reputation he has gained as a Parliamentary debater, gave a legal interpretation to the various clauses of the agreement, combating the views of the leader of the Opposition. He asserted with emphasis that the amended agreement, while rendering it easier for the Grand Trunk to fulfill its obligations, did not increase by one dollar the obligations of the Dominion or weaken the security the Government retained. Mr. Deniers, the other speaker on the Government side, ridiculed the contention of the Opposition that the eastern section would not be constructed. Mr. F. D. Monk and Mr. W. B. Northrup were the speakers on the Opposition side. A feature of their addresses was the unanimity of opinion regarding the necessity of another trans-continental line, but they differed from the Government as to the route and method of construction. Mr. Northrup declared that his anxiety to have Canadian produce shipped through Canadian ports was not sufficiently strong to ask the farmers of the Northwest to pay extra freight on their wheat for that purpose. Mr. McCreary drew from Mr. Northrup a declaration, sweeping in its significance, that the Opposition were now in favor of assisting the Grand Trunk to build west from North Bay. Mr. Russell moved the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Ralph Smith introduced a bill respecting labor union labels. The measure, he explained, provided for the registration of labor union labels, in order that the trades unions may be protected from infringement of their labels.

The House adjourned at 10.30.

On behalf of the Religious Liberty Association of Canada, Dr. Russell presented a petition asking Parliament "not to pass any legislation in respect to the observance of the first day of the week, that will be in derogation of the rights secured to all His Majesty's subject by the proclamation of Her Majesty Queen Victoria in 1858."

John Holderness No More.

Toronto, April 8.—After twenty-four hours' suffering, from pneumonia, John Holderness, proprietor of the Albion Hotel, corner of King and Jarvis streets, died last night. In September, 1900, Mr. Holderness was stricken with paralysis. He was 65 years old and came to Canada in 1857. He was a prosperous farmer of Bowen township before becoming proprietor of the Black Horse Hotel in 1869. He purchased the Albion in 1879. He was a great horseman and was the first Canadian importer of hackneys and cobs. He is survived by a widow, two daughters—Mrs. A. Patterson and Mrs. Fred. Mossop of Toronto—and one son, William, who resides at the hotel.

Jurisdiction of Ontario.

Ottawa, April 8.—A letter from the Attorney-General of Ontario to the Lord's Day Alliance was read at the triennial convention, which opened in the Y.M.C.A. Hall here yesterday morning. In this letter Mr. Gibson stated that it was the Ontario Government's intention to submit to Hon. Edward Blake for his opinion the question of the extent of provincial jurisdiction in the matter of Sunday observance, having regard to the civil aspect of the various considerations urged and to the recent decision of the Privy Council.

Woman Killed By Trolley.

Toronto, April 8.—While returning home from a visit to the grave of her son at Mount Pleasant, Mrs. Shirley of 336 Lippincott street early yesterday afternoon met with a most tragic and sudden death. She attempted to cross the tracks of the Metropolitan Railway in front of a south-bound suburban car and lost her presence of mind. It was then impossible for the motorman to bring the car to a standstill before striking the unfortunate woman, and she was thrown under the car. When picked up life was extinct.

Power Bill Passed.

Albany, N. Y., April 8.—The Senate yesterday passed the Thompson, Niagara, Lockport & Ontario Power Bill. The bill now goes to Governor Odell for signature or veto, or to die unsigned at the end of thirty days. This is the measure heralded throughout the States as a grab of all available power sites controlled by the State of New York.

Teachers Elect Officers.

Toronto, April 8.—The last day of the Ontario Educational Association was busier than the two previous ones. Eleven of the thirteen sub-sections held meetings. Many papers were read and the sectional officers were elected.

OLD ENGLAND.

Green fields of England! wheresoe'er,
Across this watery waste we fare,
Gone Image at our hearts we bear,
Green fields of England, everywhere.

Sweet eyes in England, I must flee,
Past where the waves' last confines be
Ere your beloved smile I cease to see,
Sweet eyes in England, dear to me.

Dear home in England, safe and fast,
If but in thee my lot be cast,
The past shall seem a nothing past;
To thee, dear home, if won at last;
Dear home in England, won at last.

—Arthur Hugh Clough.

NOTED LONDON CHURCH.

Where Dr. Pigou Preached and British Princes Worshipped.

Passing up Waterloo Place, on the left-hand side, as one enters Lower Regent street, stands a dull red building of Corinthian architecture; on the walls is a notice to the effect that the last service will be held on Sunday next, when the sermon will be preached by Dr. Pigou, Dean of Bristol. That is St. Philip's.

Built eighty-four years ago as a chapel of ease to St. James' Church, St. Philip's has sadly fallen from its high estate.

At one time 1,500 persons crowded its portals to listen to eloquent sermons from its then vicar, now Dean Pigou. Some of the highest personages in the land regularly attended Divine service there.

But for many years past the sole congregation has considered of half a dozen persons. It is for this reason that the church is to be pulled down and the land sold.

"All the rich folks who used to live in Carlton House Terrace and round there seem to have gone away, or else do not go to church any longer," complains the old caretaker, who has watched the congregation dwindling for twenty years.

St. Philip's has no parish and no endowment, depending entirely on its pew rents. These at the apogee of its prosperity amounted to £1,200 a year. Now they are absolutely nil.

When brilliant preachers like Canon Repton and Canon Pigou were vicar, large and fashionable congregations flocked to hear them.

At one time on a Sunday morning the Duke of Cambridge, the Duke of Mecklenberg-Strelitz, Princess Mary of Teck, the Duke of Marlborough, Lords Derby and Elcho, Mr. Gladstone and many other notables could all be seen in the pews.

One delightful old character was Admiral Boyle. Having listened to the account of St. Paul's shipwreck, he waited outside the church for Dr. Pigou.

"Well, all I can say," remarked he, "is that if a captain in Her Majesty's service had handled his ship as that man did he would have been court-martialed the same day and dismissed from the service."

Many tradesmen, attracted by the fashionable gathering, attended the church. One of them, a wine merchant, seeing that Lord Derby suffered much from gout, wrote to him and recommended a certain brand of sherry.

Lord Derby replied: "Dear sir, I have tried your sherry, and much prefer the gout."

Hon. "Jimmy" Lowther.

With the retirement of the Right Hon. "Jimmy" Lowther from the representation of Thanet in the House of Commons another link will have been completed in a chain of Parliamentary experiences which is probably unique in the history of any one family. Mr. Lowther has been a member of the House almost uninterruptedly since 1865. Preceding and joining on to him Colonel H. C. Lowther sat from 1812 to 1867, and he in turn was preceded by Colonel James Lowther, who sat from 1775 to 1818. The Parliamentary life, therefore, of these three Lowthers covers an almost unbroken period, from 1775 to 1904, of 129 years back. For Colonel H. C. Lowther links on to the Lowther who became the first Earl of Lonsdale, and whose Parliamentary career commenced in 1757, and he, with an interval of only three years, was preceded by Sir James Lowther, who was a member of Parliament from 1692 to 1754. These five lives, then, cover Parliamentary experiences extending from 1692 to 1904—a period of 212 years. And there are still Mr. J. W. Lowther and Mr. Claude Lowther in the House to continue the family connection.

NO BATTLE ON YALU RIVER.

Story of a Russian Land Reverse Officially Denied—Famine of Chinese Laborers at Vladivostock — Mobilizing the Black Sea Reserves—Fears of a Russian Tea Famine at an End.

Paris, April 9.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Echo de Paris says that Vice-Admiral Makaroff went out from Port Arthur this morning, a Japanese squadron having been signalled as being in the offing. It is rumored, the correspondent says, that a sea fight took place, but nothing concerning it is officially known.

Rumored Russian Reverse Denied.

St. Petersburg, April 9.—An authoritative denial is given of the rumors of a Russian reverse on the Yalu River which was circulated in Paris yesterday morning. No official telegrams were received from the front yesterday.

Chinks Are Scarce.

Vladivostock, April 9.—The absence of the usual influx of Chinese laborers is severely felt. Generally thousands come here in the spring by steamer from Che Foo and Nagasaki, and Vladivostock is dependent on their arrival in March and April for manual labor.

The Black Sea Reserves.

St. Petersburg, April 9.—The mobilization of the Black Sea reserves is necessitated in order to fill gaps caused by drafting sailors to the Far East. It is expected that a similar mobilization will come into effect in the Baltic provinces within a month.

Tea Famine Averted.

Moscow, April 9.—The fears of a tea famine have been greatly relieved. The merchants have been informed that the railroad is now able to transport 500,000 pounds of tea which have been lying at Port Dalny.

A SKIRMISH IN THIBET.

General McDonald's Infantry Fired Upon —There Were No Casualties.

London, April 9.—A despatch received at the India office last night said that Gen. McDonald's infantry, while reconnoitering near Kalapanga, encountered 300 Thibetans, who opened fire, but there were no casualties.

A private letter from a member of the mission in Thibet states that the weather is getting quite mild.

"The thermometer," says the writer, "now registers only 29 degrees of frost, and we have been having 56 degrees. We have all grown beards and we never wash.

"To wash even one's shirt is disastrous. A friend of mine washed his shirts the other day and they froze like boards. He has not been able to thaw them since."

Premier Ross Explains Aid to the Algoma Central.

SECURITIES ARE GILT-EDGED

Government Leader's Speech Full of the Most Interesting Facts and Figures—Detail of the Securities the Province Will Hold—Mr. Whitney Sarcastic—Sturgeon Falls School Taxes Cases.

Toronto, April 9.—The Government's method of aiding the Algoma Central & Hudson Bay Railway by guaranteeing a loan to be raised by the reorganized Soo companies was explained by the Premier to the Legislature yesterday. Briefly, it is that in order to aid in the completion of the railway from Sault Ste. Marie to the main line of the C.P.R., and in the reorganization of the industries at that town, the Province should guarantee the principal of a loan of $2,000,000 and interest at the rate of 5 per cent., to be obtained by the new Canadian Improvement Company. The Premier explained the nature of the securities which would be held by the Province. In view of the great mass of figures and documents the Premier described his address as preliminary, and suggested that at the close the House might adjourn in order to give the members ample time to study the proposition. Mr. Whitney followed with a few satirical remarks, and moved the adjournment of the debate. It was agreed to continue the discussion on Tuesday afternoon.

Dr. Nesbitt's Justification.

Dr. Nesbitt attempted to justify his failure to oppose the passage of the bill regarding the Separate Schools of Sturgeon Falls after telling the House on presenting the petition against it that he would be heard from later. He moved that the Public School supporters be heard at the bar, but it was shown that every stage of the bill had been properly regular, and that there was no precedent for such a request. When he found that the House was overwhelmingly against him, he asked that his own motion be declared "lost on division," which means that the votes would not be recorded. But the proposal was not listened to, and the motion was rejected by 52 to 14, as follows:

Yeas: Nesbitt, Pyne, Kidd, Barr, Crawford, Reid, Little (Cardwell), Carnegie, Duff, Beattie, Lucas, Preston (Durham), Clark (Bruce), Mahaffy—14.

Nays—Ross, Gibson, Harcourt, Dryden, Davis, Stratton, Evanturel, Caldwell, Barber, Richardson, Preston (Brant), Gross, Taylor, Little (Norfolk), Thompson, Hislop, Lee, Pettypiece, Dickenson, Bowman, Graham, Russell, Burt, Currie, Rickard, Brown, Cameron (Huron), McKay, Stock, Holmes, Guibord, James, Smith (Soo), Whitney, Foy, Matheson, Carscallen (Hamilton), Willoughby, Powell, Morrison, Eilber, Munro, Gamey, Hendrie, Hoyle, Hanna, Smyth, Murphy, Laeckner, Reaume, Downey, Carscallen (Lennox)—52.

The absentees were: Anderson, Auld, Beck, Brower, Cameron (Fort William), Carr, Clarke (Northumberland), Conmee, Davidson, Dunlop, Fox, Gallagher, Jamieson, Jessop, Joynt, Kribs, Latchford, Macdiarmid, McCart, McLeod, Michaud, Pardo, Pearce, Pense, Routledge, St. John, Smith (Peel), Sutherland, Truax, Tucker, Tudhope—31.

The Soo Guarantee Loan.

Premier Ross moved the second reading of the Soo guarantee bill yesterday afternoon, fully explaining the chief features of the contract. At the same time there was laid on the desks of the members a return of documents relating to the Lake Superior enterprises. The Premier traced the progress of the Soo and dwelt on the supreme importance to the province of having the vast enterprises which were the outgrowth of F. H. Clergue's genius restored to their former greatness. He informed the House that the actual expenditures on all the industries at the Soo totalled $28,259,177.06, and that it seemed to be a sure thing that with the credit of the province behind the re-organized company it should be able to secure capital to put the works on their feet again. The cause assigned for the smash was the financial depression in the States, the capitalists who had invested their money in the company being squeezed so tight that they were unable to meet any further demands to furnish the necessary grease for the machinery.

$40,000 a Month in Wages.

Coming down to to-day, the Speyer Company were paying out $40,000 a month in wages in the plants they are operating, and the Premier was informed that they were making the industries pay. The liabilities of the old company are these:

Speyer & Co. mortgage, $5,600,000.

Secured and unsecured creditors, $2,399,708.98.

Some of these creditors are secured by collaterals and liens upon certain parts of the property. There is a lien on some of the coal and nickel on hand, and on parts of the machinery, and some of the creditors are willing to postpone payment a year beyond the time their claims would become due. These amount to $585,285, so that Speyer & Co. have to provide $1,801,835 for claims that must be met immediately.

It is proposed that the company shall have a million of working capital, and $100,000 for incidental claims beyond the ones provided for. In order to provide for this the reorganized company must have $8,504,425.35. That will pay the Speyer loan, pay the banks for wages advanced on the authority of the Government, discharge the Foley lien on the Algoma Central, and remove all other liabilities pressing.

The Government was confronted with the question whether it would be in the public interest to assist the company or allow the industries to lapse. The American capitalists who had invested their money had done so not only for their own enrichment but for the benefit of the people of the province as well. In order to encourage future investment of American capital, the Government felt that the industries should be revivified.

Mr. Whitney's View.

Mr. Whitney said that the Premier displayed many of the qualities of a Shylock, for he had securities amounted to $15,000,000 for the loan and craved for more. If any proof were required that the Premier intended to leave the House soon it would be found in his speech. If his present occupation were taken from him he would still have a monopoly of the promoters of all description. He referred to the proposition as "bookkeeping extravaganza," and moved the adjournment of the debate.

The House adjourned at 6.10 p. m.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Mr. Sifton scored a remarkable success in his reply to the leader of the Opposition in Parliament, on Wednesday, says the Globe. He very happily described the concessions as concessions from those who have confidence to those who are in doubt. The shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway could hardly be expected to have the same knowledge of Canada that the Canadian Government and Parliament possessed, nor the same faith in its future. The concessions which had been made, and which Parliament was now asked to ratify, were all of a kind which the country would never be called upon to implement if the project turned out as well as they had every confidence it would do. For example if it proves a success, the guarantee of seventy-five per cent. of the cost of construction of the mountain section would not involve the country in one cent of expense. Is it not incumbent on the country to show its own faith in the merits of the project? How could the Grand Trunk shareholders be expected to embark in it if the Government whose scheme it was, showed itself distrustful?

Mr. Sifton's reply to the criticism that there is nothing in the bargain which ties the company down to affording low freight rates was to read the section which puts the fixing of rates absolutely at the discretion of Parliament or anybody which it chooses to appoint for that purpose. What better guarantee could be asked for? Would it be possible to nominate rates in the bargain which would be suitable during all the years in which it is operative? Leaving the matter in the hands of Parliament is leaving it virtually in the hands of the people who make and unmake Parliaments.

On the question of the issue of stock by the Grand Trunk Railway, Mr. Sifton was particularly happy. By way of answer to Mr. Borden's contention that the company would either give away the thirteen millions of stock of which it would have the disposal, or at the most sell it at a nominal price, he asked on what thinkable grounds the company would inflict this loss on the shareholders. Mr Borden disavowed that this was his argument. He had endeavoured to establish that the company would make a handsome thing out of the stock. Mr. Sifton's reply to this interruption was considered one of the happiest passages in a speech that was full of good things. He apologized for misunderstanding the drift of Mr. Borden's argument, being probably misled by the fact that what he had been refuting was one of the familiar themes of the Conservative press. However, taking Mr. Borden's version of it, he had to say that if the stock appreciated as that gentleman anticipated, it could only be after every obligation due to the country had been fulfilled. If they ever made anything out of that thirteen million dollars of stock it would only be because the railway was a splendid success from end to end. At several points in his speech Mr. Sifton was interrupted by prolonged applause such as is not often heard in Parliament.

CATCHING THEM YOUNG.

A department of immigration which is looked upon with considerable prejudice, and of which very little is generally known, is the importation of children to Canada. Such children sent to this country by various philanthropic societies, are frequently dubbed by the generic term, "Barnardo boys," used in an almost opprobious sense. This idea is perhaps fostered by an occasional youthful immigrant going wrong, and the fact that he came to Canada under charitable auspices being heardled far and wide. It ought to be much easier to make good Canadian citizens out of young people placed in good homes here, while yet retaining the pliability of youth, than of adults who have acquired the set habits and prejudices of maturity. It is perhaps significant of the confidence felt by the people of Great Britain in Canadian institutions that the Dominion is the only part of the Empire beyond seas to which child emigration is systematically promoted.

The whole work is very carefully supervised, both in the Old Country and by the Government in Canada. The result of the care is that the Government agents report fully 95 per cent of the child immigrants as proving satisfactory. Probably the average of Canadian children who prove satisfactory is not much greater.

The children are placed almost exclusively with farmers, and there is such a demand for them that it is expected they will be brought to Canada in yearly-increasing numbers. During last year 515 of these children were brought to Canada, of whom 347 settled on farms in Ontario, 58 in Quebec, 69 in New Brunswick, and the rest scattered over various western provinces. They are bound over for a certain period of years, and inquiries about them are annually made by the Government, to ensure good treatment, while in the winter their education is also looked after. Special care is also exercised that Protestant and Roman Catholic children should be placed with co-religionists.

The Government takes an active interest in this branch of immigration, which is proving of great value to the farmers of Canada, continually suffering, as they are, from a shortage of agricultural labour.

Scrawny People.

KEENE FARMERS ARE PLOUGHING.

First Evidence of the Arrival of the Spring Time.

A farmer who lives in the vicinity of Keene was in town this morning and gave the information that yesterday before the rain two farmers near that village were ploughing.

This is a remarkable record in view of the long delayed arrival of spring, and farmers generally will welcome this evidence of a return of "The good old summer time."

LINDSAY MAN WANTS A WIFE.

Advertises for a Partner for Life, and Specifies Qualifications.

The Lindsay Watchman-Warder in a recent issue contained an advertisement in which a young man of that vicinity advertises for a wife. He claims to own a large amount of land in that vicinity and other places, not including a lot in the cemetery. He is only 21 years of age, is fairly good-looking, good-natured, and we suppose can repeat the golden text in Sunday School. He wants a nice young woman, one that will use him right, which no doubt means having his meals on time, unhitch his horse nights when he comes home from the lodge, take off his boots, and also saw the wood. This very exemplary young man must be very hard to please, or perhaps the young women in that neighbourhood are on to him.

Claim Strikers Defeated.

Ottawa, April 9.—A G. N. W. despatch says: The strike of G. N. W. telegraph operators in this city has resulted in their utter defeat. Inside of 24 hours their head office was fully manned with expert operators and the Parliament House branch was also re-opened for business. Operators brought from outside points are being allowed to return to their homes.

Toronto, April 9.—President Long of the Telegraphers' Union last night expressed confidence of ultimate success. "We know that the G.N.W. is losing instead of gaining any ground," he said.

Labor Judgment Reversed.

Sydney, April 9.—The Commonwealth High Court has just delivered an important judgment bearing on the interests of private enterprise. The case was an appeal by a butcher, who was fined by the New South Wales Arbitration Court for keeping his shop open after the hour fixed by the court, though he was doing all the work himself. The High Court unanimously decided that his action was justified, provided that no employes were detained after the statutory hour. Heavy costs were given against the Employes' Union, which instigated the original prosecution.

Held-Up at Windsor.

Windsor, April 9.—Late Thursday night Headley V. Smythe, a son of ex-Mayor Smythe, as he was crossing the C.P.R. bridge, near Wyandotte street two men stepped out of the shadow and one of them thrust the muzzle of a revolver into Smythe's face. "Hands up" was the order. Smythe did as he was bid and the men took $7, a ring and a stick-pin from him, but didn't get his watch. One of the footpads was colored, the other white.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC.

Dr. Russell and Dr. Sproule Spoke to Comparatively Empty Benches.

Ottawa, April 9.—Interest in the debate on the Grand Trunk Pacific agreement is practically dead, if the attendance of members in the Chamber during its progress yesterday is any criterion. Dr. Russell, who resumed the debate on the Government side, spoke to comparatively empty benches, and was followed by Dr. Sproule, whose audience on the floor was still smaller, while the galleries were practically deserted. Many of the members having gone home on the day trains, the House adjourned at 6 o'clock.

McPherson & McGregor

(Successors to the F. R. J. McPherson Co.)

Take this opportunity of thanking the public for the very liberal patronage accorded the late firm. Trade has been so satisfactory that Mr McGrego decided to increase his interest in the business and, as a consequence, the firm will be know hereafter as McPHERSON & McGREGOR.

Our specialties are:—

Sanitary Plumbing
Sanitary Ventilating
Steam and Hot Water Heating
Electrical Wiring and Supplies

We wish to draw the attention of the public to a few of the many complimentary testimonials received by Mr. McGregor for the high quality of the work he has installed in Plumbing and Heating:

From the Firm of Bennet & Wright, Plumbing, Heating and Electrical Contractors, Toronto.

This is to certify that Duncan McGregor has been in our employment steady for about fifteen years and during that time we have found him to be steady, honest and trustworthy. He has given every satisfaction as a practical mechanic in each of the following branches: Plumbing, steam and gas fitting, also electrical and conduit work, and for some time has had charge of some of our largest contracts with satisfactory results.

From Illsley & Horn, General Contractors, Toronto.

The bearer, Mr. Duncan McGregor, had charge of the electric wiring at the King Edward Hotel Building. The job was a large and complicated one and by the way Mr. McGregor handled the work he proved himself a mechanic of more than ordinary ability. We unhesitatingly recommend him as a first class mechanic to anyone needing his services.

From Mr. J. Ross Robertson, of the Evening Telegram.

Mr. Duncan McGregor, who has been connected with the Bennet & Wright Co. for some years, and who has superintended the work of plumbing and heating for the Bennet & Wright Co., is not only in my opinion, but also that of my architect, a fully competent mechanic. His work, my architect informs me, has been most satisfactory. Any thing that has come under my own supervision has been likewise satisfactory.

An Extract Taken from the June Number of Domestic Engineering.

During the recent convention of the Canadian Electrical Association held in the King Edward Hotel, a thorough examination was made of all the electrical work in the hotel, and it was pronounced second to none on the continent. Therefore, great credit is due Mr. Duncan MacGregor, who superintended the entire conduit, electrical and power system for the firm of Bennet & Wright, of this city, who were the contractors for all the different branches of the electrical work in the new hotel.

ANGLO-FRENCH PACT

Earnest of Lasting Peace Between Enemies of Centuries.

THE DOCUMENT IS NOW SIGNED

Newfoundland Shore and Other Questions Settled—Concessions on Both Sides—Premier Bond Says Newfoundland Acquiesces—Clauses Referring to Morocco and Egypt—Comments of the British Press.

London, April 9.—The Government has long been a stranger to such a chorus of universal approval and congratulations as that exhibited editorially this morning in all the London newspapers because of the happy conclusion of Anglo-French negotiations for a Colonial Treaty.

The Daily Telegraph says: "It is most satisfactory to welcome a diplomatic incident which will be recorded for centuries. It is no exaggeration to assert that every barrier in the way of lasting peace and amity between France and Great Britain has been removed, and if either party had made infinitely greater sacrifices they would have been cheap, indeed, in view of the incalculable value of the accord obtained."

The foregoing quotation fairly represents the general spirit of editorial comments. An exception, however, is found in the Morning Post, which says. "Never in our recollection has Great Britain given away so much for nothing."

The Times, referring to the Newfoundland settlement, says the French shore question bristled with irritating technicalities and restrictions, and involved Newfoundland in an Imperial problem of a particularly baffling kind. The disappearance of a difficulty so petty in itself, yet so full of inflammable materials, was something upon which we should all congratulate ourselves.

The News says: One hundred years ago Napoleon lay crouching behind Boulogne, ready to spring at England. One hundred years later France and England signed a treaty affecting four continets, and in which mingles the Union Jack and the Tricolor from Newfoundland to the New Hebrides. England is well out of the tiresome and dangerous disputes over Newfoundland.

The Standard remarks about Newfoundland, that the obvious solution has at last been brought into play.

The Chronicle is not at all sure that the Marquis of Lansdowne has not paid rather too much and received rather too little in his bargain about Newfoundland. What France parts with is the power to inflict pin pricks.

What the Treaty Contains.

Paris, April 9.—The Associated Press learns through private advices from London that the Anglo-French Colonial Treaty, including the agreements relative to Morocco, Egypt and Newfoundland, has been signed.

The main points of the Colonial Treaty are as follows:

France surrenders her sovereignty over the Newfoundland shore and receives a two-fold indemnity:

First for French individuals giving up property along the surrendered shore and second, for the French Government's relinquishment of its sovereignty. The amount of the indemnity to be paid by Great Britain is to be decided by The Hague Arbitration Tribunal.

Morocco figures largely in the treaty. It safeguards Great Britain's commercial rights, and insures no fortifications of the Moroccan coast opposite Gibraltar.

The Egyptian agreement does not affect Great Britain's protectorate over Egypt, but is said to be confined to the administration of the Egyptian debt. Great Britain having a larger latitude in disposing of the surplus without the concurrence of France. France gets improved facilities in reaching Lake Tchad and other points in French Central Africa. This concession, it has been asserted in the despatches, is a partial return for the surrender of French sovereignty over the Newfoundland shore.

Finally, the treaty is said to contain a clause providing for equality of tariff duties on goods entering Morocco and Egypt for a period of thirty years. This clause will have the effect of establishing the open door in Morocco and Egypt.

The question in regard to the New Hebrides, Paris advices say, is not included in the agreement.

Foregoes Her Exclusive Rights.

In Newfoundland, France foregoes her exclusive rights on the French shore, though retaining her right to fish. The Bait Bill of 1886 is modified so as to give Newfoundlanders the right to sell bait to the French fishermen. Indemnities will be given the owners and employers of French establishments on the French shore in exchange for the abandoned fishing rights.

Some Further Details

London, April 9.—(C.A.P.)—It is said that by the Anglo-French agreement England agrees to hand over the town and territory of Jarbarterda, on the River Gambia, and abandon the Los Islands, on the coast of French Guinea, also the Zinder territory, and the commercial route to Sokoto. France in return agrees to relinquish the exclusive rights to the French shore fishing. The officials of the Niger Company know nothing regarding the proposal to abandon the Sokoto route, and doubt the truth of the report.

Newfoundland Acquiesces.

St. John's, Nfld., April 9.—Interrogated in the Legislature respecting the negotiations on the French shore question between the British and French Governments, Premier Bond said that the Newfoundland Government was a consenting party to these negotiations, that it had made suggestions as to the conditions of the arrangement, had pledged its acquiescence in the arrangement if its proposals were adopted, and that any agreement which may be concluded between the high contracting parties would be subject to the approval of the Newfoundland Legislature.

Turco-Bulgarian Convention Signed.

Sofia, Bulgaria, April 9.—A telegram received here from Constantinople announces that a Truro-Bulgarian convention was signed yesterday. No details are given.

SCOTCH TRIBUTE TO PETERBOROUGH.

Official Manual of Visiting Curlers has Been Published.

Glowing Account of Their Visit to this Town—The Entertainment Provided—A Beautiful Work.

The Examiner made mention some days ago of the advance copy of "Curling," edited by Rev. Jno. Kerr, chaplain of the Scotch curlers who visited Canada a little over a year ago. The edition has now been published and Mr. Mark Sanderson, of Glasgow, has sent two copies to town, the proud possessors of these being Messrs. M. C. Tooley and Arthur Wade. What the author thought of Peterborough and the report of their entertainment here is very interestingly told:

The book contains excellent illustrations of the Hydraulic Lift Lock, the exterior and interior of the Charlotte street rink and of the pond in Jackson Park. Photos of Messrs. Dr. Boucher, W. G. Ferguson, T. F. Matthews, S. D. Hall, D. Davidson, D. W. Dumble, J. Jeffries, G. E. Whiten are also inserted in the scription of Peterborough.

The following paragraphs will be read with interest by the many local curlers who have pleasant memories of the visit of the Scotch curlers:

"Leaving Ottawa we came to Peterborough, a new town of 10,000 inhabitants, planned and laid out a hundred years ago by far-seeing men, who recognized the importance of the situation. Among the amusing things at the smoker at Ottawa was the information that we were then leaving the last confines of civilization and had better provide ourselves with tomahawks and scalping knives. But if a hundred years ago the site of Peterborough was primeval forest, and its denizens Red Indians and savages, the appearance of the place on our arrival was a witness to the fact that all that was now changed, and that here as elsewhere the fairy wand of Scotland had had much to do with the transformation. Notwithstanding the numerous ovations which had greeted the team on their eventful journey, the reception at Peterborough fairly "cowed a'." As the C.P.R. train pulled into the station, the Scotsmen were met by the civic official, an inner circle of local enthusiasts, and an outer circle comprising everybody else. Headed by the 57th Regiment band the curlers of the city had marched to the station, accompanied by their brother curlers from the surrounding districts, Orillia, Cobourg, Norwood, Keene, Port Hope, Uxbridge and Lakefield, who were engaged in a curling tournament at Peterborough, but had abandoned the rink for the nonce to extend their "Cead mille failthe" to the sons of Scotia, and a right royal welcome they gave us. No doubt a few of the ten thousand inhabitants of Peterborough stayed at home that morning, but it did not look like it, for it seemed as if the whole population had turned out to meet the Scotsmen. Everywhere the feeling seemed to be that the visitors were welcome, and that the citizens of Peterborough were determined to let them know it. A procession was formed, headed by the band, followed by a large array of curlers with brooms up. Then came the conveyances in which the Scottish curlers, civic officials and prominent citizens were seated, these being followed by several hundreds more of the knights of the broom and the public in general. It was like a Lord Mayor's procession, the streets being lined on both sides with spectators who every now and then burst into cheers, even the dogs barking their welcome and bounding about as if in the greatest delight. It was certainly a reception that, for its heartiness surpassed anything on the tour, and can never be forgotten by the members of the team. At Snowden's, which was the location of the team during their stay at Peterborough, luncheon was served under the presidency of Col. E. B. Edwards, K.C., to whom the credit of the complete arrangements for the visit of the team to the Ontario province was due. The dining hall was beautifully decorated with Scotch flags, bunting, mottoes, etc., these being the work of Messrs. J. J. Turner & Sons, who were evidently adepts at artistic decoration. The various rinks on which the curlers played when at Peterborough were also beautifully decorated, and into the ice which was here pebbled, fantastic figures in colour were worked, especially around the tee. In his remarks at the luncheon, Col. Edwards said that recent history had made Canada a more prominent part of the Empire than ever it was before, and he was sure the visitors would return with a greater idea of the importance of this country, of the blessings, the jollity and the benefits of its winter climate, than they could have obtained in any other way. The captain, in reply, delivered a message of greeting from the auld Mither Club, the Royal Caledonian, and said the visit of the team was made with the impression that they could give points to the Canadians in curling. As an evidence of the advanced civilization of Peterborough the menu at the luncheon in Snowden's had for preface, and was a greeting for the Scotsmen, a stirring song by John Usher.

After the luncheon an adjournment was made to the rink where several matches were played. In the evening the usual supper and smoking concert was held in the Oddfellows' Hall, where His Worship Mayor Hogg, presided and in the name of the city, extended a hearty welcome to the visiting curlers, hoping they would enjoy themselves and carry away pleasant memories of Peterborough and Canada.

On Wednesday morning, January 21, the curlers embarked in open sleighs, drawn by black caparisoned horses, and, accompanied by the Mayor, aldermen and prominent citizens, were driven about the town, the perfect weather, with hard frost and unclouded sunshine, giving them a favourable idea of the Canadian climate. They visited various "Lions" such as the Electric Works, the Cereal Works and Hydraulic Lift Lock. In the afternoon they engaged no fewer than five of the best clubs in Ontario, two of which were represented by a special rink, and three by two rinks. The result was deemed a great feather in the Scots' cap, for they were victorious over four of these clubs, with a majority of 25 shots. The only club which escaped in this big battle, and by the skin of its teeth, was Norwood, with one up. The defeated clubs were Campbellford, Keene, Uxbridge, and Lakefield.

That is all. Send no money. Simply sign above. Tell me the book you need. I will arrange with a druggist near you for six bottles of

Dr. Shoop's Restorative

Take it a month at my risk. If it succeeds the cost to you is $5.50. If it fail the druggist will bill the cost to me and I leave the decision to you mind you—who asked for my guarantee, 39 out of each 40 have paid. Paid because they got well.

DON'T WAIT UNTIL YOU ARE WORSE

Taken in time the suffering of this little one would have been prevented. Her mother writes me:

"Two years ago my little girl was sick continuously for six months. We tried many doctors and they failed, yet it took only two bottles of your remedy to cure her, and she has remained cured. You can tell others of this cure if you so desire. Mrs. C. H. Avery, Rockdale, N. Y."

'Tis a pity she did not first write me before the case was dangerous.

The wife of Omer Andrus of Bayou Chicot, La., had been sick for 20 years. For 8 years could do practically no work. He writes:

"When she first started taking the Restorative she barely weighed 90 pounds; now she weighs 135, and is easily able to do all her housework."

Twenty "dark" years might have been "bright" ones.

J. G. Billingsley of Thomasville, Ga., for three years had been crippled with disease. Now he is well. He writes:

"I spent $250.00 for other medicines, and the $3.00 I have spent with you have done me more good than all the rest."

Both money and suffering might have been saved.

And these are only three from over 65,000 similar cases. These letters—dozens of them—come every day to me.

How much serious illness the Restorative has prevented, I have no means of knowing, for the slightly ill and the indisposed simply get a bottle or two off their druggist, are cured, and I never hear from them.

But of 600,000 sick ones—seriously sick

WHY THE RESTORATIVE SUCCEEDS

You may oil and rub, adjust and repair a weak engine. It will never be stronger nor do its work better, without steam. More power—more steam is necessary.

And so with the vital organs. Doctor them as you will. That's mere repairing. Permanent cures never come save through treating the nerves that operate those organs.

And that my Restorative does.

After almost a lifetime of labour—of study at bedsides and research in hospitals—I made this discovery. I found a way to treat, not the organs themselves, but the nerves—the inside nerves—that operate these organs and give them power and strength and health. That discovery has shown me the way to cure.

It makes my offer possible.

I know the remedy. I never can forget the study, all the research, the trials and tests that perfected it. I have watched its action year after year in cases difficult, discouraging. Time after time I have seen it bring back health to those poor ones whom hope had almost deserted. I know what it will do.

My only problem is to convince you.

And so I make my offer. And the bare fact that I make such an offer ought of itself to convince you that I know how to cure. Please read it again. It means exactly what I say. No catch—no misleading phrases in it Simply this—you take the medicine and I will take the risk.

And you—not I—decide if you are to pay.

ALL YOU NEED TO DO

Simply sign the above—that is all.
Ask for the book you need. The offer I make is broad—is liberal. The way is easy—is simple. The Restorative is certain.
But do not misunderstand me.
This is not free treatment, with nothing to pay. Such an offer would be misleading—would belittle the physician who made it. But I believe in a sick one's honesty—his gratitude. That when he is cured he will pay the cost of the treatment—and gladly.
I make this offer so that those who might doubt may learn at my risk.
Tell of it, please, to a friend who is sick. Or send me his name. That's but a trifle to ask—a minute's time—a postal. He is your friend. You can help him. My way may be his only way to get well.
I, a stranger, offer to do all this. Won't you, his friend, his neighbour, simply write? He will learn from my book a way to get well. Perhaps, as I say, the only way for him. His case may be serious—hopeless almost. Other physicians—other specialists may have failed. The matter is urgent, then. Write me a postal or sign above to-day. Address Dr. Shoop, Box 47, Racine, Wis.

I certify that I have in my cellar a No. 4 Star Heater which has been put up with a galvanized iron casing as a hot air furnace. It heats the bar-room, front sitting room, a large dining room and the upper parlour. The most coal I have used on the coldest day this winter is 90 pounds in 24 hours. I can recommend this stove to any person wanting a first-class heater, or one to be used as a hot air furnace.

During the year of 1903, the policies issued and taken amounted to $1,278,850, an increase of $1,180,400, or 38 per cent over last year. The insurance in force showed an increase of $2,734,092, leaving our total business in force at the end of the year $18,023,639. The interest earned in 1903 amounted to $110,428, an increase of $25,752, or 30 per cent. over that of last year. The Surplus to Policyholders is now $473,963, or more than double the surplus at the end of the previous year.

All the Investments of the Company (outside of Debentures, principally deposited with the Dominion Government) are on the security of first mortgages on improved and rental bearing properties in the West, and on policies of the Company.

The amount of Death Claims was $80,542.76, again very much below the amount expected, and we are once more able to report that every death claim received was paid before the end of the year. We have included in the liabilities $1,000 to cover a claim that has not yet been received, but we have been advised of the reported death of the insured in a foreign country.

We have valued our insurance liability, as in previous years, on a more stringent basis than that required by the Insurance Act; and it now reaches the handsome sum of $1,601,217.

As may be plainly seen, the year has been a very prosperous one, and the results shown should enable all interested in the success of the Company to conscientiously continue to recommend intending insurers to give the Great-West the preference when placing their insurance.

SATURDAY, APRIL 9, 1904.

THE MORNING'S MARKET WAS A VERY SMALL ONE.

Everything Sold by Half Past Eleven O'Clock A Small Supply.

Those on the market this morning were pleased, if surprised, to see a reduction from last Saturday's prices. The market, however, was very small, and by half past eleven o'clock, practically nothing was left, the demand far exceeding the supply. Very few farmers were in town, presumably on account of the very bad condition of many of the country roads. With good weather next week, a large market can be looked for on Saturday. Butter was selling at from 18 to 20 cents, and eggs at 15 to 17 cents. Chickens were from 50 to 60 cents per pair.

WILL TAKE A MONTH'S HOLIDAY.

Mr. W. A. Smith Will Try to Regain Health by Rest.

Mr. W. A. Smith, of the Review news room staff, and President of Peterborough Typographical Union No. 238, who has been unwell for some time, left this morning for a month's holiday to recuperate. He went to Toronto to-day where he will act as best man at his brother's wedding, and will afterwards go to Colborne, his home, for a few weeks. Mr. Smith's many friends here will join the Examiner in hoping that his holiday will result in improved health.

Ministerial Association.

The April meeting of the Ministerial Association will be held in the Y.M.C.A. parlour on Monday morning, April 11th at ten o'clock. In addition to the regular routine of business there will be a paper by Rev. A. H. Brace of the Park street Baptist church.

MODIFICATIONS MADE TO SUGAR PROPOSITION

Were Effected at a Conference Held on Friday Afternoon.

RATEPAYERS VOTE ON AGREEMENT ON MAY 5

Security to the Town in Case of Failure to Comply With Conditions—$50,000 to be Paid on Arrival of the Machinery—The Balance to be Held Until the Factory is in Operation.

Salient Points in the Agreement Between the Peterborough Sugar Company and the Town, upon Which the Ratepayers Will Vote on May 5th Next.

Mr. D. A. Gordon and his associates to invest $100,000 at once.

The town to guarantee Bonds to the extent of $100,000.

$50,000 of this is to be paid when the machinery arrives.

$50,000 is to be held by the town until the factory is in operation, when it will be paid over to the company.

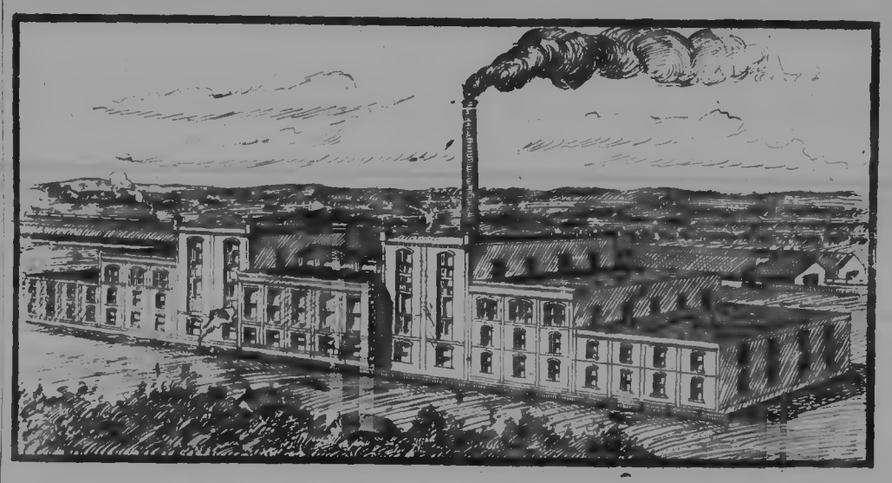
The company will repay $50,000 to the town at the end of three years.

The remaining $50,000 will be repaid in seven equal annual instalments, the whole amount to be returned to the town in ten years.

Mr. D. A. Gordon, president of the Wallaceburg Sugar Company has consented to accept the presidency of the company.

The council will be given the privilege of being represented on the directorate of the company during the ten years' duration of the company's liability to the town.

As a result of a conference held yesterday afternoon between the members of the Town Council and Mr. D. A. Gordon, President of the Wallaceburg Sugar Company, a by-law will be submitted to the ratepayers on May 5th, which, if carried will authorize the Council to guarantee bonds to the extent of $100,000 in the Peterborough Sugar Company, and on condition of which Mr. Gordon and his associates will buy stock in the Company to an equal amount, and Mr. Gordon will also accept the presidency of the company. If the bylaw carries, the factory will be completed this summer, and the machinery will be installed in time to handle this year's crop of beets.



THE FACTORY OF THE PETERBOROUGH SUGAR COMPANY AS IT WILL APPEAR WHEN COMPLETED.

The company's proposition was not accepted in exactly the same terms in which it was submitted through Mr. Gordon at Wednesday night's Council meeting, one or two amendments being made before the Council would be willing to submit it to the ratepayers. But it was believed that at last the proposition was put into such a shape that the town would be well secured, and it was thought that the ratepayers would look favourably upon it.

SOME MODIFICATIONS.

Two points in which modifications were made to the original proposal were in the time in which the advances are to be made, and in the date of the repayment by the Company. In the first case the town will pay the first $50,000 of the whole amount when the machinery arrives, and the balance will not be paid until the factory is in operation. This was proposed by the members of the Council in order that the town might be absolutely secured.

Then the Company agrees to pay back $50,000 at the end of three years, and the remaining $50,000 will be paid in seven annual instalment, the whole amount to be repaid in 10 years.

The meeting yesterday was attended by: Mayor Roger, Aldermen Morroson, Rush, Scott, McWilliams, Clinkscale, Adams and Mason, Messrs. Gordon, Blackburn, Garvin, and County Councillor Hunter, representing the Sugar Company; Town Solicitor E. H. D. Hall, A. P. Poussette, Town Clerk Armstrong and E. J. Toker.

THE TOWN'S BORROWING POWERS

Ald. Morrison, who opened the meeting said that the matter under consideration had been fully discussed at a meeting of the Committee of the Whole, which was held Thursday night, and there were some difficulties confronting the committee, the greatest of these being the fact that at the present time the town's borrowing power was restricted to ten per cent. of the value of the total assessment which was at the present time about $5,190,000, and consequently the present borrowing limit was fixed at $519,000, while up to date all but $181,000 of this amount had been borrowed. If the Company's proposition was accepted this would leave only $81,000 of a margin, and in addition, the amount to be raised for a Collegiate Institute, approximately $50,000 would have to be provided for, if the bylaw to raise that amount is supported by the ratepayers. This would bring the town dangerously near to the limit. Ald. Morrison expressed his opinion that if the Sugar Company asked only $50,000 there would be a greater chance of carrying the bylaw.

The Mayor reiterated the position as expressed by Ald. Morrison, and said that although the members of the Council fully recognized the importance of the project, and were desirous of finding some means by which the Sugar Company might continue the construction of its plant, they believed that as the proposition stood it would be an extraordinarily hard matter to carry the by-law, the principal objection being that it would bring the town dangerously near to the limit of its borrowing power.

NOT AN INSURMOUNTABLE DIFFICULTY.

Mr. Garvin said that as he understood the Act it stated explicitely that towns might borrow to within 10 per cent of their assessed value for the purpose of assisting industrial concerns. Ald. McWilliams, however, explained that a special clause in the Act referring to Peterborough restricted the borrowing power for all purposes to ten per cent. of the value of the property. This clause had been inserted at the expressed wish of Peterborough, and he did not anticipate much difficulty in having it changed, should the town wish it. He thought there would be nothing very serious in giving the town power to borrow money beyond the 10 per cent. The town's borrowing limit had been extended by the admission of Ashburnham, which had been in a better position, proportionately, than Peterborough.

Mr. Garvin expressed his opinion that it would be a fatal policy for the town to throw out a project of this kind. Peterborough was not going to stand still. He did not know of another town in the province that has as great opportunities as Peterborough. He believed the population would increase at the rate of 1,000 a year, for a number of years to come, and if this were the case the assessed value of the town would increase proportionately, consequently the borrowing power would become greater. It was gratifying to him to see such practical sugar manufacturers as Mr. Gordon and his associates taking an interest in the local industry, which he was confident was going to succeed. If it cannot succeed here it is impossible for it to succeed anywhere.

MR. GORDON'S VIEWS.

Mr. Gordon addressing the members of the Council said that if the proposition were accepted by the town he would prefer to see some good local man take an interest in the Company, and accept the presidency. He had enough to do in his own factory, and would be content to act merely as a director and have some one here take the office of president. He would be just as well satisfied to have the town guarantee only $50,000, if three local men would also guarantee $25,000 each. All he wanted was to have sufficient money in sight to have the concern placed in a position where the business could be carried through.

Ald. McWilliams thought that the fact that if the proposition carried it would bring the town near to the end of its borrowing power, while it might be thought to be sufficient reason for voting against it, it should not be an insurmountable barrier in submitting the question to the people.

Ald. Adams said he thought all the members of the council were perfectly willing to submit it to the people. The onus of carrying it would, of course, be left to the company, and if the latter felt qualified for the task the council was accepting no responsibility.

MR. GARVIN CONFIDENT

Mr. Garvin replying, said that he felt perfectly confident that it would carry. He had canvassed a number of the prominent citizens, and was assured that the proposition would be supported by them. If the council refused to submit the question to the ratepayers the onus for withholding assistance from the industry would rest with them. The principle upon which the proposition was based was new, but he thought it was the right one. There are two cardinal principles which should govern municipalities in granting aid to industries. The first was to fix the assessment of the concern, and the second was to guarantee the bonds of the company. This, he felt, was the best policy, and one which should be adopted by both Governments and municipalities.

The Mayor said that he feared Mr. Garvin hardly understood the position of the council. The members were not opposed to the scheme. There was a doubt in their minds, however, as to whether the proposal as it then stood would carry. It was not in the interest of the company to impose conditions which prevent the bylaw from being carried by the ratepayers, and all the council wanted to do was to safeguard the interests of the town.

A NEW PROPOSITION

Mr. Garvin here made a new proposition, which was to the effect that the company would pay back $50,000 at the end of three years which, he thought, should meet the objection raised by the members of the council. He pointed out that the company would still have $200,000 stock to sell, and the Government bounty would in itself give sufficient to enable the $50,000 to be paid in three years.

The Mayor thought this would to a large extent remove one of the objections.

Mr. Gordon said he thought it a bad policy for a new industry to attempt to make heavy payments during the first one or two years, as it was a heavy handicap. He thought there would be no trouble, however, in paying $50,000 in three years, as Mr. Garvin had suggested, as the company could easily get that amount from the bounty.

In answer to Mr. Hall, town solicitor, Mr. Garvin said that if the company did not pay the $50,000 in three years as agreed, the plant could be sold by the town.

NO TROUBLE TO INDUCE FARMERS TO GROW BEETS.

Mr. T. M. Hunter was asked if he thought there would be any difficulty in inducing the farmers to grow the beets and replied that he was perfectly satisfied that in two or three years five or six thousand acres could be grown in this vicinity. The beets grown here had tested so high that they had paid the farmer from $50 to $60 per acre.

At this juncture Ald. McWilliams moved the first modification to the agreement to the effect that $50,000 be repaid in three years, and the balance in seven equal annual instalments. This was seconded by Ald Adams, and carried.

Ald. Morrison then introduced another feature. He said that it would depend largely on the details of the bylaw, whether it were carried or not. He believed if the bonds were issued at once after the bylaw were carried, and the money placed in a chartered bank, in trust for the Sugar Company, to be paid out to the company at the completion of the factory, and when it was in operation, the people would look upon the plan with greater favour. By the adoption of this method the Sugar Company would be guaranteed that the money would be forthcoming as soon as they had fulfilled the conditions.

PAY MONEY IN INSTALMENTS

Mr. Garvin asked what objection the town could have to paying the money in instalments as the machinery arrived.

Mr. Gordon said he thought Dr. Morrison's proposition a good one from the town's standpoint, but rather a hard one from the standpoint of the other men who were putting money into the company. They would thus be called upon to provide practically double the amount they had agreed upon. He figured the expenditure which the company would be called upon to make, as necessitating the early payment of the money. The plant they would buy would cost $156,000 in Holland; $35,000 would be required to pack, ship and instal it in the factory here; it would also require $25,000 to complete the building which would practically exhaust the capital of the company. He thought it hardly fair to require the factory to be in operation before the advance was made.

THE SECOND MODIFICATION

Mr. Garvin then suggested the second modification, that $50,000 be paid when the machinery arrives, and the remaining $50,000 when the factory is in operation, which, on motion of Ald. Adams, seconded by Ald. Rush was adopted as a modification of the original proposition.

Ald. McWilliams then moved that the bylaw embodying these modifications to the original proposition of Mr. D. A. Gordon, be submitted to the ratepayers on May 5th, which was carried.

Mr. Garvin assured the council that the company would at once take steps to bring the property upon which the factory site is located, into the corporation.

The Sugar Company representatives were willing to give the Council representation on the Board of Directors during the length of time in which the Company's liability to the town extends.

LEAVE TAKING OF BRO. JOS. JONES.

Departing Member of Diamond L. O. L., No. 80, Honoured.

Presented with an Address Before Leaving for the West Tendered a Complimentary Banquet.

A special meeting of Diamond Loyal Orange Lodge, No. 80, was held in the Orange Hall last evening for the purpose of taking leave of W. Bro. Joseph Jones, who leaves this evening for Manitoba, where in the future he intends to reside. The Brethren turned out in goodly numbers to demonstrate their appreciation of the services rendered the Association by Bro. Jones. A beautiful Past Master's Jewel, accompanied by the following address, was presented on behalf of the lodge:

T. W. Bro. Joseph Jones, P.M., P.C.M., Peterborough, Ont.,—

Dear Sir and Brother: We, your brethren of Diamond Loyal Orange Lodge, No. 80, feel that we would be very ungrateful did we not avail our elves of the opportunity, on the eve of your departure for Manitoba, to express to you our deep sense of regret at your departure from amongst us.

On the 7th of August, 1894, you were affiliated with us, and at once took an active interest in our lodge and the work of our beloved association. On the 4th December in the same year you were elected and became our W.M., to which office you were elected by acclamation for the succeeding five years, during which time you faithfully discharged the important duties in connection therewith. In the District and County Lodged you have also taken a deep interest, and have been assigned positions of trust and responsibility, including that of W. C. M., to which office you were elected at the annual meeting, held on the 6th February, 1900, and discharged the duties pertaining to it to the great satisfaction of your brethren. Although you have served in the highest offices in the gift of your brethren, you have never failed to shoulder the burden as a pleasing duty to speed on the good work. The whole jurisdiction of the Order is much indebted for your able and valuable services. But it is more especially in our own primary lodge that we have many good reasons to appreciate your unceasing energies for the past ten years towards the welfare and progress of this lodge and the noble principles we espouse. No matter how dark or how calm and bright the future appeared for us, your buoyant hope and encouraging words have cheered us on in our work till now, we are proud to say, we have never been in a more healthy state, both morally and financially, than at the present time, most of which is largely attributable to your untiring and unselfish efforts.

Kindly accept this Past Master's jewel as a slight token of our appreciation and affection and the esteem in which we hold you as a brother so well and truly tried. It is the earnest wish of us all that you may be long spared to wear it and go in and out amongst your brethren feeling that you bear with it the warm affection and hearty good will of us all.

We wish you and your good wife and family every health, happiness and prosperity in your new home, ever remembering that we will often think of you. And when we have done with this earthly lodge may we all be admitted to that Tabernacle not made with hands, but eternal in the heavens

Signed on behalf of the Lodge,

R. B. McGILL, W. M.

W. H. G. ARMSTRONG, R.S.

Bro. W. H. G. Armstron read the address and Bro. J. B. McWilliams made the presentation.

Bro. Jones made a suitable reply, thanking the members for their thoughtful kindness and their sentiments as expressed in the address, and concluded by wishing the lodge continued prosperity, and assuring them that he would always remember the many pleasant hours spent in the lodge room.

Short speeches were afterwards made by Wor. Bro. R. B. McGill, Col. J. W. Miller, Ald. Jos. Patton, A. McCarthy, John A. McWilliams, David Hamilton, Robert Weir, Geo. Redding, John H. Beggs, Robt. Wilson, J. Garside, Wm. G. Bartley, John Cunningham, W. A. Kindred, J. B. McWilliams, W. H. G. Armstrong, and A. Nesbitt, all expressing their appreciation of Bro. Jones' services to the Orange Association, and No. 80 in particular, and wishing him prosperity in his new home in the west.

Later in the evening the Black Knights tendered Bro. Jones a banquet in Long's palm parlours, and about twenty persons were present, Bro. Batten presiding. The toast to the King was enthusiastically honoured. "The Orange Order," proposed by Bro. R. McGill, was well responded to by Bro. R. Weir. Bro. Wilson proposed the toast of "Our Guest," to which Bro. Jos. Jones appropriately replied. The chairman proposed "The Host," and Mr. Harry Long responded in a few fitting words. The very enjoyable event was brought to a close with the National Anthem.

POSITIVE INDICATION OF SPRING'S ARRIVAL.

Englishmen Already Begin to Invade the Town.

There are many signs which as many people say denote the advent of spring and to try and persuade some of these that their special indication is an erroneous one would be next to impossible. But in Canada there is no surer sign than the arrival of the Englishman, fresh from the Old Land. When one sees Englishmen standing on every corner of the street, their hands thrust deep down into their trousers pockets, and a supercilious expression on his features as he watches the "bloomin' Colonials," then one can be assured that spring has certainly arrived. And the Englishmen have invaded Peterborough this month. They can be seen at any time walking leisurely in two's or threes along the streets, speaking loud enough to tell everybody that he has just come from across the water. An advertisement in Thursday's Examiner for "a man," to call at this office, brought no less than nine applicants and no less than six of these were Englishmen. Some twenty men of that nationality have arrived in town during the past week and are looking for employment. The most of them are mechanics, machinists, carpenters, etc., and apparently the type which has made Peterborough a coal, is a very desirable kind of emigrant.

KEEP LITTLE ONES WELL.

There ought not tob e any sickly, fretful, sleepless children — there would not be if mothers gave their little ones an occasional dose of Baby's Own Tablets. The little ones are sickly and fretful and sleepless, usually because of some stomach, bowel or teething trouble. These and the other minor ills of little ones are speedily relieved and promptly cured by Baby's Own Tablets and the little one thrives and grows plump, sleeps well at night and lets the mother get her much needed rest as well. Mrs. R. M. LaRue, Mountain, Ont., says, "I can recommend Baby's Own Tablets to all mothers who have cross or delicate children. I do not know how I could get along without them. Mother, isn't it worth your while to give this medicine just one trial? If your medicine dealer does not keep the Tablets send 25 cents to The Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont., and the Tablets will be sent by mail post paid.

Russia, China and Japan.

On Monday evening next in the T. A.S. Hall, Mr. Hampden Burnham will lecture on the above mentioned countries, making special reference to the causes of the present crisis in the Far East. He will give a short review of the history of the Eastern people, and a brief description of the three countries, following them up with a glance at present conditions and their causes. An excellent musical programme will be presented in which Mr. J. Laurence has kindly consented to take part.

See the play "Aunt Jerusha Dow's Family Album" under the direction of Miss Alma McCollum. St. John's S. S., Tuesday April 12th. Excellent Musical Programme. Admission 25c.

A PRESENTATION TO MR. AND MRS. GRAHAM.

Pleasant Affair at "Social" in St. John's S. S.

Given Jointly by Girls' Guild and Young Men's Guild—A Pleasant Musical Programme.

Notwithstanding last night's storm there was a large number at the "social" given in St. John's Sunday School Room last night under the auspices of the Girls' Guild and Young Men's Guild of that church. A short musical programme was opened by some gramophone selections, and music during the evening was supplied by the Halpany family. Mr. Hague Sawers was heard with pleasure in a vocal selection. A violin duet by the Misses Burnett and Wallis was greatly appreciated. Miss Dawson also contributed a song.

Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Graham were presented with a handsome Morris chair, and the following address, read by Mr. Cluxton:—

Dear Mr. Graham:

The Young Men's Guild of St. John's church, with the hearty co-operation of the Girls' Guild have arranged this evening's entertainment in order that we might have the pleasure of meeting Mrs. Graham and of extending to you our most hearty congratulations upon your recent marriage.

The cheerful manner in which you have always lent a ready hand in carrying to a successful issue the Guild's various undertakings, has won for yourself an extra share of that good will and Christian fellowship which exists amongst its members, that we ask you to accept this Morris chair as an evidence of our good wishes.

Permit us to wish you and your wife perfect happiness in your future life and may this small gift add a contribution to the many comforts which may be yours.

The Young Men's Guild of St. John's,
W. HAROLD CLUXTON,
President.

Mr. Graham replied in a few words thanking the Guild, on behalf of himself and his wife, for their presentation.

After this refreshments were served and the event brought to a close by all singing Auld Lang Syne.

Mr. W. J. Robson, business representative for Mr. Charles A. E. Harriss, of Ottawa, who is responsible for the Canadian tour of Miss Muriel Foster, the great English contralto, and Emile Renaud, the French pianist, is in the city to-day, and in conversation about Miss Foster, said, "Probably no artist in England has had her name brought before the public so prominently since she obtained a three years' scholarship at the Royal College of Music, as Miss Foster. She has stepped from victory to victory and is claimed by many critics in England as now the greatest contralto, some placing her higher even than Clara Butt or Ada Crossley, but in any event, she ranks with these two splendid artists. Miss Foster has a magnetism of personality and beauty, and form, in addition to her splendid voice. In America her engagements have been of a very high order, as she sang with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Theodore Thomas' Chicago Orchestra, and other great organizations. She will be assisted by Mr. Emile Renaud a very admirable French pianist."

The appearance here in the George street Methodist church, Thursday, April 14th, is awaited with delight.

SUCCESSFUL SERIES OF BOYS' MEETING.

The Last was Held Last Night in the Y. M. C. A. Hall.

Despite the rain there was a large attendance of boys at the closing meeting of the series that have been going on all week in the Y.M.C.A. Mr. Aplin spoke on "A Boy's Inheritance," making the same telling impression that has marked all the talks of the week. During the evening Master Garvin Markle sang, "Over the River," and and "Whoever Receiveth Him," and Mr. Norman Jolliffe sang "Almost Persuaded." Both soloists were listened to with deep attention.

Do you know why they use yeast in white flour bread?

When white flour is wet it forms a compact mass, and if cooked thus, as in some kinds of pastry, and eaten, the digestive juices would only act on the outside of each morsel and the process of digestion is greatly prolonged. So yeast is used to make it porous. Yeast, however, consumes a portion of the gluten in the flour, which is already greatly deficient, being lost in the bolting.

Now

A SEA SONG.

A wet sheet and a flowing sea,
And wind that follows fast,
And fills the white and rustling sail,
And bends the gallant mast;
And bends the gallant mast, my boys,
While like the eagle free,
Away the good ship flies, and leaves
Old England on the lee.

Oh, for a soft and gentle wind!
I heard a fair one cry;
But give to me the roaring breeze
And white waves heaving high;
And white waves heaving high, my boys,
The good ship light and free;
The world of waters is our home,
And merry men are we.

There's tempest in yon horned moon,
And lightning in yon cloud!
And hark the music, mariners!
The wind is piping loud;
The wind is piping loud, my boys,
The lightning flashing free
While the hollow oak our palace is,
Our heritage the sea.

Who Was Nero.

In the days when Sir Charles Gavan Duffy was a leading figure in Victorian politics there sat in the Melbourne Parliament a wealthy but not well informed butcher. The Chief Secretary of the day was deprecating the attitude of the leader of the Opposition, whose conduct was, he declared, worse than Nero's.

"Who was Nero?" interjected the knight of the cleaver, with equal scorn and sincerity.

"Who was Nero?" replied the delighted Chief Secretary. "The honorable gentleman ought to know. Nero was a celebrated Roman butcher."

Dislike for Fish.

The peasants and the poor of Germany in general express a great dislike of fish. This is due to the fact that fresh fish is so expensive there that only the well-to-do can afford to buy it.

NEWFOUNDLAND WRECKERS.

Recent Stripping of a Stranded Schooner Recalls Some Ancient Lore.

It recalls old times to read of how a party of Newfoundland fishermen recently boarded and stripped a schooner that by some rare chance went ashore on their terrible coast without getting ground into little pieces. That was their regular custom in such cases in years not very remote, not because they were a bad, piratical lot, which they never were, but because that custom, once common to every seaboard, lingered in Newfoundland with many another of equally respectable age longer than in most other places. The Newfoundlander—who, by the way, always accents the name of his island on the ultimate syllable and that of himself on the penultimate—retained until just the other day the inclination of his ancestors and ours to look upon lighthouses as a wicked interference with the designs of Providence in the matter of wrecks and consequent profit to a 'longshore population, and though it has been some years since he has been charged with actual efforts to increase the natural harvest of the cliff foot by luring ships ashore or quietly disposing of stray survivors who might be inconvenient claimants for salvaged property, it is not remarkable that he still decides hastily when the question arises whether a stranded vessel belongs to its owners or to the first to reach it. In this instance, such vivacity of judgment has been followed by the imposition of heavy fines, with an alternative of imprisonment which the fishermen will probably be compelled to accept. The comparative certainty, nowadays, of incurring the necessity to make that gloomy choice has had a marked effect upon even the most conservative of the dwellers about the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and the business of "wrecking" will soon be there exactly what it is on kinder shores. Which is a loss as well as a gain, since it means the complete disappearance of a phase of life of large value to the artists of one sort and another who have been wont to earn honest bread by exploiting humanity's interest in the tragica land picturesque.

Paul Kane and His Pictures.

Much interest was renewed in a Canadian artist and his works by the exhibition of Paul Kane's paintings, which the Lieut.-Governor opened in Toronto on Saturday, March 5, under the auspices of the Woman's Canadian Historical Association.

Paul Kane was born in 1810 of humble parentage in the little town of York, now Toronto. His youth was spent here, and, as he tells us in his autobiography, from his earliest years he took the greatest interest in the Indians, of whom many wandering bands were to be found in the neighborhood. As years passed he developed a talent for drawing and became a portrait painter, which vocation he followed for some years in Canada and the United States. In 1841 he went to Europe and passed four years in the study of art in the galleries of England, France and Italy. Returning to Canada in 1845, he determined to devote himself to the dream of his boyhood, the painting of a series of pictures illustrative of the North American Indian; and the scenery of that vast unknown region between the Great Lakes and the Pacific Ocean. In order to accomplish his purpose, he left Toronto on June 17, 1845, with a slender outfit, including his portfolio, a box of paints, his gun and a stock of ammunition. He traveled far and wide for years, sketch book in hand, and lived among the red men, learning their manners and customs, studying their characteristics and taking portraits of their chiefs and warriors, and medicine men, as well as of their wives and daughters. He skirted the shores of the Upper Lakes, and Hudson's Bay, thence to the Red River settlement; the Valley of the Saskatchewan, and the great buffalo prairies of the west. Crossing the Rocky Mountains, he followed the course of the Columbia River to Oregon, Puget Sound and Vancouver Island. Scarcely, as he says, meeting a white man or hearing his own language. Fishing, hunting scenes, games and dances were limned by his pencil, and from these sketches he executed the series of oil paintings which were purchased fifty years ago by the late Hon. G. W. Allan, and which now, by the kindness of their present owner, Mr. E. B. Osler, have been placed on exhibition in Toronto.

AN OLD SUNDAY SCHOOL.

One of the Many Links With the Past Which Makes Old London So Interesting to Moderns.

London's oldest Sunday school owed its inception and formation to the efforts of a Hoxton shoemaker, by name James Kemp. The work started by him (at first single-handed) so far back as 1784—later in connection with Hoxton Academy Chapel—has its quarters now in association with the Old street New Tabernacle. In tracing the history of the school over a hundred and twenty years one is forcibly reminded of Emerson's saying that every institution is only the prolonged shadow of a man.

While Robert Raikes, of Gloucester, was busy working out ideas about Sabbath instruction for the poor and creating sympathy for the enterprise, James Kemp Sunday after Sunday in his little home had gathered Hoxton waifs and strays around him, teaching them to read from the Bible. Fellow Dissenters, chiefly of the lowly order, helped the simple-hearted shoemaker, and the work grew. Raikes' labors were noised abroad in religious circles, and James Kemp, full of enthusiasm, actually walked from Hoxton to Gloucestershire to confer with the man now universally recognized as the founder of Sunday schools. The friendly counsel of Raikes stimulated Kemp, if possible, to more persistent effort in his godly work.

The Hoxton shoemaker also found sympathy and encouragement from a half-forgotten Christian worthy, William Fox, the founder of the Sunday School Society, started in September, 1785. Fox, a prosperous Cheapside Mercer and draper, put himself in touch with Raikes, who gave him valuable aid in forming the association. Among others who gave practical sympathy were Jonas Hanway, Cowper the poet, William Wilberforce, Granville Sharp, Henry Thornton, of Clapham, and Samuel Hoare, of Hampstead. James Kemp attended their conferences in the Poultry, and also in Cateaton street, and his labors were cited and adduced to show what an individual might do in carrying through the work they all had at heart.

But Kemp's labors were to find fresh and larger developments. In 1783 a college was opened at Mile-end for giving a liberal education to Congregational ministers. It was afterwards removed to Hoxton and was known as Hoxton Academy. A small chapel in connection was erected in 1796, the opening sermon being preached by the celebrated William Jay, of Bath. The cause prospered and a more commodious place of worship was opened in 1800. At the enlargement in 1804 and again at that of 1806 James Kemp was still to the fore with a single plea, "Don't forget the children." Still engaged in his old work—simple, pious, persistent—he kept this object ever before the attention of the members, and in 1814 the schools of Hoxton Academy Chapel were opened. It was thus that the father of London Sunday schools saw the object of his life completed.

NATURE'S REMEDIES.

The Medicines That Are Used by the Backwoods Folks.

"When the bush farmer becomes afflicted with any of the numerous trifling ills which make mankind wretched," said the returned visitor from our northern country, "he does not waste much time on doctors, but goes straight to the woods or the attic for nature's own remedies. There is one old man whom I have met with pack basket on shoulder and shears and a rough board stool in his mittened hands going after yarrow, which, dried, is a standby for coughs when it has been made into a wicked looking brew. Fir balsam, coaxed drop by drop from the blisters which swell on the balsam fir at full moon, is a sovereign remedy for chest and lung complaints.

"Gravel weed, by which name they insult trailing arbutus, is excellent for the complaint which gives it its name, and bladder root has a desirable effect on the kidneys and neighboring organs. Sage tea, containing a little summer savory, is efficacious for worms in children, for which belmonia, also steeped, is also used. Sunflower seeds, steeped, strained and sweetened with molasses, will cure the whooping cough. Horseradish leaves, wilted and bound on the face and back of the neck, will drive away neuralgia, and a nutmeg, bored and tied around the neck, will keep it away. The nutmeg must be renewed about once every six weeks.

"Onions sliced, pounded and placed in a cloth and laid over the affected part will draw out inflammation. A red onion halved and with one part slightly scooped out and the cup placed over a carbuncle or a boil will speedily remove the pus and has saved life.

"There are many more of these simple remedies in the north woods pharmacopoeia which the wise ones have at their fingers' ends, and if they are not more widely used and money kept in the overalls of the thrifty natives it is because a lenient and more fortunate fate presides over the incomes of the medicos."

LIPTON'S TEAS

For healthfulness, cleanliness, and a steady continuous temperature there is no heating system for the home that compares with hot water. The is the acme of hot water heating. It supplies the house with even warmth, keeping the atmosphere pure and healthful. It is compact, very easily run and a great fuel economizer.

In connection with Oxford Radiators it makes a perfect heating system for the home. The radiators are artistically designed and can be decorated in harmony with the color scheme of the room. Write for our booklets.

Purified by Suffering

BY MARY J. HOLMES.

"My poor boy, it is worse than I feared," Mrs. Cameron said, with a little sigh, while Katy, with a great gasping sob, tried to rise and go to them, to tell them she was there—the mopish Katy, who made her home so like a funeral to her husband.

But her limbs refused to move, and she sank back powerless in her chair, compelled to listen to things which no true husband would ever say to a mother of his wife, especially when that wife's error consisted principally in mourning for the child which but for her imprudence might have been living then." These were Wilford's very words, and though Katy had once expected him to say them, they came upon her now with a dreadful shock, making her view herself as the murderer of her child, and thus blunting the pain she might otherwise have felt as he went on to speak of Silverton and its inhabitants just as he would not have spoken had he known she was so near. Then, encouraged by his mother, he talked again of her in a way which made her poor aching heart throb as she whispered, sadly: "He is disappointed in me. I do not come up to all that he expected. I do very well, considering my low origin, but I am not what his wife should be."

Wilford had not said all this, but Katy inferred it, and every nerve quivered with anguish as the wild wish came over her that she had died on that day when she sat in the summer grass at home waiting for Wilford Cameron. Poor Katy! she thought her cup of sorrow full, when, alas! only a drop had as yet been poured into it. But it was filling fast, and Mrs. Cameron's words: "It might have been better with Genevra," was the first outpouring of the overwhelming torrent which for a moment bore her life and sense away. She thought they meant her baby—the little Genevra sleeping under the snow in Silverton—and her white lips answered, "Yes, it would be better," before Wilford's voice was heard saying, as he always said: "No I have never wished Genevra in Katy's place though I have sometimes wondered what the result would have been had I learned in season how much I wronged her."

Was heaven and earth coming together, or what made Katy's brain so dizzy and the room so dark, as, with head bent forward and lips apart, she strained her ear to catch every word of the conversation which followed, and in which she saw glimpses of that leaf offered her once to read, and from which she had promised not to shrink should it ever be thrust upon her? But she did shrink, oh! so shudderingly, holding up her hands and striking them through the empty air as if she would thrust aside the terrible spectre risen so suddenly before her. She had heard all that she cared to hear then. Another word and she should surely die where she was, within hearing of the voices still talking of Genevra. Stopping her ears to shut out the dreadful sound, she tried to think what she should do. To gain the door and reach the street was her desire, and throwing on her wrappings she went noiselessly into the hall, and carefully turning the lock and closing the door behind her, she found herself alone in the street in the dusk of a November night. But Katy was not afraid, and drawing her hood closely over her face she sped on until her own house was reached, alarming Esther with her frightened face, but explaining that she had been taken suddenly ill and returned before dinner.

"Mr. Cameron will be here soon," she said. "I do not need anything to-night, so you can leave me alone and go where you like—to the theatre, if you choose. I heard you say you wished to go. Here is the money for you and Phillips," and handing a bill to the puzzled Esther, she dismissed her from the room.

Meanwhile, at the elder Cameron's, no one had a suspicion of Katy's recent presence, for the girl who had admitted her had gone to visit a sick sister, with whom she was to spend the night. Thus Katy's secret was safe, and Wilford, when at last he bade his mother good-bye and started for home, was not prepared for the livid face, the bloodshot eyes, and the strange, unnatural look which met him at the threshold.

Katy answered his ring herself, her hands grasping his fiercely, and dragging him up the stairs to her own room, where, more like a maniac than Katy Cameron, she confronted him with the startling question:

"Who is Genevra Lambert? It is time I knew before committing greater sin. Tell me, Wilford, who is she?"

She was standing before him, her slight figure seeming to expand into a greater height, the features glowing with strong excitement, and her hot breath coming hurriedly through her dilated nostrils, but never opening the pale lips set so firmly together. There was something terrible in her look and attitude, and it startled Wilford, who recoiled a moment from her, scarcely able to recognize the Katy hitherto so gentle and quiet. She had learned his secret, but the facts must have been distorted, he knew, or she had never been so agitated. From beneath his hair the great sweat-drops came pouring, as he tried to approach her and take the uplifted hands, motioning him aside with the words: "Not touch me; no, not touch me till you have told me who is Genevra Lambert."

She repeated the question twice, and rallying all his strength Wilford answered her at last: "Genevra Lambert was my wife!"

"I thought so," and the next moment Katy lay in Wilford's arms, dead, as he feared, for there was no motion about the eyelids, no motion that he could perceive about the pulse or heart, as he laid the rigid form upon the bed and then bent every energy to restore her, even though he feared that it was hopeless.

If possible he would prefer that no one should intrude upon them now, and he chafed her icy hands and bathed her face until the eyes unclosed again, but with a shudder turned away as they met his. Then, as she grew stronger and remembered the past, she started up, exclaiming: "If Genevra Lambert is your wife, what then am I? Oh, Wilford, how could you make me not a wife, when I trusted and loved you so much?"

He knew she was laboring under a mistake, and he did not wonder at the violence of her emotions if she believed he had wronged her so cruelly, and coming nearer to her he said: "Genevra Lambert was my wife once but is not now, for she is dead. Do you hear me, Katy? Genevra died years ago, when you were a little girl playing in the fields at home."

By mentioning Silverton, he hoped to bring back something of her olden look, in place of the expression which troubled and frightened him. The experiment was successful, and great tears gathered in Katy's eyes, washing out the wild, unnatural gleam, while the lips whispered: "And it was her picture Juno saw. She told me the night I came, and I tried to question you. You remember?"

Wilford did remember it, and he replied: "Yes, but I did not suppose you knew I had a picture. You have been a good wife, Katy, never to mention it since then," and he tried to kiss her forehead, but she covered it with her hands, saying sadly: "Not yet, Wilford, I cannot bear it now. I must know the whole about Genevra. Why didn't you tell me before? Why have you deceived me so?"

"Katy," and Wilford grew very earnest in his attempts to defend himself, "do you remember that day we sat under the buttonwood tree, and you promised to be mine? Try and recall the incidents of that hour and see if I did not hint at some things in the past which I wished had been otherwise, and did not offer to show you the blackest page of my whole life, but you would not see it. Was that so, Katy?"

"Yes," she answered, and he continued: "You said you were satisfied to take me as I was. You would not hear evil against me, and so I acquiesced, bidding you not shrink back if ever the time should come when you must read that page."

Wilford did not like to be censured, neither did he like to censure himself, and now that Katy was out of danger and comparatively calm, he began to build about himself a fortress of excuses for having kept from her the secret of his life.

"When did you hear of Genevra?" he asked.

Katy told him when and how she heard the story, and then added: "Oh, Wilford, why did you keep it from me? What was there about it wrong, and where is she buried?"

"In Alnwick, at St. Mary's," Katy ford answered, determining now to hold nothing back, and by his abruptness wounding Katy afresh.

"In Alnwick, at St. Mary's," Katy cried. "Then I have seen her grave, and that is why you were so anxious to get there—so unwilling to go away. Oh, if I were lying there instead of Genevra, it would be so much better, so much better."

Katy was sobbing now, in a moaning, plaintive way, which touched Wilford tenderly, and smoothing her tangled hair, he said: "I would not exchange my Katy for all the Genevras in the world. She was never as dear to me as you. I was but a boy, and did not know my mind, when I met her. Shall I tell you about her now? Can you bear to hear the story of Genevra?"

There was a nod of assent, and Katy turned her face to the wall, clasping her hands tightly together, while Wilford drew his chair to her side and began to read the page he should have read to her long before.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

I was little more than nineteen years of age when I left Harvard College and went abroad with my only brother, the John or Jack of whom you have so often heard. Both himself and wife were in delicate health, and it was hoped a voyage across the sea would do them good. For nearly a year we were in various parts of England, stopping for two months at Brighton, where, among the visitors, was a widow from the vicinity of Alnwick, and with her an orphan niece, whose dazzling beauty attracted my youthful fancy. She was not happy with her aunt, upon whom she was wholly dependent, and my sympathies were all enlisted, when, with the tears shining in her lustrous eyes, she one day accidentally stumbled upon her trouble and told me how wretched she was, asking if in America there was not something for her to do.

"It was at this time that Jamie was born, and Mary, the girl who went out with us, was married to an Englishman, making it necessary for Hatty to find some one to take her place. Hearing of this, Genevra came one day, and offered herself as half companion, half waiting-maid to Hatty. Anything was preferable to the life she led, she said, pleading so hard that Hatty, after an interview with the old aunt—a purse-proud, vulgar woman, who seemed glad to be rid of her charge—consented to receive her, and Genevra became one of our family, an equal rather than a menial, whom Hatty treated with as much consideration as if she had been a sister. I wish I could tell you how beautiful Genevra Lambert was at that period of her life, with her brilliant English complexion her eyes so full of poetry and passion, her perfect features, and, more than all, the wondrous smile, which would have made a plain face handsome.

"Of course I came to love her, and loved her all the more for the opposition I knew my family would throw in the way of my marrying the daughter of an English apothecary, and one who was voluntarily filling a servant's place. But with my mother across the sea, I could do anything, and when Genevra told me of a base fellow, who, since she was a child, had sought her for his wife, and still pursued her with his letters, my passions were roused, and I offered myself at once. Her answer was a decided refusal. She knew her position, she said, and she knew mine, just as she knew the nature of the feeling which prompted me to act thus toward her. Although just my age, she was older in judgment and experience, and she seemed to understand the difference between our relative positions. I was not indifferent to her, she said, and were she my equal her answer might be otherwise than the decided no.

"Madly in love, and fancying I could not live without her, I besieged her with letters, some of which she returned unopened, while on others she wrote a few hurried lines, calling me a boy, who did not know my own mind, and asking what my friends would say.

"But not to dwell too long upon those days, which seem to me now like a dream, we went to Scotland and were married privately, for I won her to this at last.

"My brother's failing health, as well as Hatty's, prevented them from suspecting what was going on, and when at last we went to Italy they had no idea that Genevra was my wife. At Rome her beautiful face attracted much attention from tourists and residents, among whom were a few young men, who, looking upon her as Jamie's nurse, or at most a companion for his mother, made no attempt to disguise their admiration. For this I had no redress except in an open avowal of the relation in which I stood to her, and this I could not then do, for the longer it was deferred the harder I found it to acknowledge her my wife. I loved her devotedly, and that perhaps was one great cause of the jealousy which began to spring up and embitter my life.

"I do not now believe that Genevra was at heart a coquette. She was very fond of admiration, but when she saw how much I was disturbed she made an effort to avoid those who flattered her, but her manner was unfortunate, while her voice—the sweetest I ever heard—was calculated to invite rather than repel attention. As the empress of the world, she would have won and kept the homage of mankind, from the humblest beggar in the street to the king upon the throne, and had I been older I should have been proud of what then was my greatest annoyance. But I was a mere boy—and I watched her jealously, until a new element of disquiet was presented to me in the shape of a ruffianly looking fellow, who was frequently seen about the premises, and with whom I once found Genevra in close converse, starting and blushing guiltily when I came upon her, while her companion went swiftly from my sight.

"It was an old English acquaintance, who was poor and asking charity," she said, when questioned, but her manner led me to think there was something wrong, particularly as I saw her with him again, and thought she held his hand.

"It was evident that my brother would never see America again, and at his request my mother came to us, in company with a family from Boston, reaching us two weeks before he died. From the first she disliked Genevra, and suspected the liking between us, but never dreaming of the truth until a week after Jack's death, when in a fit of anger at Genevra for listening to an English artist, who had asked to paint her picture, the story of the marriage came out, and like a child dependent on its mother for advice, I asked: 'What shall I do?'

"You know mother, and can in part understand how she would scorn a girl who, though born to better things, was still found in the capacity of a waiting-maid. Sister Hatty, who loved Genevra, did all she could to heal the growing difference between us, but I trusted mother most. I believed that what she said was right, and so matters grew worse, until one night, the last we spent in Rome, I missed Genevra from our rooms, and starting in quest of her, found her in a little flower garden back of our dwelling. There, under the deep shadow of a tree, and partly concealed from view, she stood with her arm around the neck of the same rough-looking man who had been there before. She did not see me as I watched her while she parted with him, suffering him to kiss her hand and forehead as, he said, 'Good-bye, my darling.'

THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS OF SILVER PLATE IN THE WORLD

We Shall Buy a Million

Bottles of Liquozone and Give Them to the Sick.

We have purchased for $100,000 the American rights to Liquozone. We thus control the only way to kill germs in the body and end a germ disease. We want the sick to know this product, and at once. So we make this remarkable offer. We will buy a million 50c bottles and give them to a million sick ones. Will you—if you need it—let us buy one for you?

Costs $500,000

We publish this offer in every great newspaper in America. The cost of the offer, we expect, will reach $500,000. We pay that price because it seems the only way to quickly let the sick know what Liquozone does.

The greatest value of Liquozone lies in the fact that it kills germs in the body without killing the tissues, too. And no man knows another way to do it. Any drug that kills germs is a poison, and it cannot be taken internally. Every physician knows that medicine is almost beipless in any germ disease.

Liquozone does in germ troubles what all the drugs, all the skill in the world, cannot do without it. It cures diseases which medicine never cures.

Acts Like Oxygen

Liquozone is the result of a process which men have spent over 20 years in perfecting. Its virtues are derived solely from gas, made in large part from the best oxygen producers. By a process requiring immense apparatus and 14 days' time, these gases are made part of the liquid product.

The result is a product that does what oxygen does. Oxygen gas, as you know, is the very source of vitality. Liquozone is a vitalizing tonic with which no other known product can compare. But germs are vegetables; and Liquozone—like an excess of oxygen—is deadly to vegetal matter. Yet this wonderful product which no germ can resist, is, to the human body the most essential element of life.

Germ Diseases

These are the known germ diseases. All that medicine can do for these troubles is to help Nature overcome the germs, wherever they are, and the results are indirect and uncertain. Liquozone kills the germs, wherever they are, and the results are inevitable. By destroying the cause of the trouble, it invariably ends the disease, and forever.

IT IS IMPORTANT

that the walls of a room should be free to breathe so that the imprisoned inmates may do so. Dr. De Wolfe, late Commissioner of Health for the City of Chicago says: "The free passage of air through the walls of living-rooms is an important element in proper ventilation. The practice of re-papering rooms by layer upon layer of wall-paper, made adhesive by glue or paste, which adds a decomposing material to the nasty process, can receive nothing but condemnation from sanitarians. The perfect wall for domestic habitation is of material which resists decomposition in every form, and which permits the passage of air. Paper does not supply these conditions."

CHURCH'S

ALABASTINE

"Love lightens labor," the saying runs, and in a sense it is true. But even love cannot lighten labor or make it easy for the woman who is in constant suffering from inflammation, bearing-down pains or other womanly diseases. The one thing that can make work easy for women is sound health, and Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the thing that will give sound health to sick women.

Dr. Pierce has so much faith in his "Prescription" that he offers to pay $500 in legal money of the United States for any case of Leucorrhea, Female Weakness, Prolapsus, or Falling of Womb which he cannot cure. All he asks is a fair and reasonable trial of his means of cure.

"I suffered from female weakness for five months," writes Miss Belle Hedrick, of Nye, Putnam Co. W. Va. "I was advised by a good physician but he never seemed to do me any good. I wrote to Dr. R. V. Pierce for advice, which I received, telling me to take his 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery.' When I had used the medicines a month, my health was much improved. It has continued to improve until now I can work at almost all kinds of housework. I had scarcely any appetite but it is all right now. Have gained several pounds in weight. Dr. Pierce's medicines have done wonderfully well here. I would advise all who suffer from chronic diseases to write to Dr. Pierce."

"Favorite Prescription" makes weak women strong, sick women well.

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of customs and mailing only. Send 21 one-cent stamps for the paper-covered book, or 50 stamps for the cloth-bound volume. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

ARMOURIES WILL BE BUILT AT ONCE.

Government Hustling Things a Bit—Working Drawings Being Made.

It is expected that the Government military engineer will be in town shortly in connection with some details regarding the new armouries. When seen, Lt.-Colonel Miller said that he believed the engineer intended to visit Peterborough shortly. He further said that he received the rough plans of the armouries during the early part of the week but he had been ordered to send them back at once in order that the engineer himself might make the working drawings from them. This seems to indicate that the Government intends to build the new armouries in all haste especially as the rough plans were telegraphed for the day after they had been received by Lt.-Col. Miller.

HONOURS FOR MR. H. TANDY, B A.

Won Gold Medal in Medicine at Queen's University.

The following item from the Havelock Standard will be of local interest, in so much as Rev. W. R. Tandy of that village is quite well known here:—"A message from Kingston today announces that Mr. Herbert Tandy, B. A., has successfully passed his final examinations at Queen's Medical College with the degree of M.D. Dr. Tandy wins the gold medal in medicine, the Chancellor's scholarship of $70 and a year's residence in the Kingston General Hospital as House Surgeon. Mrs. Tandy leaves to-day for Kingston to attend the graduation exercises."

HAD A FONDNESS FOR OTTAWA GIRLS.

William Armstrong Only Advertised for Young Ladies in Ottawa Paper.

Thirty Ottawa Ladies Answered His Alluring Adv. and Enclosed the Money. Armstrong's Smooth Methods.

Some further particulars regarding the methods made use of by Wm. Armstrong, alias Bradley, alias Steele, etc., are given in the following item taken from the Ottawa Free Press. It appears that Armstrong had a particular fondness for the Ottawa ladies, as in the advertisement inserted in the paper in that city only young ladies were asked for:

William Armstrong, the smooth Peterborough chap, whose alleged fake advertisements appeared a short time ago in a local contemporary for young ladies to work in connection with a Canadian exhibit at the St. Louis world's fair, is on trial in that town, charged by Chief Roszel with misusing the papers.

The ad. in question read as follows:—

"Wanted,—One hundred young ladies to go to St. Louis during the exhibition, to take charge of an exhibit; salary $35 per month, and board. Enclose $5 with applications. If too many applications are received money will be refunded."

The alluring offer to refund the five dollars led to an apparently well founded suspicion on the part of Chief Powell and Inspector Hogan of the Dominion Police, that there was something wrong, and a telegraph message to Peterborough landed the young man in the cells. About thirty young ladies from the capital answered the advertisement and enclosed the necessary money, and quite a correspondence sprung up as to the particulars of the engagement.

Armstrong was very nice about the affair and offered the applicants their choice of American or Canadian exhibits, besides asking their advice as to board, lodgings, salary, etc. Most of the young ladies in question of course considered the offer a good proposition—but none so far as can be ascertained have received any "refund."

No doubt many of the Ottawa belles will regret to learn that the apparently nice young man with whom they had such an interesting correspondence, is an alleged fakir.

SHAKE OFF THAT SPRING FEELING

Dodd's Kidney Pills Will Do It Naturally and Well.

Cause and Cure of the Tired Feeling That is Epidemic at This Season of the Year.

The spring is here. You can feel it in every part of your body body. Your clothes are too heavy, and although you are not sick you are too tired to walk, too tired to work, yes, even too tired to eat.

It's that spring feeling.

Do you know the cause of it? No, all you want to know is how to get rid of it. Well, the explanation and the cure is alike simple.

In the winter you "get used" to the cold, you think. As a matter of fact it is the body that gets prepared. It puts on a fortification of extra tissue that keeps the cold out. In the spring time this tissue is thrown off by the body, and if the system is all in working order, the blood carries away the cast-off tissue, which is in turn filtered out of the blood by the kidneys and expelled from the body.

This means extra work for the kidneys and if they are at all tired or worn they fail in their work. The result is clogged circulation and that tired spring feeling.

The cure is to tone up the Kidneys with Dodd's Kidney Pills. Dodd's Kidney Pills make healthy Kidneys. Healthy Kidneys quickly cleanse the blood of all impurities and the "spring feeling" is replaced with a vigour of body and buoyancy of spirit that makes work a pleasure.

"STORY OF THE PLAINS" BY REV. DR. J. McDOUGALL.

Realistic Address at the George Street Church Sunday School.

Owing to the inclemency of the weather but few attended the lecture on the Canadian North-west, given by Rev. Dr. John McDougal, in the George street Sunday School last night. Mr. McDougall's subject was "The Story of the Plains," and the speaker dealt with the experiences of his life in the great North-west. Rev Mr. McDougal is a typical westerner in every word and action, and what he doesn't know about the plains is scarcely worth knowing. In point of fact it is stated that Mr. McDougal knows more about that country than, perhaps, any living man. Since 1860 he has crossed and recrossed that great expanse and wandered over it every day, and those who were at the George street Sunday school had the benefit of his experiences. Naturally these were many and of a wide variety and to people who have never visited that country were very interesting to listen to. Mr. McDougal is very realistic. He illustrates everything by word and action just as it happened and he held the attention of his audience from beginning to end. The speaker began by describing the plains as he first saw them in 1860, a desolate stretch rolling away, to the horizon, as far as human eye could see, gradually he worked in the invasion of the nations of the world and described how the whole country was being rapidly settled, and the land cultivated. Rev. Mr. McDougal spoke most enthusiastically about the country and his address was one which was very much appreciated. At its conclusion a hearty vote of thanks was tendered to which he appropriately replied.

Rev. J. P. Wilson, the pastor occupied the chair.

AN EDITOR'S EXPERIENCE

In the Treatment of Humours with More Than Magical Effect with CUTICURA REMEDIES.

A Remarkable Testimonial from a Most Intelligent and Trustworthy Lady.

"A tumor came on my neck and in a day or two it was as large as half an orange. I was very much alarmed for fear it was malignant. My friends tried to persuade me to consult my physician; but dreading that he would insist on using the knife, I would not consent to go. Instead, I got Cuticura Resolvent and Cuticura Ointment. I took the former according to directions, and spread a thick layer of the Ointment on the swelling. On renewing it I would bathe my neck in very warm water and Cuticura Soap. In a few days the Cuticura Ointment had drawn the swelling to a head, when it broke. Every morning it was opened with a large sterilized needle, squeezed and bathed, and fresh Ointment put on. Pus and blood, and a yellow, cheesy, tumorous matter came out. In about three or four weeks' time this treatment completely eliminated the tumor. The soreness that had extended down into my chest was all gone, and my neck now seems to be perfectly well.

"About five or six years ago my sister had a similar experience, used the Cuticura Remedies with magical effect. I am willing you should use my testimonial, with the further privilege of revealing my name and address to such persons as may wish to substantiate the above statements by personal letter to me." Chicago, Nov. 12, 1902.

Cuticura Resolvent, liquid and in the form of Chocolate Coated Pills, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Soap are sold throughout the world. Depots: London, 27 Charterhouse Sq.; Paris, 5 Rue de la Paix; Australia, R. Towns & Co., Sydney; Boston, 137 Columbus Ave. Potter Drug & Chemical Corp., Sole Proprietors.

A BOY GIVEN A MERRY CHASE.

Joseph Desautel was Given an Exciting Experience Last Night.

The Examiner is furnished with details of an experience in which Jos. Desautel, a young lad, participated last night. He was going home about nine o'clock, alone, when he was startled to hear a man behind him. His fear was increased when the man who was a stranger to the boy, started to run towards him. The man was apparently under the influence of liquor, and the boy being swift of foot soon distanced his pursuer, and rushed home in a state of terror, from which it took him some time to recover.

NOT READY YET FOR A VICTORY

Kuropatkin's Plan is to Lead Japs on to Point in Manchuria.

Russians to Land Reinforcements of 100,000 Men From Liaoyang to Newchwang—Japanese Grateful for Russian Treatment of the Body of Commodore Hirose, the Greatest Japanese Hero of the War.

St. Petersburg, April 11.—The generally anticipated attack on Port Arthur did not occur Saturday night, although a telegram received from Grand Duke Cyril reports that the enemy's ships were sighted on the horizon. It is presumed that the Japanese were warned of the extra precautions which had been taken to guard against a surprise.

Vice-Admiral Makaroff's torpedo flotilla patrolled the open sea, while the warships, with full steam up, remained outside Port Arthur. Elsewhere throughout the war region all is reported quiet.

Kuropatkin's Strategy.

A high military authority in conversation with the Associated Press explained why Gen. Kuropatkin's plan of campaign does not contemplate a heavy resistance to the Japanese advance at the Yalu, saying:

"Either defeat or victory in a battle there would be disadvantageous to us. If we lost we would have to fall back through a difficult country. If we won, and I say to you that Russian strategy is based on the idea of victory and not on that of defeats, success would be fruitless. We could not follow it up without exposing the army to too great risks. On account of the Japanese control of the sea, if we pursued the enemy into the Peninsula of Corea, we would open both flanks to a possible attack. No; the Japanese must come on to a point in the interior which has been selected, and where we can follow up a crushing defeat to the bitter end with blow after blow and seal the fate of the campaign."

It is understood here as the result of Gen. Kuropatkin's visit to Newchwang, reinforcements of 100,000 men will be sent forward from Liaoyang.

Japan Grateful.

Tokio, April 11.—The body of the Japanese officer found and buried at Port Arthur is unquestionably that of Commander Takaze Hirose, who lost his life in the engagement on March 27, when Vice-Admiral Togo made his second attempt to bottle up that port. The description of the uniform tallies with that worn by the officers of Hirose's rank. The fact that the body had been missing is further confirmatory of this.

The Government deeply appreciates the action of the Russians in giving the remains a military funeral, and officers of the naval rank have requested the Associated Press to express their appreciation of the Russian courtesy.

The fragment of Hirose's body, which has been brought here, will be given a public funeral on April 13, according to the Shinto ceremonial. Commander Hirose is the greatest Japanese hero of the war, and after the conclusion of hostilities an effort will be made to secure the remains interred at Port Arthur and bring them to Japan.

Autos For the Front.

Paris, April 11.—According to the St. Petersburg correspondent of The Journal, a large number of armored automobiles, manufactured in Germany, France and Belgium, will leave there for the front to-day.

Her Own Discharge Sank Her.

St. Petersburg, April 11.—The Czar is furious at the discoveries of gross corruption in the Russian Navy Yards. The discovery was made as a result of the sinking of a gunboat which had recently been finished. The discharge of her gun in firing a salute was so shattering that the plates were loosened, and the boat went down in a few minutes.

Second Army Lands.

Paris, April 11.—The second Japanese army, according to the St. Petersburg correspondent of The Temps, is now landing in Corea. Extensive army manoeuvres are being organized for Finland (Russia), where a large force of reserves is stationed.

War News in Brief.

London, April 11.—No confirmation has reached London of the various rumors, most of which came by way of Paris, of land fighting, landings by Japanese on the Liatoung Peninsula, the capture of Japanese transports by Russians, etc.

Despatches from various points agree that the Russians have completely evaculated Corea, but beyond this there is little readable news.

A Chee Foo despatch which reached London by way of Rome asserts that the Japanese squadron, with twenty steamers, was seen making for Port Arthur. The squadron of Admiral Wirenius left Cherbourg yesterday for the Baltic.

The Japanese papers ridicule the idea of the Russian Baltic Sea squadron ever reaching the Far East and does not believe it will ever make the attempt.

Broke a British Square.

London, April 11.—The British punitive expedition operating against the Okpoto tribe of natives in Nigeria (British West Africa), lost four men killed and forty-eight wounded in the fighting recently, while the Okpotos fought their way into the midst of a British square. The Okpotos continue determinedly to resist the advance of the expedition.

Six Thibetans Were Killed

London, April 11.—Official despatches from Lord Curzon, the viceroy of India, state that in the fighting at Samondu on April 7, when a British party that had been invited to a parley by the Thibetans were treacherously fired upon, the Thibetans had six killed and three wounded. None of the British were injured. The Lhassa Government has confiscated the property of the generals and Lamas for failing to stop the advance of the British at Guru.

High log the Herero.

Berlin, April 11.—Advices from German West Africa relate that on April 2, Major Von Glazenopp's column had an engagement with the Hereros, in which ninety-two were killed, while thirty-three of the German forces met death. The artillery action was brilliant.

HON. W. B. VAIL DEAD.

Was Canada's Minister of Militia and Defence From 1874 to 1878.

Halifax, N. S., April 11.—A private cablegram from England announces the death there yesterday of Lieut.-Col. the Hon. William Berrian Vail, ex-Minister of Militia and Defence of the Dominion of Canada. Col. Vail was the son of the late John Cougle Vail of Sussex, N. B., long a judge of the County Court, and was born there on Dec. 19, 1825. He entered public life in 1867 as a Conservative, being one of the representatives for Digby in the Nova Scotia Assembly. On the refusal of the Conservative party to submit the terms of union with Canada to the electors, he became a Liberal and joined the Annand Government as Provincial Secretary and leader of the Government in the Assembly. In September, 1874, Col. Vail joined the Mackenzie Government at Ottawa as Minister of Militia and Defence, and remained in the House of Commons till the close of the third Parliament in 1878. He sat again in the House from 1882 to 1887, when he was defeated by the late John Campbell in the general election held in the latter year.

During his provincial term of office Col. Vail carried through various useful measures, including the Ballot Act, the Yarmouth & Annapolis Railway Acts, and an act for the establishment of county courts. As Minister of Defence, his chief title to remembrance was the establishment of the Royal Military College at Kingston. Col. Vail served as delegate to England in 1882 for the Nova Scotia Government in connection with the construction of the Western Counties Railway Act.

Mr. Vail was lieutenant-colonel of the Second Regiment of the Digby Militia, and married Charlotte Leslie, eldest daughter of Charles Jones of Weymouth, N. S. For the past eight years he has been resident at Dover, England, with one of his daughters, the wife of Col. O'Brien, of the Royal Engineers. Mrs. Archibald C. Smithell of Halifax is also a daughter. Col. Vail's death resulted from heart trouble following on an attack of pneumonia.

BERNIER AND HIS SHIP.

Gallant Captain Leaves to Bring Over Ship For Mackenzie River.

Montreal, April 11.—Capt. Bernier and the twenty-six officers and men who are being sent to Bremen to bring back the Gauss, left here last night, after having been sworn in by Commander Spain. They expect to get the ship back to Halifax by the 1st of June, and all her supplies are to be purchased in Canada. The Gauss, which is three years old, is a screw boat, barquentine rigged, and has done good work in the German Government's Antarctic expeditions.

Commander Spain says that Capt. Bernier is confident that he can get to his destination by the northwest passage, but that, he says, is a question that will have to be decided by the department. Up to the present he declared the voyage has never been made by one ship, and the question is will it ever be done. If, he says, the department decide that the northwest passage is impracticable, then the voyage around Cape Horn will have to be undertaken. The further complement of men will be secured at Halifax.

Cab Driver's Sudden Death.

Toronto, April 11.—At about 2.30 Sunday morning a policeman at Yonge street and Yorkville avenue found John Kelly, a cab driver, lying insensible on the pavement, where he had been thrown from his cab. Dr. Johnston attended to his injuries, and he was found to have suffered a severe concussion, and was removed to St. Michael's Hospital, where he died without regaining consciousness. He was 52 years of age, was born in Ireland. He leaves a wife and one daughter, 16 years of age. Coroner Johnston has ordered an inquest.

WHEN THE PEOPLE CAN TRUST THEMSELVES.

The city of Chicago has voted strongly for the municipal ownership of its street railways, says the Toronto Star. This is, under the circumstances, more than a pronouncement in favour of such a policy. It is a declaration of faith by the voters in their own ability to secure an honest administration of these street railways by their own council, in spite of the fact that serious charges have been made against the municipal authorities of Chicago of a character likely [illegible] the trusting to them [illegible] financial undertaking. It [illegible]s made evident that the "graft" scandals have utterly failed to frighten the people of Chicago; for, under their very shadow, they vote something like three to one in favour of municipal ownership of street railways.

This is precisely the sort of courageous common sense to be expected from a progressive people. For them to fear to permit their own representatives at the City Hall to handle their own street railways, the management of which would be always under their immediate eye, would simply be to vote want of confidence—in their own business capacity. It is not—and never is—a question of what the aldermen then in office might or might not do with such a proposition. It may be that the interests which the aldermen are now handling are not of sufficient personal importance, or, at all events, are not easily enough examined and judged by the average voter, to lead the citizens to insist upon their honest and effective management. Give a city council little to do, or entrust it only with complicated and far off business which does not plainly and perceptibly affect the happiness of the voter, and it will not be closely watched. But this does not say that the voter will be equally careless if the corruption or incompetency of his council touches his everyday life unpleasantly.

We see the same thing in Federal politics. An opposition can talk itself hoarse over the growth of the public debt, but the average busy, money-making citizen is not much stirred up over the matter, unless he is a good deal of a politician. The increase in the public debt may look bad in the blue books—which he never looks at — but it does not perceptibly affect his daily life. He doesn't feel it. Consequently the Government seldom gets into very deep trouble on this score. But let a Government—as in Britain—put a penny on the income tax, and there is an uproar right away.

So with the subject of municipal ownership. We have in this city municipal ownership of the waterworks. Now the aldermen can get into more trouble in less time by permitting something to go wrong with the waterworks than in any other way open to them; and this is simply because bad water or scarcity of water is felt in every household. They had far better be to blame for a financial than a fluid deficiency.

Now, the street cars are things of which every citizen is an excellent judge. He knows whether they run frequently enough, swiftly enough and cheaply enough. This requires no study of city hall returns; he can make up his mind while he waits on the corner for his car of a morning. At the present time every man in Toronto knows that the street railway is being badly managed; that if a city council were directly responsible for it they would suffer at the polls. The levying of taxes—so long as the rate is about the same—is by no means so sensitive a tax. Nothing that the council now does is at all comparable in its interest for the average citizen with the management of the street railway.

So the people of Chicago — no matter how laxly they may have watched their council in the p[illegible]—are quite ready to trust themselves to keep them up to the mark in the matter of a street car service; and they thereby show their insight into a practical phase of the problems of municipal government and human nature.

OUR DUCAL VISITOR.

Rumour is busy with the name of our visitor, the Duke of Sutherland, as likely to become the tenant of Government House, when the term of the Earl of Minto, as Governor-General, ends in the autumn.

The Duke has led a busy life in the political and social world and is looked upon as a good practical man of business. He was associated with the army for a short time, resigning his command in the 2nd Life Guards, to contest the constituency of Sutherland, Scotland, as a Liberal, in 1874; he was re-elected in 1880 and 1885. In 1884 he married Millicent, fourth daughter of the late Earl of Rosslyn. His heir, who is known by the courtesy title of Marquis of Stafford, was born in 1888. The family name of the Sutherlands is Leveson-Gower, (pronounced Lewson-Gore), and one of its members sits in the present House of Commons as Unionist member for the Duke's old constituency. His uncle, Lord Lord Ronald Gower, has been a notable contributor to the world of letters.

The Duke succeeded to the title in 1892, when in his forty-first year. He is the proprietor of over 1,300,000 acres in England and Scotland. Dunrobin Castle and the House of Tongue are his Scottish seats, and in England Trentham Hall, near Stoke-on-Trent, and Littleshall House, Newport, Shropshire, are family residences while in London, Stafford House, St. James, is one of the largest and most magnificent of mansions, full of art treasures. The Dukedom of Sutherland was only created in 1833 and the present is only the fourth holder of the title, but the earldom goes far back into the middle ages, and the Duke is the 2nd holder. He is in politics a strong backer of Mr. Chamberlain, and president of the Imperial Tariff League.

The present Duchess of Sutherland has made her mark as a social reformer, having taken an interest in such matters. Before her marriage when she was known as Lady Millicent Fanny St. Claire-Erskine, she took an active part in the movement which impelled the Government to go into the question of the lead poisoning of workers in the Staffordshire potteries, and is now president of the Potteries' Cripped Guild. She has published four works, brochures and novelties.

PROPER CARE OF THE WORKING HORSE.

Grooming is an Essential Part of a Horse's Care.

Some good advice on the management of working horses is given by Mr. W. S. Spark, the English expert, who has for some months been acting as lecturer on horse-breeding and judge of horses for the Live Stock Division, Ottawa.

WORK.

Mr. Sparks points out that muscles, tendons, ligaments and the respiratory organs may by patient, constant and increasing use be gradually brought to perform safely an amount of work, and to support a strain which, without such progressive training they would be unable to stand. The power of doing work and of sustaining fatigue is, if we may use the expression, cumulative. Provided that the horse is kept in good condition it increases from day to day and from year to year, until from age the animal powers begin to fail. Regularity of exercise is also an important element in the development of the highest powers of the horse. The horse in regular work will suffer less than another, for he becomes gradually and thoroughly accustomed to what is required of him. The whole living machine accommodates itself to the regular demands upon it, the body becomes active and well-conditioned, without fat, and the muscles and tendons gradually develop. Horses in regular work are also nearly exempt from the many accidents which arise from over-freshness.

GROOMING.

The question is often asked, "Why does the stabled horse require constant grooming, while the same horse turned out in a field does very well without it?" It is not the fact of living under cover, but the active work and the high feeding of the stabled horse which necessitates grooming. It is the work and the food, not the shelter, which constitutes the difference between the domesticated animal and the horse in the state of nature. By work, and especially by fast work, the secretions of the glands of the skin are largely increased. Nature must be assisted by artifical means to remove these increased secretions, or the pores of the skin will become clogged and the health will be deteriorated greatly. The greater the action of the skin, the greater must be the attention paid to it. As long as the horse remains in a state of nature, taking only the exercise required for gathering his food, and feeding only on laxative diet, grooming is not needed, because the debris of the food and the excretions of the system are carried off mainly by the action of the bowels and kidneys.

Often men who have been driving or working horses, make a practice, if they get a chance, when bringing their horses home in a heated and fatigued state, to ride them through a pond or ford until the water reaches the bellies of the animals. They are then brought into the stables, and a feed thrown in front of them, and the horses are often left in that state without anything more being done. Instead of that treatment the horses should not be allowed to wet their legs above the knees; and after the harness has been taken off, they should be carefully rubbed down and dried from the ears to the fetlocks, after which they may be fed. It frequently happens that farm horses are kept too long at work without being fed, and after a fast of this kind they are gorged. Hearty feeding after a fast of this kind is very apt to bring on indigestion, colic, or inflammation of the bowels. Many people appear to imagine that it is unnecessary to groom farm horses regularly and thoroughly. This is a very great mistake. Grooming is conducive to the health of the horse as well as to its outward appearance. Attention to this will tend to prevent many diseases, such as cold, bronchitis and affections of the lungs, to which horses are very liable when they have been left standing undried after coming in heated and wet with perspiration or rain, or both at the same time.

Alleged Bank Burglars Taken.

Hamilton, April 9. — Yesterday morning Detective Blaikey and P. C. Bainbridge arrested two men suspected of robbing George Mitchell's private bank at Flesherton, Ont., last Monday. They have been going under the names of Jim Murphy and Andy Naughton. Thursday Naughton deposited $800 in the postoffice savings bank and when arrested had a pass book showing that much to his credit. He also had $152 in his pockets. Murphy had little money, and the police admit there is little evidence against him. Detective Greer, who reached the city yesterday afternoon, says he can have witnesses here in the morning by 9 o'clock to identify the alleged robbers.

PRINCESS CHIQUITA HAS LOVE TROUBLES.

Two Diminutive Gentlemen are Suitors for Her Hand.

May Result in a Duel Between the Two Suitors—The Princess' Naive Answers.

The love affairs of the tiny Princess Chiquita, as recorded in a despatch from Paris, will be read with interest by Peterborough residents, many of whom have seen the little lady who form d the chief attraction of Bostock's Menagerie, a short time ago when it showed in Canada.

The despatch referred to reads:—

A serious love affair in the world of dwarfs is just now engaging the attention of Paris, and it is hinted that the outcome may be a duel.

Princess Chiquita, a tiny American woman, who was born in 1881, stands 2 feet 4 inches, in her high-heeled boots, and weighs 19 lbs., is now on exhibition at Bostock's menagerie at the Paris Hippodrome.

Some time ago two dwarfs, who also happened to be in Paris—Auguste, who is 26 years old and stands 3 feet 6 inches high, and Delphin, aged 21, height 2 feet 7 1-2 inches—went to see the little lady, and both fell desperately in love. Auguste is a Frenchman, and Delphin, a German, and both started writing inflammatory love letters to the little princess, who, as became a well-bred young lady, handed the letters to her papa, a man of normal size and appearance.

The French dwarf is, however, of a jealous and fiery character, and on hearing yesterday that the German dwarf Delphin had been to see the princess, and had handed her a bouquet which had been graciously accepted, is now beside himself with anger. He has threatened that if Delphin continues to pay such decided attentions to the lady he will challenge him to fight a duel. Delphin, on the other hand, says that he is "not afraid of that big French bully Auguste."

Hearing of these things, I went this afternoon to Bostock's menagerie and interviewed the princess. "Is there any truth in the report that you are thinking of getting married Princess?" I asked.

Princess Chiquita, who converses equally well in English and German, answered with a sweet little smile, "Well, really I guess your question is very indiscreet. But, in any case, it is a matter for my papa to decide, and not for me."

"But," I said, "how about Au-Auguste and Delbin?"

"Oh!" she replied, "they are both silly boys; they hardly know me well enough to be so serious."

I endeavoured to ascertain whether the princess favoured one or the other of her suitors, but she merely said that she was quite happy to remain as she was. Auguste, she said, she feared was rather quick-tempered, and Delphin was so ardent and sentimental that she hardly liked to take all that he said for gospel truth. "I do hope the silly boys will not fight about me," she said.

I then turned to the papa, who was standing by. He smiled when I spoke of marriage, and said, "Well, I guess neither of them earns enough to keep my daughter in the style to which she is accustomed, and I don't attach any importance to the matter at all."

BENSFORT.

The literary society has closed for this season, the last meeting being held in the Foresters' Hall, on the evening of March 30th. An oyster supper was given by the society, the ladies furnishing refreshments. After the tables were cleared a short programme was given, and the literary evenings for the season closed with the National Anthem.

A highly entertaining and profitable evening was spent in the Methodist church here on the 29th ult. A concert in aid of the Forward Movement was given under the directorship of the pastor, Rev. N. D. Drew, the children contributing the greater part of the programme. Special music was furnished by the choir.

Misses Boskill and Marrett spent their Easter vacations under their respective parental roofs.

Mr. George McClelland is moving this week to the William Stewart farm in Otonabee.

Mrs. Albert Waterman is visiting in Bensfort this week.

Mr. Norman Kerr left last week for Souris. His many friends join in wishing him success.

The usual quiet of our village was disturbed last Wednesday evening, by the sound of drums and cymbals, and great fear prevailed lest the Russian Cossacks had found their way to Bensfort, but upon closer investigation it was found to be music and dancing coming from the Grange Hall, where the bachelors' ball was being held. To say that all present enjoyed themselves to the full is only expressing it mildly. The Bensfort people take no back seat when merry making comes in. Mr. George Michels ably acted as floor manager. Some came a great distance. Among those we might mention Messrs. McClung and Hamblin, and Miss Hamblin of Centreville; Messrs and the Misses Michels, of Campbelltown; Messrs Edgar Wood and Bruce Johnston, of Lakeview, and Mr. Richmond Morrison, whose fame as an athlete is becoming widespread and whose dancing abilities are of no mean order. The leader of the enterprise, Mr. Everett Wood, and Mr. Russell Morrison, deserve great credit for the success of the evening.

MANY ARRIVALS AT HALIFAX.

Steady Stream of Immigration Pouring in.

The Numidian and the Canada Arrived on Friday—It is Expected That Four Thousand More will Come Within a Week.

Halifax, April 8th. — The Allan liner Numidian, from Glasgow, and the Dominion liner, Canada, from Liverpool, arrived here to-night. Both of the steamers encountered heavy head gales, but otherwise the passage was good. The Numidian had 26 saloon, 197 second cabin, and 199 steerage passengers, mostly English and Scotch, bound to the west, and sailed for New York.

Owing to the shortage of cars the Canada's passengers will not come ashore until the morning. The boat will have 41 cabin, 385 second cabin, and 146 steerage passengers. The latter are a mixed lot of English, Irish, Scotch, Norwegians, Greeks, Danes and Poles, and are bound for points in western Canada.

By this day week the population of Canada will have been increased by nearly 4,000 souls from across the seas by ships now due here and at St. John. The number of passengers by each are C.P.R. liner, Lake Erie, due at St. John, on Sunday next, 1,181; Allan liner Pretorian, with the mails now due at Halifax, 400; Allan liner Siberian, due at Halifax, on Sunday, 300; C. P. R. liner, Mount Temple, due at St. John on Sunday, 403; Hamburg American liner, due at Halifax net Monday, 1,063; Franco-Canadian liner Milan, due at Halifax, on Monday, 157.

Last year the total number landed here reached the 40,000 mark, and this year it is expected the figures will be nearly 60,000. One of the great drawbacks at Halifax this year in connection with immigration is the inability of the railways to handle the traffic expeditiously. More cars are badly needed.

McCandless Demands Enquiry.

Victoria, B.C., April 11.—Ex-Mayor McCandless Saturday night gave notice that he has demanded a thorough investigation into the serious allegation made against his honor and integrity by Police Magistrate Hall, whose strictures upon Mr. McCandless and his board of aldermen in issuing, as he alleges, licenses to Chinese to sell whiskey to white men at five dollars per license, whereas the civic license to white men to sell whiskey is three hundred dollars have caused a profound sensation in this city. The investigation will take place during the coming week.

Insane From Love.

Kingston, April 11.—Friday night William Folley, a son of W. J. Folley of Lansdowne, became insane and tried to kill James Lynch with an axe as the latter was going out of his house. Fortunately the axe struck the door casing, and Lynch received only a glancing blow on the head. Folley was overpowered after a hard struggle and was Saturday morning taken to the Brockville Asylum. A love affair is the supposed cause.

Fall Wheat Failure.

Ridgetown, April 11.—Several prominent farmers of this vicinity claim that not more than 20 per cent. of the fall wheat is alive, and in some places not even that. Many of the clover meadows are completely dead. W. E. Galbraith of 12th concession, Howard, will plow up nearly 100 acres of fall wheat.

Mrs. Botkin Again Charged.

San Francisco, April 11.—Joshua Deane of Dover, Del., has formally charged Mrs. Cordelia Botkin with the murder of his wife by poisoned candy, and a warrant was served on her in the county jail. She was sentenced on Friday to life imprisonment on two charges of murder.

Death of H. H. Bull.

Brampton, April 11.—Bartholomew Hill Bull of this town, known throughout Canada as the founder of the firm of B. H. Bull & Son, proprietors of the Brampton Jersey Herd, the largest herd of registered Jerseys ever owned in Canada, died early on Sunday.

For Complicity in Mail Thefts.

Winnipeg, April 11.—In connection with the arrest of Lawyer Bangs at Calgary, for complicity in the mail robbery, Thomas Behan, horse dealer there, and Jerry Boyce, hotelkeeper at Gleichen, have also been taken into custody.

Barn Struck By Lightning.

Newtonville, April 11.—During a heavy thunderstorm Saturday afternoon lightning struck the barn of Forscyth Bros., burning the barn, two horses and a bin of oats.

Startling Revelations.

It frequently happens that people suffer for years from kidney derangements without knowing the cause of their backaches, aching limbs and other bodily sufferings, suddenly the truth is revealed to them that they are the victims of serious kidney disease and in imminent danger. There is no medicine which gives such prompt and lasting relief for every form of Kidney disease as Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They are positively effective even in the most chronic cases.

McCandless Denies Report

Toronto, April 9.—Ex-Mayor McCandless of Victoria, B. C., who was in a telegram yesterday charged with having granted 40 Chinamen there the right to sell liquor to the whites at $5 per license, wired Rev. Elliott S. Rowe, who is here on a visit from Victoria, as follows:

"Any report implying corrupt actions by me absolutely false. Contradict.—A. G. McCandless."

Found the Bad Man

Welland, April 9.—William Brandow, the man alleged to have committed the assault on Young Chambers, near Port Robinson on Monday last, was arrested yesterday by High Constable J. R. Dowd, near Stevensville, this county. Chambers came and identified the prisoner, who is remanded for eight days. He appears to be of rather weak intellect.

FRIENDSHIP OF FRANCE

Was Dearly Bought in the French Shore Settlement.

Paris View of the Situation Is That French Remain in Actual Possession, Although the Treaty Allows Newfoundland's Inhabitants to Play in Their Own Yard—Lord Strathcona Says it Is a Fair Compromise.

London, April 11.—(C.A.P.)—The Sunday Observer, under the heading, "Dearly Bought Friendship," has an article which says the Island of St. Pierre and Miquelon are to remain in French hands, a source of menace and irritation to Canadians. It would have been a fair bargain had these been reconveyed to Britain and monetary compensation awarded to the colonial traders and fishermen who have been ruined by the French operations on the treaty shore.

The Paris correspondent of The Sunday Times says the view taken in the capital is that the treaty allows the inhabitants of Newfoundland to play in their own yard, but the French remain in possession all the same and will be provided with plenty of bait to give a fresh impetus to a declining industry. The article concludes that the error of the treaty of Utrecht has been galvanized into fresh life.

The Paris Matin says that the French rights in Newfoundland were losing value each year and slipping inevitably from their fingers by a process of natural evolution. If Newfoundland decided to become a part of Canada there would have been no compensation.

Lord Strathcona says the agreement is a very fair compromise for Newfoundland and has settled a very delicate question.

Prosperity of Canada.

W. A. Laycock, in an article in The New Liberal Review, says a remarkable wave of prosperity is passing over Canada, and there is every evidence it will continue. In his view there will be an enormous influx of desirable immigrants. The general conditions of trade throughout the Dominion and the opening up of western lands especially by the G. T. P. give settlers a greater scope for betterment than exists in any other part of the world. The writer says the remarkable increase in British emigrants is due to the energy of the Dominion emigration officials in England.

Discourages Enterprise.

The commission appointed by the N.S.W. Premier to ascertain the capability of the Fitzroy dock deplores the attitude of the trades unions as having a discouraging effect on both private and state enterprises.

Booth Wants Money.

General Booth, speaking on his new emigration enterprise, said if he were given £50,000 by each of the British and Canadian Governments he could begin to send out suitable people for Canada.

McPherson & McGregor
(Successors to the F. R. J. McPherson Co.)
Take this opportunity of thanking the public for the very liberal patronage accorded the late firm. Trade has been so satisfactory that Mr McGregor decided to increase his interest in the business and, as a consequence, the firm will be known hereafter as McPHERSON & McGREGOR.
Our specialties are:—
Sanitary Plumbing
Sanitary Ventilating
Steam and Hot Water Heating
Electrical Wiring and Supplies
We wish to draw the attention of the public to a few of the many complimentary testimonials received by Mr. McGregor for the high quality of the work he has installed in Plumbing and Heating:—
From the Firm of Bennet & Wright, Plumbing, Heating and Electrical Contractors, Toronto.
This is to certify that Duncan McGregor has been in our employment steady for about fifteen years and during that time we have found him to be steady, honest and trustworthy. He has given every satisfaction as a practical mechanic in each of the following branches: Plumbing, steam and gas fitting, also electrical and conduit work, and for some time has had charge of some of our largest contracts with satisfactory results.
From Illsley & Horn, General Contractors, Toronto.
The bearer, Mr. Duncan McGregor, had charge of the electric wiring at the King Edward Hotel Building. The job was a large and complicated one and by the way Mr. McGregor handled the work he proved himself a mechanic of more than ordinary ability. We unhesitatingly recommend him as a first class mechanic to anyone needing his services.
From Mr. J. Ross Robertson, of the Evening Telegram.
Mr. Duncan McGregor, who has been connected with the Bennet & Wright Co. for some years, and who has superintended the work of plumbing and heating for the Bennet & Wright Co., is not only in my opinion, but also that of my architect, a fully competent mechanic. His work, my architect informs me, has been most satisfactory. Any thing that has come under my own supervision has been likewise satisfactory.
An Extract Taken from the June Number of Domestic Engineering.
During the recent convention of the Canadian Electrical Association held in the King Edward Hotel, a thorough examination was made of all the electrical work in the hotel, and it was pronounced second to none on the continent. Therefore, great credit is due Mr. Duncan MacGregor, who superintended the entire conduit, electrical and power system for the firm of Bennet & Wright, of this city, who were the contractors for all the different branches of the electrical work in the new hotel.

WORSE THAN STEALING

Judge Winchester's Opinion of Toronto Ballot Fraud Workers.

Sentences the Convicted Deputy Returning Officers to Two Years Each in the Central Prison and Their Poll Clerks to One Year Each—Wife Broke Down at Husband's Sentence—Tears in Court.

Toronto, April 11.—Judge Winchester Saturday morning passed the following sentences on those who had been convicted of conspiracy in tampering with the ballots and ballot boxes at the last municipal election:

Samuel Thompson, two years, less one day.

Frank A. Gray, two years, less one day.

Abraham Cahoon, two years, less one day.

Lieut.-Col. John Gray, one year.

Thomas Kerr, one year.

Confinement in Central Prison.

Mrs. Gray Broke Down.

The court room was crowded when Judge Winchester took his seat on the bench, a few minutes after 10 o'clock. It was a much concerned audience, composed of friends of the convicted men, and municipal politicians, who could not conceal their anxiety as to what the sentences would be. Mrs. Frank Gray and two lady friends were present. Mrs. Gray broke down when the judge pronounced sentence, and had to be taken from the court room. Many others showed their sympathy for the accused, by allowing their eyes to fill with water and a few silent tears to trickle down their cheeks.

Worse Than Stealing or Sandbagging.

The judge said the duty he had to perform was a painful one, but he had a trust to fulfil; if he did not perform his duties he was unfitted for the responsible position he held. He considered the crime of which the prisoners had been convicted was worse than stealing, burglary, forgery or sandbagging. It was a dangerous crime, a menace to society. If allowed to continue unchecked and unpunished it would lead to lawessness and serious results. The evidence brought out at the trials was such that the jurors could not have brought in any other verdict.

Reserved Cases Refused.

On behalf of Cahoon and Kerr, Mr. Robinette argued for some time for a reserve case, on the ground that the crime did not come under the common law, and as the case was "a breach of trust by a public official," the sessions had no jurisdiction.

Mr. Denton on behalf of the Grays also asked for a reserve case, and an opportunity to go to the court of appeal.

The judge replied that he had given the subject a great deal of thought and study during the past few weeks, as he expected the request would be made. He had failed to find any valid reason for allowing the cases to go to a higher court and refused both motions.

Asked For Leniency.

When asked what he had to say why sentence should not be passed upon him, Sam Thompson said that he now realized the seriousness of his offence. As it was his first offence he asked the judge to be lenient with him for the sake of himself and his family.

The judge reminded Thompson that this was not his first attempt. He knew better, but had persisted in doing unlawful acts in connection with elections. It was a crime that must be stopped, and he hoped the punishment he was about to inflict would prove a warning to others. Thompson was then given two years, less one day, in the Central Prison.

Case of the Grays.

The Grays were the next. Mr. Denton spoke of Col. Gray's long and honorable life in Toronto, his position and his excellent character. He also spoke of Frank Gray, just starting in life, building up a business, which would be ruined, were a long term of imprisonment imposed upon him. The judge gave Frank Gray the same sentence as Thompson. Col. Gray, who was the poll clerk, was given a year in the Central. Frank Gray's face was colorless, but his father never moved a muscle.

Abraham Cahoon made an impassioned and frenzied appeal for mercy. He spoke of his ten children and his grandchildren, and pleaded that he be given his liberty, so that there might be no stain upon them. His sentence was the same as the other deputy returning officers.

Thomas Kerr protested his innocence. He received the same sentence as Col Gray.

The Cause of It All.

These sentences are the outcome of the civic investigation which was started some weeks ago.

Sam Thompson was D.R.O. in sub-division 9, Ward 4, where Richardson received 100 bogus votes and Ald. Jones 25. Thompson confessed his guilt and was not tried.

The Grays were D. R. O. and poll clerk respectively in sub-division 5 of Ward 6. In this division Dr. Orr received 167 bogus votes.

Cahoon and Kerr had charge of sub-division 2 of Ward 5, where Richardson received 71 bogus votes. J. J. Durance who was poll clerk for Sam Thompson, gave Crown's evidence and escaped punishment.

The two remaining cases, that of the Laxtons and Gianellis, will be tried next month.

George Maguire is in Buffalo. The authorities hope to be able to bring him back.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

French Shore Dispute Settled and Bar to Entrance of Ancient Colony Into the Dominion Removed.

Cable despatches recently informed us that Great Britain and France have come to terms over the French Shore question in Newfoundland, and that this three-cornered dispute is consequently at an end. No more interesting piece of news could be wired across the ocean. The quarrel has been prolific of trouble between Great Britain and the Ancient Colony, and between France. It will be a great triumph for diplomacy if the terms are satisfactory. Friction in the British family will have been removed, and good feeling, so much to be desired, will have been established with France. What is more, an obstacle to the entrance of Newfoundland into the Dominion will have passed away.

What the Trouble Was.

Broadly speaking, the difficulty has arisen over fishery and territorial claims which France asserted in and around the west and north shores of Newfoundland. The colony, growing in strength, has been embarrassed and angered by these pretensions. Great Britain has been unable, owing to treaty provisions, to dispose of them, and France has continued, under the rights which it has insisted upon, to share what the Newfoundlanders have regarded as their exclusive possessions. The dispute, for such it has been, finds its origin as far back as 1713, when under the Treaty of Utrecht France gave up Newfoundland, and Britain in return agreed that subjects of France could catch fish on the Newfoundland coast and dry them on land. The Treaty of Paris in 1763 confirmed this agreement, and that of Versailles in 1783 was accompanied by a voluntary offer on the part of Britain "to take most positive measures to prevent His Majesty's subjects from interrupting in any manner by their competition the fishery of the French during their temporary exercise of it."

A Sweeping Interpretation.

The clause just cited has been subject to a sweeping interpretation by France. It was supposed at the outset that the British and French were to have concurrent fishery rights. But it was soon maintained that when the King undertook to see to it that the British fishermen—those of Newfoundland—should not interrupt the French in any manner by their competition, it was agreed that the rights of the French should be exclusive, and that the British were not to be permitted to fish in the waters referred to. Unfortunately, another treaty, that of Paris, in 1814, lent strength to the French position, or, at all events, was regarded as so doing. Under it the French held that they had exclusive fishery rights, and, in addition, exclusive rights in the rivers of the West and North shores—a very extensive area, as will be seen by the map—and exclusive territorial rights for half a mile inland all along what was termed the treaty coast. The Newfoundlanders, under the claims advanced by France, could not fish in their own waters or even exercise authority over a portion of their own island. They protested and brought all the influence they could to bear upon both the Imperial Government and upon France with a view to removing the disability. Many arrangements were drafted in order to afford relief. But these were defective from the Newfoundland point of view, and therefore failed.

The Quarrel Waxes Hot.

One of the circumstances which especially annoyed the Newfoundlanders was the fact that the French fishermen who operated on the Banks and along the treaty coast were in receipt of a bounty from France upon the fish they caught and sold in the European markets. There was no such bounty for the Newfoundlander. He was therefore at a disadvantage. In addition to being excluded from his own fishing grounds he was practically excluded from the markets his foreign rivals could resort to. In 1886 the Newfoundland Legislature retaliated by passing a law forbidding the sale of bait to the French fishermen. This struck the French in a vital spot, for they relied upon the colony for their herring, capellin, squid and other bait fishes. Then the Imperial Government disallowed the law, but in the succeeding year permitted it to pass into operation. Then the French responded by contesting the right of the Newfoundlanders to erect lobster-packing factories on the treaty coast. A French warship was actually sent to remove the buildings the Newfoundlanders put up. A British admiral, Sir Baldwin Walker, under the impression that the French were right, assisted them, and ordered a Newfoundland factory to be taken down. The Newfoundlander went to the courts and proved that the Admiral had no law behind him, and recovered $5,000 damages. The Imperial Government then proposed to enact the necessary legislation. But Sir William Whiteway at once left for England and appeared at the bar of the House of Lords and succeeded in persuading their Lordships that the law would be a wrong to the colony.

Mr. Chamberlain Interposes.

A modus vivendi was shortly afterwards reached with France, and more recently Mr. Chamberlain, as Colonial Secretary, took up the case. He, in 1898, appointed a Royal Commission, the report of which was favorable to the position of the Ancient Colony, in that it maintained that relief should be given. There can be little doubt that this step has had much to do with the settlement with France.

A FAMOUS HOAX.

The Trick Theodore Hook Played on a Woman He Disliked.

Theodore Hook, the wit par excellence of the early nineteenth century, is a name that still brings a kind of genial glow to the mind as at the remembrance of good and happy days. We suspect, however, that very few people to-day could give a definite account of why Theodore Hook was and what he did. An article in The Cornhill by Viscount St. Cyres sets the wit and his circle pretty clearly before the mind. This famous hoax, for example, played off on Mrs. Tottenham, an old lady of Berners street, who had offended him, may be new to many readers and is at least worth repeating:

"I'll make that old woman the talk of London," he said, and accordingly wrote to every sort and kind of person—it is said 4,000 in all—asking them to call at her house in Berners street on a certain day. "The first thing witnessed," says a newspaper of the time, "was six stout men bearing an organ, surrounded by wine porters, barbers with wigs, mantuamakers with bandboxes, opticians with the various instruments of their trade. Wagons laden with coal from the Paddington wharfs, upholsterers' goods in cart loads, pianofortes, linen and jewlry of every description filled the street. Besides these, a coffin was brought to the house, made by order, agreeable to letter, five feet six by sixteen inches. There were accoucheurs, tooth drawers, miniature painters and servants of every description wanting places. Certain revelations to be made respecting a complicated system of fraud pursued at the Bank of England brought the governor of that establishment. The Lord Mayor and his chaplain were allured by an invitation to receive the death-bed confession of a peculating common council man, while the Duke of Gloucester started off with Colonel Dalton to receive a communication from a dying woman, formerly a confidential attendant on His Royal Highness' mother. His were the royal liveries conspicuous on the occasion."

There must certainly have been a zest to life in those days, though the old lady of Berners street may not have enjoyed the joke as much as did Theodore Hook and the actor Lintot, who rented a chamber opposite the fated house and looked down on the wilderness of wagons and carriers that filled the ways for blocks around.

Sir Leslie Stephen on Books.

"I do not fancy myself to be a good judge of the public taste. I have never clearly discovered what it is that attracts the average reader. Many popular authors would suffer considerably, and at least one obscure writer would gain, if everybody took my view of their merits. I believe not the less in the vox populi. Books succeed, I hold, because they ought to succeed. A critic has no business to assume that taste is bad because he does not share it. His business is to accept the fact and try to discover the qualities to which it is due. Sometimes, of course, an ephemeral success may be won by rubbish; the preacher may please his audience, as Charles II. shrewdly observed, because his nonsense suits their nonsense; but it is idle to condemn lasting popularity. It is too late to set down Shakespeare as simply barbarous; though I admit that it is tempting to try to clear away some of the stupendous rubbish-heaps of eulogy which accumulate over the great men when admiration has become obligatory on pain of literary renunciation."—Sir Leslie Stephen, in National Review.

Odd Facts About Cancer.

Mr. H. G. Plimmer quotes the remarkable case of the town of Luckau, a place with 5,000 inhabitants, 3,000 being housed in the central part, or town proper, and 1,000 in each of the two suburbs which flank it east and west. From 1876 to 1898 the deaths from cancer numbered one out of 23.30 for the entire town, one out of nine for the eastern suburb, and in the western suburb there was not a single case. The houses were similar in size and arrangements. The soil of the main town and eastern suburb was moist and lay low. That of the western suburb was, on the contrary, sandy, dry and elevated. There was a large ditch which encircled the central town and the eastern suburb, not touching the western suburb, and the cancer followed closely the course of this ditch. The cases in the main town occurred chiefly in those houses whose gardens bordered on the ditch, and in the eastern suburb all the gardens were watered from the ditch. There were 127 houses in this quarter, and fifty-six of these were cancer houses, forty-three with one case each, ten with two cases, two with three cases and one with four cases. The ditch contained stagnant water, with which the people watered and washed their vegetables, many of which were eaten raw.—London News.

NOW RETURNS A WEALTHY MAN.

An Examiner Newsboy's Astonishing Success.

Left Peterborough Aged 16 Years and Made a Fortune in Alaskan Gold Fields.

Mr. Richard Dawson and wife, of Seattle, are at the Oriental Hotel, the former renewing old acquaintances after an absence of about 24 years. Mr. Dawson is an old Ashburnham boy, and will doubtless be remembered by many. He lived across from the Ashburnham town hall and for five years worked in the Examiner office. At the age of sixteen years he went to Seattle, and later on drifted to the Klondike, first striking Dawson City. Still later Mr. Dawson went to the gold fields of Nome, where he met with astonishing success, and now after what to him was but a short absence, returns to his old town a wealthy man. Mr. Dawson spent most of his fortunate years at Nome, a town to the far north and washed by the waters of the Arctic ocean. It is a place of some 15,000 inhabitants in summer, and 3,500 in winter, and its houses are all of wood. There are three newspapers published there three times a week, and Mr. Dawson asserts that the people out there live better than do the citizens of Peterborough. He is most enthusiastic about the country, and thinks no young man of good physique, willing to do hard manual labour, having a liking for such a life, could do better than go to the gold fields of Alaska. Wages range from $5 to $15 per day with board, and if a man is lucky to strike a rich gold reef his fortune is made. However, underlying all these chances of making wealth there are severe hardships to be endured. The peculiar climate doesn't agree with all, and the work is such that the health of the strongest often gives way. Mr. Dawson graphically relates most interesting experiences, to which it is a great pleasure to listen. But above all he speaks of the marked difference in the old town. He can scarcely realize the great change which has come over Peterborough during his absence. But no less is the great change in his boyhood friends. They have all now reached manhood, and many are the leading business men of the town, and it is these after so long an absence, he has come to visit.

THE OTONABEE ALMOST IN FLOOD.

Water Higher than it Has Been for Some Years.

Peterborough is on the verge of a flood to-day, and had it not been for the cessation of rain, and the stiffening up of the weather, the consequences might be of a serious nature for at least some of the interests in town.

The Otonabee River rose 18 inches during Friday night, and by Saturday afternoon was higher than it had been for a number of years. Fortunately the heavy rain of Friday night, which was responsible for the sudden rise the river was of short duration, otherwise it is probable that some of the properties on the river banks would have been deluged, as it was the water rose to about 3 inches of the high water mark, and at that point it remained all day Saturday and yesterday.

This morning the water was found to have risen still higher and it is now bordering on the high water mark. The old Riverside Park grounds are flooded and the water is almost up to Mr. Wm. Faint's house.

SCHOLARS RETURNED TO SCHOOL TO-DAY.

After Easter Vacation Public School and Institute Resume Work.

After an eight day Easter vacation the scholars of the Collegiate Institute and Public Schools resumed their studies this morning. And there are some changes in the teaching staff of the Public Schools. Miss Richardson, who was advised by her physicians to give up teaching, has been succeeded by Miss Weir of Port Hope, while Mr. Boddick, who obtained a better appointment in Toronto, has been replaced by Mr. T. S. Wallace, of Keene.

STRANGER'S CLUB'S FIRST MONTHLY

Meeting Since Election of Officers Held Saturday Night.

The first regular monthly meeting of the Strangers Fellowship Club of the Y.M.C.A., since the election of new officers was held in the building on Saturday evening. Mr. R. Harding is proving the right man in the right place as president of the club, and is assisted by an enthusiastic band of club fellows. After partaking of tea, important business relating to the welfare of strangers was transacted. The club meetings promise to be of deep interest during the coming months as papers will be presented on the various features of the work.

The next club meeting will be held on May 7th.

The Strangers' Tea will be held on Sunday evening, April 17th.

Muriel Foster Coming.

If the history of to-day's artists were on record there would be found none amongst them who have risen so suddenly into fame and fortune as the Contralto Muriel Foster, who has not only gained the highest position in England, not alone upon the concert platform, but in all the great Festivals under famous conductors, such as Hans Richter and the like; but she has made a success equally phenomenal throughout Germany, the United States and Canada, which to an English born artist is a triumph accorded but seldom during a century of singers' lives. The coming appearance of this delightful contralto in our midst has occasioned vivid interest throughout musical circles, and the Muriel Foster Concert here will undoubtedly be a most fashionable event, besides a most pleasurable one. Mr. Harriss is responsible for Miss Foster's engagement in Canada. Associated with Miss Foster will be Emile Renaud, the renowned French pianist. The concert will be under the auspices of the choir of the George street Methodist church, on Thursday, April 14th.

LETHBRIDGE LOSES A GOOD CITIZEN.

By the Death of Mr. J. H. Cavanah, Which Occurred Last Week.

A Tribute to His Estimable Life Paid by Former Peterborough Citizen Was a Prominent Business Man.

The Examiner has received further particulars of the death of Mr. J. H. Cavanah, of Lethbridge, from Mr. J. McCaig, formerly of this town. Mr. McCaig writes:

"We are sorry to chronicle the death of Mr. J. H. Cavanah, in Lethbridge, Alta., on April 4th. Mr. Cavanah was the brother-in-law of Mr. W. J. Green of our city, and the father of Will and Miss Mona who are both at present in Peterborough. Mr. Cavanah was born in Leeds county in 1857, and had completed his forty-seventh year. He had been suffering for some time from a kidney disease that required a painful and severe operation. The work was put off from time to time while his health was becoming more affected. He did not rally strongly after the operation but died two days later.

"The funeral was under Masonic auspices, the deceased being a member and officer of North Star Lodge, No. 41, in Lethbridge. The brethren after the lodge ceremony, marched to the house in a body, and preceded the hearse to the English church, where religious services were conducted by Rev. Mr. Chivers. The body was then taken charge of by the Lodge, and relays of four members in regalia kept watch until the midnight train from the west, when the body was taken to Medicine Hat, and the burial service was completed by the Medicine Hat lodge. The pall bearers were Rev. C. McKillop, J. D. Higinbotham, W. C. Ives, W. D. L. Hardie and W. Oliver. Mr. Walton, of Medicine Hat, brother-in-law of the deceased, was the chief mourner. The family left to mourn for the deceased are a widow and six children, of whom Will and Mona are the eldest.

"The following delegates accompanied the body to Medicine Hat: T. McNab, W.M., W. Henderson, S.W., J. McCaig, J.W., J. H. Fleetwood, S. D., G. Kerr, secy., and J. H. Higinbotham. Besides these there were a number of other friends and members of the craft.

"In the death of Mr. Cavanah Lethbridge loses one of her most esteemed townsmen. He was an upright and scrupulously honest business man, of fine social qualities, charitable in his judgments, and an active but modest helper in everything affecting the good of his town and his fellows. He was a member of the A. O.U.W., as well as of the A. F. and A. M. The town merchants are floating their flags at half mast, the places of business are shut down, and the citizens have a heart of sorrow for Mr. Cavanah's death. Mr. Cavanah came to the west in 1882, and was in business in Winnipeg during the boom. In 1883 he was in business in Medicine Hat, and two years later in Lethbridge. He then opened a business in Calgary in 1895 and with others got the brunt of the hard times of that season. He then went to Slocan, B.C., for a couple of years, but returned to Lethbridge about 1899, and has been manager for the Hudson Bay Co., in their stores at this point ever since."

FEELING REFERENCE AT MINISTERIAL ASS'N.

Made to Death of Rev. J. Kilgour—Hospital Visitation.

There was a good attendance at the meeting of the Ministerial Association this morning, and a most interesting session was held. The following ministers were present: Rev. J. P. Wilson, president; Rev. J. A. Wilson, secretary; Revs. J. C. Davidson, J. G. Potter, J. G. Lewis, J. Bastow, Dr. Torrance, A. H. Brace, W. Bonnett, L. McKinnon, and W. J. Jolliffe.

Feeling reference was made to the death of Rev. Jos. Kilgour, who for many years has been a respected member of the association, and Revs. J. Bastow, J. A. Wilson and J. P. Wilson were appointed a committee to draft a resolution of condolence.

The Hospital visitation for the month was arranged as follows:
April 11, Rev. J. P. Wilson.
April 18, Rev. J. Bastow.
April 25, Rev. A. H. Brace.

The services at the Protestant Home for the month were left in the hands of Rev. Mr. Bonnett.

Acting upon a letter from the Nicholls Hospital Board, the following resolution was adopted:

"That the Sunday before Thanksgiving Day the pastors make commendatory reference to the Hospital, and that the Thanksgiving Day collections be given to that object.

The following resolution regarding temperance legislation was unanimously passed:

"That whereas the people of Ontario gave such an emphatic expression of their desires at the polls in December, 1902, regarding the Liquor traffic,

"Whereas, from all over the province has gone forth the cry for at least the abolition of the bar,

"And, whereas, the present time seems most opportune for the Government to take some definite, progressive action,

"We therefore most earnestly request the Provincial Government to give such legislation to the people of this province as will effect the abolition of the bar, and that we call the attention of our representative to this, our desire."

A most interesting and helpful paper on "Personal Holiness," was read by Rev. A. H. Brace of the Park street Baptist church, and the thanks of the association were expressed for the same.

Remember the Musicale under the auspices of St. Andrew's Ladies' Aid Society at the residence of Mrs. A. MacFarlane, Homewood Avenue, to-morrow evening April 12. Miss Florence Miller, Miss Violet Smith and Messrs. Glass and Young will assist. Admission 25c. Refreshments.

MIGHT ESTABLISH A BIG FACTORY.

American Machine Telephone Company is Looking for Site.

Why Should not Peterborough be Chosen?—Local Capitalists are Interested.

The following item taken from the Brantford Expositor will doubtless be read with considerable interest by Examiner readers in view of the fact that a number of local capitalists are interested in the Company spoken of.

It will also be interesting in view of the fact that the company proposes erecting a factory in some Canadian city. Peterborough might well be considered as being a favourable point at which to locate the factory, and doubtless this town would be given the preference since some of the principal shareholders are Peterborough men.

The Expositor says:—

"An Expositor representative had a conversation with Mr. N. D. Neill, of Toronto, whose prominent connection with the American Machine Telephone Company is well known to the readers of this paper.

"Mr. Neill states that his company has already installed in its premises, Duncan Street, Toronto, an exchange of two sections, which is in full working order. In this connection it may be stated that the American Machine Telephone exchange comprises a number of sections, each accommodating 100 subscribers, and having as many connecting divisions as are necessary to give a prompt service at all times. Each section is in itself a complete working unit, a number of which, when connected by trunk wires, will constitute an exchange of any required capacity. For example, an exchange of 100 subscribers would require one section; one of 500 subscribers, five section; one of 5000, fifty sections, and so on, adding one section for each additional 100 subscribers. The Toronto exchange, which has been installed for demonstration purposes, is one of two sections, and there is in connection with it, a workshop in which quite a number of men are employed.

'Mr. Neill says that an exchange of five sections is now being built, and it is hoped soon to instal it in some Canadian city. For his part, he would be glad to see the first exchange in Brantford, because here the automatic telephone was perfected, and much of the original capital furnished. The price to patrons would not be more than one-half that charged by the Bell company. Another thing to be kept in view was that the company would have to have a factory, which, in the not distant future, might give employment to 400 or 500 men. He was not prepared to talk business just yet, but he would like the city not to tie itself up with the Bell company in such a way that it would not be in a position later on to negotiate with the company with which he was connected."

SIX HUNDRED BARRELS OF APPLES DESTROYED.

A Scow Load Frozen up in Rice Lake.

At Burnett's Landing, Rice Lake, can be seen a scow load of apples, 600 barrels in all, which were frozen in on Rice Lake last fall, on being towed by the Rainbow from a lake point to Burnett's.

The apples, it is understood, were unloaded from the scow, and imbedded in sawdust, in the hope of saving them, but Jack Frost had already got in his deadly work, and the cargo was a total loss.

It is said that the English purchasers have been urging their Colborne representative to claim damages from Mr. Burnett for the loss of the apples, but it is claimed that that gentleman did everything possible to effect a prompt delivery, and save the cargo from destruction.

POPULAR RESIDENT DIED FRIDAY NIGHT.

Demise of Mr. Robert Nurse Aged 74 Years.

The death occurred at the Nicholls Hospital on Friday evening of Mr. Robert Nurse, after a somewhat lingering ailment. He was seventy-four years of age and was very popular in town. The deceased was a native of Yorkshire, England, and came to Canada at the age of 18 years. For some five or six years he farmed in South Monaghan, then moved to Ennismore, which has since been the scene of his long and useful life. He was a successful farmer, and took an interest in the affairs of his municipality, this being evident from the fact that he was for some years a member of Ennismore Council. His wife, who was formerly Margaret Smithson, of South Monaghan, died four years ago, and there are five daughters and four sons surviving:—Mrs. McWilliams, of Bridgenorth; Mrs. Jas. Franks and Mrs. Thos. Franks, of Moose Jaw, Man.; Mrs. Jas. Reid, of Young's Point, and Miss Eliza H. Nurse, at home. The sons are, Messrs. Richard, of Ennismore; William, of Emily; Robert, of Fowler's Corners, Smith, and John, on the homestead, Lot 2, Concession 1, Ennismore. Mr. Nurse was a member of the Anglican church.

The funeral took place this afternoon, at one o'clock from the home of his son, Robert, Fowler's Corners, to Emily Cemetery.

A NEW INDUSTRY FOR PETERBOROUGH.

If the Town will Make a Twenty Years' Loan.

Guelph Company has an Eye on This City as Location for Creamery Manufacturing Industry.

Another industry is looking for a place to locate, and may decide to select Peterborough as the town on which their factory is to be re-established.

The Petrie Manufacturing Company, of Guelph, manufacturers of cream separators, etc., whose plant was recently destroyed by fire, will probably remove from Guelph, and has written to the clerks of different municipalities as follows:—

"We are not bonus hunters, but we are open to receive a proposition in the shape of a loan of $60,000, or a guarantee of our bonds for that amount for a period of 20 years, no interest to be paid by us for the first five years, after five years we are to pay interest at the rate of four per cent. per annum, and also to pay $4,000 per year on the principal, so that at the expiration of 20 years, the entire amount would be paid.

"The capacity of our works would be from $500,000 to $600,000 per year, with a pay roll running from $35,000 to $40,000."

The Company has opened negotiations with Peterborough, and if the Council decide to grant their request another industry may be added to the list of those already here.

HE LUNCHED ON CAKE.

Answered an Advertisement after it Had Been Published Two Years Ago in the Examiner.

This noon a down town business man accidentally turned over an old, faded Examiner clipping on his desk, and his eye was arrested by a small sub-heading of a local confectionery establishment. It was two years old at least and had miraculously escaped the shears. The sub-heading was "Cup-Cakes," and the first item was "Chocolate Spices, topped with Chocolate, 15 cents per dozen." It struck a chord of sympathy which had been waiting all this time for the psychological impact, and he fairly smacked his lips as the image of the "spicy chocolate cakes" arose before his mental vision. He immediately sent out and bought a dozen and went without his regular lunch to allow his newly-discovered appetite full sway. There is a moral in this. No matter how good an advertisement may be, it won't make a person answer it unless he wants the article advertised. No advertiser knows what day any person's needs are going to demand certain things. It may be a day a week, a month, year after date. So it is necessary to adverise patiently and persistently, and to rest assured that even when the ad. is old, paid for and supposedly dead and buried, it may be resurrected somewhere some day, and carry on its work.

HORSE DEALER WAS THROWN FROM BUGGY.

Serious Accident Nearly Resulted from a Runaway.

Mr. Jack Duncan, a local horse dealer, narrowly escaped very serious injury yesterday evening. Together with Mr. Harry Gibbs they were driving a new horse on Hunter street, when near the Oriental Hotel the horse, which was a very spirited one, took freight and bolted down the street. The efforts of Mr. Gibbs to hold him in were fruitless and as the buggy unexpectedly swerved Mr. Duncan was thrown out. His injuries, however, only amounted to a few bruises, and when the horse was at last got in hand, he was able to take his seat in the buggy again. The horse was travelling at a rapid rate and Mr. Duncan's escape can be termed fortunate if not marvellous.

REV. JAS. KILGOUR'S DEPLORED DEATH.

Superannuated Methodist Minister Passed Away

At 10 O'clock this Morning the Loss of a Most Highly Respected Citizen.

The death occurred this morning about ten o'clock, of Rev. Joseph Kilgour, at his residence, No. 6 Weller street. The sad news was soon learned in the business section of the town, and received with profound regret. The deceased has been ailing more or less all winter, but was only taken seriously ill about a week ago, dying this morning from heart trouble and other complications. He was 72 years of age, and leaves a heart-broken widow. He had no children.

The late Mr. Kilgour was a superannuated minister of the Methodist church. Faithful in his work and sincere in his actions he made himself greatly beloved by all with whom he came in contact. He was a man of the deepest convictions speaking freely of what he believed, scornful of the consequences. He entered the ministry in 1856, and his first charge was Ormestown, Huntingdon county, Quebec. In turn he filled the pulpits at Hudson, Lachute, and Aylmer, Quebec and Tweed, Shannonville, Morrisburg, Cannifftown, Smithfield, Baltimore, Welcome, Fraserville and Cavanville, Ont. On being superannuated in 1898 he came to Peterborough where he and Mrs. Kilgour have resided since. He was a reverent and consitent member of the Charlotte street Methodist church, and has occasionally filled the pulpits of the local Methodist churches. His sermons were of that deep, thoughtful nature, which always characterized his every action. Undoubtedly in his death Peterborough has lost one of its most highly respected citizens, one who recognized the work of his Master before all else.

The funeral will take place on Wednesday afternoon. A service will be held at his late residence, No. 6 Weller street, at 2.30 o'clock, and at the Charlotte street church at three. The interment will take place at the Little Lake Cemetery.

LATEST NEWS OF SPORT.

Opening of the Baseball Season at Hand—Interesting News of the Summer Games.

GOOD PROSPECTS FOR BASE-BALL IN 1904.

Manager Whitcroft to Place a Team in Midland League.

The "Excelsiors May Play Under the Name of the "Peterboroughs—The Re-Organized Team will be Strong.

The baseball season will soon be open, and the fans are anxiously waiting for the first game. Peterborough has had a record in baseball which is a very creditable one, and if all the present prospects are realized, this season will see some of the best ball games in the history of the town.

The Excelsior baseball team, which made such a splendid record for itself last year will be in the game again, this year, though possibly under a different name. The rapid progress of this team is a rather remarkable achievement. Two years ago the team was worrying along in the junior ranks, when Fred Whitcroft was induced to take the management of the team. His advent to the managerial position resulted most satisfactorily for the aggregation, as the sequel will show. He placed the team on a good basis and last year entered it in the City League making a splendid record, winning 10 games and losing only two.

The team is being reorganized for the season, and Manager Whitcroft states that it will be stronger than the nine which won the City League championship in 1903. A meeting will be held this week when the policy of the team for the season will be decided.

Baseball in Peterborough has had a record equalled by few towns of its size in the province, and it is confidently believed that this season will be a return of the town's former success.

In 1900 the team representing this town won the Midland League championship, and it would not be a surprise if the pennant landed somewhere in Manager Whitcroft's neighbourhood in 1904. He states that he has some new blood to introduce into the team this year. He has a new infielder under contract, other new faces will be seen when the season opens.

CAUGHT ON THE FLY.

The first practice will be held on Saturday afternoon.

• • • •

Jack Pilling will watch the initial bag again this year.

• • • •

Sheridan will be found doing business around third this season as usual.

• • • •

Simpson has signed with Manager Whitcroft, and will be making circus catches in the outfield.

• • • •

Waram who played short stop on last year's Excelsiors, will try his hand at the right garden this year.

• • • •

Sid Byers will be missed from the team this year. He has gone West, where he will doubtless be in the game.

• • • •

Manager Whitcroft has his eye on a couple of outfielders, and if he secures them, it will strengthen his team materially.

• • • •

"Norry" Miller, who played in one game last year and who made a good impression will be given a trial in the outfield this season.

• • • •

Clarke Earls, who figured on the champion Midland team in 1900, will be found on the reorganized Excelsior team this year.

• • • •

A rumour, apparently well-founded, says that Chris Graham will this year don an Excelsior uniform. He will be a valuable acquisition to the team.

• • • •

Howell, who held down the second bag so successfully last year, has not yet decided whether he will play this season. If he decides not to do so, it is to be hoped that he will lend his wing to some other good man.

• • • •

Ernest Belleghem is the only one of last year's Excelsior team who has not signed with Manager Whitcroft this year, but it is a pretty safe bet that he will be seen this year behind the bat as usual.

• • • •

The Excelsiors gave the public a good article of baseball last season and with the support which they deserve, this season should be able to put a winning team in the League and give the fans some of the fastest kind of ball.

• • • •

No arrangements have been made for grounds for the season. It is understood, however, that the diamond on the T.A.S. field will be levelled off, and with the grandstand completed this will give grounds equal to anything in the province.

• • • •

Flaherty, the wonder twirler, when seen Saturday, stated that he had signed with Manager Whitcroft again this year, and with him in the box the team will stand a pretty good chance. A number of clubs made Flaherty some flattering offers, but he much prefers to remain with the team that he first made his debut as a successful twirler with. He and the other members of the team are wisely content to remain in the ranks in the ranks of amateurs for a few seasons yet.

LACROSSE.

This week's Fergus News-Record makes the following lacrosse announcement:

"A very enthusiastic meeting of the officers and members of the Thistle lacrosse team and a number of their ardent supporters was held in Dr Johnson's office to discuss the lacrosse situation for the season of 1904. For some time it has been felt by the managers that some change would have to be made. Last season when Fergus again went into the intermediate series, most of the teams in this section dropped back to the juniors, and the Thistles were left the district without a struggle. This left us without a game at home, except one semi-final, and in order to see lacrosse our citizens were compelled to follow the team long distances from home at considerable expense and loss of time. These games were also late in the season when the weather was anything but pleasant, our players out of condition, and when our business men could least spare the time. This year's prospects appear, if anything, worse. If Fergus plays intermediate the rest drop out, feeling that it is a waste of time and energy to go on.

"At the meeting, after considerable discussion, it was unanimously decided to play senior lacrosse this season. The other teams that are expected to enter the senior series are Tecumseths, Queen City's and Chippewas of Toronto, Brantford and St. Catharines. This will ensure our citizens at least five games of best lacrosse ever witnessed in this section. Of course the Thistles may not land the championship, but they will make the others play as they never played before to retain their laurels. The team will be conducted on the same principles as heretofore—purely amateur—and, with possibly one or two exceptions, will be made up of the same players as last season.

The annual meeting of the Junior T. A. S. lacrosse club will be held on Tuesday evening of this week at 8.00 p.m., in the T. A. S. rooms. As the Juniors had a very successful season last year an even more successful one is anticipated this year. The secretary-treasurer will give his report of the season's work, and as other important matter will come up for consideration all interested or wishing to join are urgently requested to be on hand in time.

• • • •

The Telegram, in discussing the importunities of the two new Toronto senior teams to get players to play with the respective teams, says:

"Other men in dispute are McDonough, Roach and Henderson of Port Hope and Roach of Tecumsehs. They are all of the husky variety and pretty handy withal. The Port Hope Roach is a really good one. He played home for the Ontarios last season and was just about as effective as any man in the business.

• • • •

Frank Grimes and Donaldson, who were with the Port Hope Ontarios last year are in Ottawa this season. Where they will play is not yet announced.

• • • •

The meeting to be held on Saturday, April 23rd, in the Oriental Hotel, for the purpose of organizing the Trent Valley Lacrosse League will commence at 10 o'clock instead of at 1.30 p. m. It is believed that this hour will better suit the convenience of a majority of those who will be attending.

CRICKET

WHERE ARE PETERBOROUGH CRICKETERS?

That the Canadian cricket eleven to play the United States should be more representative of the Dominion is the idea of the committee appointed to choose the team. The general feeling in Toronto, as expressed to a representative of the Herald, is that there should be no attempt to secure places for local players whose merits could not compare with other candidates throughout Canada.

Several gentlemen interested in the game said that they hoped soon to see a team got together that would be composed of the best talent from British Columbia to the Maritime Provinces.

The easiest way to size up the talent is to encourage the institution of provincial matches, and it was suggested as a good beginning that Ontario might, this year, meet Quebec. Possibly the selecting committee will do something towards this. It will help to popularize the game.—Montreal Herald.

PETERBOROUGH'S TURN NEXT

Lindsay, Ont., April 8.—The Lindsay Cricket Club held its annual meeting last night in the Curling Club Rink, with a large and enthusiastic turn out of the club's members. Prospects were never brighter for cricket in Lindsay and a splendid eleven will be put on the field. A number of improvements will be made to the grounds and a new crease will be laid. The following officers were elected: Patrons, Hon. Senator McHugh, Dr. E. A. Vrooman, M.P., S. J. Fox, M.P.P., Mr. J. W. Woods, L. s Honor Judge Lean, his Honour Judge Harding. Hon. President, Mr. J. D. Flavelle; Hon. Vice-President, Mr. A. Montizambert; President, Mr. G. H. M. Baker; Vice-President, Mr. A. M. Paton; 2nd Vice-President, Dr. W. J. Brown, Captain, Mr. John Short; Treasurer, Mr. G. St. G. Baldwin; Secretary, Mr. R. G. Harstone. Managing Committee, Dr. F. A. Walters, Mr. N. F. A. McSwyn, Mr. W. Shelton, Mr. C. K. Brown, Mr. J. C. Harstone. The local club would like to arrange matches with Toronto clubs during July and August, and also for May 24th. Clubs desiring matches in Toronto or Lindsay kindly correspond with the secretary.

BOWLING-ON-THE-GREEN.

The annual meeting of the Bowling Club will be held Tuesday evening, April 12th, in the Canada Life office at 8.00 o'clock.

FOOTBALL.

The Belleville Intelligencer says: A sporting organization of comparatively recent origin, but the success of which is already assured, is the Midland Football League, which is now in its second year's existence. The annual meeting was recently held at Peterborough, when the officers for the year were elected. Last year only clubs from the purely Midland counties entered the League, but this year a number of other clubs have applied to be admitted, and it has now been decided to admit all clubs east of Toronto, which desire to compete for the handsome silver cup emblematic of the League championship, donated by Hon. J. R. Stratton. At a meeting to be held in Peterborough on Saturday, April 16th, the districts will be arranged and games scheduled.

• • • •

A letter has been received in town from Lieutenant Hayes of the 15th Regt., Belleville, stating that there is every probability that the Quinte Football League will unite with the Midland League, and a representative will be at the meeting here on Saturday.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A pie eating contest will take place to-night at Dolan's store.

The different meetings of the society are being well attended, and new members are being admitted at every one.

THE CHURCHES.

ALL SAINTS' CHURCH.

The Rector, Rev. W. Major, conducted both services yesterday. Both morning and evening sermons were particularly interesting and listened ot by very large congregations with wrapt attention. The preacher took as his morning text, 20th Chapter St. John, fifth and following verses. At the evening service he spoke from 6th chapter Ephesians, 11th verse.

The choir rendered the anthem, "King of Kings," at this service, with excellent effect, Miss M. Rush taking the solo very acceptably.

CHARLOTTE STREET CHURCH

The pastor, Rev. W. J. Jolliffe, preached at both services yesterday, and the congregations were large.

The musical portion of the service was especially enjoyed, the morning anthem being an arrangement of "Nearer My God to Thee." Mr. Geo. Doidge taking the baritone solo. For the offertory selection Miss Belleghem sang "There's Never a Day so Dreary." The evening anthem was "Great is the Lord," and Miss Belleghem and Mr. Jolliffe sang "Saved by Grace," for the offertory.

PARK STREET BAPTIST.

Six young people were baptized last night on confession of faith before an overflowing congregation. Next Sunday they will receive their first communion and be given the right hand of fellowship.

GEORGE STREET METHODIST.

Large congregations attended the services in the George street church yesterday, and the sermons preached by the pastor, Rev. J. P. Wilson, were highly appreciated. In the evening the subject was the "Prodigal Son," and from it some new lessons were drawn.

The music by the choir was in keeping with the day's services. In the morning the anthem was, "No, Not Desperingly," while that of the evening was "The King of Love My Shepherd is," by Shelley, Mr. G. W. Mulligan taking the baritone solo, while for the offertory selection a quartette composed of Misses Grey and Parnell and Messrs. Mulligan and Thornton, sang very acceptably, "Softly and Teuderly, Jesus is Calling."

SALVATION ARMY.

An address was given to a large congregation last night, by Staff Capt. MacNamara, on the 20 and 21st verses of the 57th chapter of Isaiah: "But the wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt. There is no peace saith my God to the wicked." The speaker ably dealt with the subject and finally pointed the people to the One that could give rest and peace. Mrs. Montgomery was the soloist. The band rendered in an efficient manner, the selection, "How Beautiful Upon the Mountains," by special request.

DR. TANNER WAS BEATEN.

Wonderful Survival—Dog Lived 47 Days Without Food.

Mr. Thomas Curry, who lives four miles below Prescott, has probably the most remarkable collie dog on record. This collie being a household pet was not addicted to roaming, and never left the farm where he was useful rounding up cows in winter. But on January 28, Collie having got ponderously fat from lying round the kitchen stove, took a trip out around the premises. He sniffed around behind an old shed, and suddenly felt an earthquake. When he came to after his fright, he found that he was down in a nine-foot hole, half buried with snow and a few rotten timbers. Above him he saw the bright blue sky, and about him the walls of an old dry well that used to water the cattle long before he became a dog.

Collie had never been in a well before. He howled at the sky till the stars came out. Then he rolled himself in his fat and went to sleep, dreaming that he was behind the kitchen stove. He woke to find himself still in the well, with not even a toad or a worm to keep him company. He howled again till his lungs were sore and the stars came again! Nobody came.

Collie decided that he would peacefully glide off to the land where all good doggies go. But he didn't. He stayed hungry four days. Then his stomach went to sleep, and he began to live on the fat he had stored up round the kitchen stove. He kept on doing this while the moon got full twice and waned again. He didn't notice the moon. He just slept and let it snow on him.

Now this was a Scotch collie; but on the 17th of Ireland he heard a bumping sound. A little girl's face peered down the well. She was looking for a puppy that had got lost. By accident she had discovered Collie, whose peepers were just about done blinking. The farmer came and pulled him out. He was as thin as a washboard, but still breathing—after forty-seven days without food!

Found Not Guilty.

Winnipeg, Man., April 8.—Walter B. Vanalstyne, charged with murdering a Galician last July at Keith's Camp, on the Canadian Northern, was found not guilty yesterday. The trial has been in progress nearly a week, and all the evidence was strongly in favor of the prisoner.

ON THE FARM.

There's many a successful business man who sits in his city office and lets his mind slip back to his boyhood days on the farm. How good it felt to live! What an appetite he had! How good everything tasted! How sound his sleep was! How eagerly he rose with the sun and raced with him through the long day. And now he's a successful man. But he can't sleep. He doesn't enjoy his food. His stomach is weak, his nerves are shaken, and he no more rises with the sun to race eagerly against him. His vitality is low and now and again his heart seems to plunge in his breast as if it would break loose. That's the price he has paid for success.

The mischief of the whole business is that he buys "tablets" of one sort or another to "aid" his digestion, and indulges in bromides and other nerve stimulants, just to hold himself together, and wonders why he seems to be getting worse.

The whole trouble with such a man generally lies in what is called a "weak" stomach. The food he eats does not nourish him because it is only partially digested and assimilated. No man can be stronger than his stomach, because it is in the stomach and allied organs of digestion and nutrition that strength is made from the food which is eaten.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It restores the strength of the body in the only way strength can be restored, by food which is perfectly digested and assimilated, when the diseased stomach (with its allied organs) is cured of disease. It is a blood-making, body-building medicine, inasmuch as blood is made from food and the body is built up by blood. It is not a stimulant, containing neither alcohol or any other narcotic.

NO OTHER DOCTOR FOR ME.

"Last spring, early, I wrote you my feelings and condition," says Mr. A. J. Vanderwater, 873 West Division Street, Chicago, Ill., "and you advised me to take Dr Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery (a few bottles) and then write you how I felt. I am happy to say I am getting to feel fine. In all I have taken six bottles of the 'Discovery' and four or five vials of the little 'Pellets.' They have done me worlds of good. All my friends say 'Vanderwater, how well you are looking. What in the world have you been doing?' I tell them I have been doctoring with Dr R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y. Why, they say, 'you haven't been there?' No, I say but I took his Golden Medical Discovery' and his little 'Pellets.' These medicines have wrought the great change in me. From a slow mope of a man that could hardly crawl, tired and sick all the time, and could do no work, to a man who can work, sleep, eat, and feel fine, and that tired feeling is all going away. I am very thankful that I wrote to Dr Pierce. His 'Golden Medical Discovery' and his little 'Pellets' have almost made a new man of me. I feel young as I did at thirty years. No other doctor for me, only Dr Pierce."

HAD GIVEN UP HOPE.

"I will express my thanks to you for the kindly advice you have given me in regard to my case," writes Miss Carrie I. Wharton, of Dunnavant, Spottsylvania Co., Virginia. "When I wrote to you last spring I was in a terrible state of health. Had given up all hope of ever being better. I spit up my food all the time and it seemed sour as vinegar. I would have a bad sick headache every other week; in fact, my head never felt clear, and I was perfectly broken down under the strain of losing my food constantly. I had read a great deal in your books of what your medicine had done for others, so I wrote you and got your advice. Bought two bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and the first dose I took I felt better. When I had finished taking the two bottles the vomiting had entirely stopped and my head was much better. I believe your medicines are just what we have need of them.

"I carefully read the books you sent me and ... especially ... for the Golden Medical Discovery, which ... I have a statement ... to publish, if you think it worth while. It might ... some one else to try ... medicine ... were suffering as I did. It was ... means ... of others that I was induced to try it. I shall always rely upon your advice and feel safe ... as you tell me."

CANADA'S EARTHQUAKE

MODIFIED AND KEPT IN CHECK BY OLD LAURENTIAN MOUNTAINS.

Earthquake Shock Felt in This Country Creates More Curiosity Than Alarm—The Birth of Seismic Science—Instruments Old and New—Few Earthquakes Harmful—Extent of Present Time Knowledge of the Subject.

No country in the world has been more mercifully exempt from earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and other terrible natural phenomena than Canada, and it is therefore with more curiosity than alarm that we note an earthquake shock felt in different parts of the Dominion. History records only one severe shock in this part of the North American Continent. This occurred in the Old Regime, as it is called by Parkman, and may, after all, have been a landslide, for in those early days scientific exactness was unknown. This disturbance, however, was one we would not willingly have done without, so we shall call it an earthquake out of gratitude. It was far more effective than a thousand whiskey detectives in putting an end to the liquor traffic among the Indians. The aborigines, whose consciences reproached them for their indulgence in fire water, were prompt to see in this portent the anger of God. They took it as a literal sign from heaven, and the priests wisely encouraged them in this interpretation. It was long before the memory of this visitation faded from the minds of the red men, and for many years the illicit trade in whiskey died out almost completely.

Our Grey Hairs Protect Us.

Since then there have been thousands of shocks recorded in Canada, but few, indeed, have originated here. Our old Laurentain Mountains are largely responsible for this happy immunity, for they are the most ancient hills in the world. Compared with these grey mountains the Alps and the Himalayas are mere striplings, beardless boys, who have yet aeons of existence before them ere they approach an age long since passed by the hoary veterans of Quebec. It is in the geologically new portions of the globe that earthquakes originate; in those portions where the subterranean fires burn more fiercely and nearer the surface. Thus we know that Japan and Borneo and South America are upstart and parvenu districts, despite the records of human antiquity preserved in Japan, for example. The shocks which these less favored lands experience are inevitable. In a few million years they will get shaken down; the ship will "find herself," and we shall not be able to scornfully condemn their inhabitants for the heinous crime of extreme youth.

The Birth of Seismic Science.

Slurs on Japan are peculiarly out of place in the discussion of earthquakes, for it was in the Chrysanthemum Kingdom that our science of the subject really began. When Japan threw open her doors to the world (how many important events date from that wonderful time) she was quick to appreciate the value of European science, as applied to her pest of earthquakes, and equally prompt to invite foreign scientists to investigate the subject, in the hopes of discovering some alleviation. Scientists were just as eager to revel in the mysteries in which this unknown land afforded, and soon they were swarming over the country. Much they had discovered, and much remained to be found out when the terrible earthquake of 1880 descended on Japan, destroying towns, obliterating valleys, leveling hills and forests, and causing the death of hundreds of persons. Before the ruins of some of the villages had been cleared away the Japanese Seismological Society had been formed. Most of our modern scientific knowledge of earthquakes has been acquired since then.

Instruments Old and New.

Before this time there had been numerous mechanical devices for the study of earthquakes. As instruments of precision they ranked with the cork on the floating line. These instruments would record the shock, just as the cork will dip when the fish bites, and that is about all they did. All these cumbrous contrivances were rendered obsolete by the modern seismograph, to which we owe any definite information we may have on the subject of earthquakes. Many old ideas have been swept away since this wonderful machine has come into existence—swept away so far as the scientist is concerned, although they linger in the minds of a majority of people. One might mention the lateral extent of an oscillation as an example. The popular idea of a quake is that the earth slides suddenly in one direction for a few feet, and then darts back to its starting point. It is a fact that the average extent of one of these quivers is from 1-5 to 1-10 of an inch. Windows may rattle, slates fall, and even buildings totter when the earth's movement is less than the height of one of these lines. Sometimes the extent of the oscillation is much greater. When it is half an inch the shock is sure to be attended by much loss. The movement of an inch will be destructive. In the great Japanese earthquake the shaking was quite visible, the extent of the oscillation in this case being nearly a foot.

Few Earthquakes Harmful.

Ninety per cent of earthquakes consist of elastic or semi-elastic oscillations. The others are accompanied by surface undulations, and are much the more dangerous. Fortunately, of the dangerous minority only an insignificant percentage is destructive to life and property. The average duration of a shock is a fraction of a second, and but for the seismograph we should not be aware that the large majority of them had actually occurred. The seismograph informs us that over large portions of the earth's surface there is a shock every half hour. In England the instruments record 100 disturbances every year, nearly all of them originating thousands of miles away, although in the year 1844 the crude instruments then in use detected twelve in one month in Perthshire. The rule is for one large earthquake to be attended by hundreds of smaller vibrations, mere echoes; as, for example, there were 3,364 minor shocks following the Japanese cataclysm. Earthquakes have no connection with volcanic eruptions, nor with the moon, nor with the tides, nor, indeed, with anything else. That they occur more frequently in winter than in summer is a fact, the significance of which we do not appreciate. This, popularly speaking, is about the extent of our knowledge on the subject at the present time. May Canada's personal acquaintance with it never increase!

Proposed New Diocese.

It is proposed by some, says The Canadian Churchman, to divide the Diocese of Nova Scotia, and now that the See is about to be vacated it would seem to be a favorable opportunity to consider the matter, and to take action, if it be deemed advisable. Nova Scotia is the oldest colonial diocese. And its first Bishop was consecrated in 1787 and exercised jurisdiction from Newfoundland to Niagara, at that time the limit of western settlement. In 1793 Dr. Mountain was appointed to the See of Quebec, and the Diocese of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. In 1839 and 1845 its easterly and western provinces were separated from it, leaving it as it is to-day, composed of the two civil provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. Its area is, in Nova Scotia, 29,900 square miles and Prince Edward Island 2,133 miles in extent. The population is 450,574 in the larger and 103,259 in the smaller province, making a total of 553,833. The church population is 72,083, viz., 66,107 in Nova Scotia and 5,976 in Prince Edward Island, being about one-eighth of the total number of souls. It is proposed to form a new diocese, consisting of the islands of Cape Breton and Prince Edward, and some of the eastern counties on the mainland in the Province of Nova Scotia. In population in the last twenty years there has been little or no increase though, now, owing to industrial and mining developments in Cape Breton, there promises to be in that section considerable growth in wealth and population. In the same territory the Roman Catholic Church has three dioceses and a church membership of 175,374. It would seem that there is much to be said for more Episcopal oversight, and the good that would result from the presence and influence of a bishop in the eastern part of this ancient diocese. There are one hundred clergy at present in the diocese; and this would leave each with a staff of fifty priests to start with and with a new centre of church influence created, a growth might be anticipated in both sections. The subject is well worthy of consideration and experience proves that the best results are attained when dioceses are not too large, either in territory or in population. The proposal to divide will be watched with interest, and we trust the Synod of Nova Scotia, will be guided from above in the consideration of this important subject.

We have used "Sunlight Soap," and we want to tell you that it is the best soap made, that's why we are writing. We found out that the Sunlight way is the best way to wash with "Sunlight Soap." At first we used to wash with Sunlight Soap in the old way as we did with common soap, but after we washed according to directions printed on the package, we would never wash the old way again. We first soap the articles, leave them to soak and then rub out lightly on the wash board. Not much to do and it makes the clothes white as snow.

FLAG OF LONDON TOWN.

Something About the Victoria Tower Over Which It Floats.—View of the Great City From Above.

It would hardly occur to the King, perhaps, when he entered the Houses of Parliament by the Victoria Tower, that this tower, so conspicuous among the glories of the capital, has a place of its own among the wonders of the world.

From its dizzy height floats an emblem of British power, which, whether London believed it or not, would hide a two-storied house from view. The great flag which floated there on Tuesday, hauled to its great height by machinery, looks like an ordinary piece of bunting from Westminster Bridge, but it took 400 yards of bunting to make it; it stretches, when the breeze opens its folds, to a length of sixty and a breadth of forty-five feet, and it is kept in its place by a flag-staff which has certainly no rival in England, and probably none in the world. This mast, rising from its base to a height of 110 feet, firmly fixed on its foundations with a diameter of 3 feet, is made of many sheets of iron, bolted together with hundreds of bolts, and it would weigh, if we could put it in the scales, not less than sixteen tons!

They who would reach the height from which London looks like some dim city of the mist must wind round and round the longest spiral staircase in the world. At the low iron door which brings you to its foot the staircase appears to be one unending iron thread, reaching up into darkness, and it is not until the visitor has gazed at it awhile that there breaks at the top, 350 feet above him, a blue light no bigger than a man's hand.

If the distant ray of light, losing itself in utter darkness a little way down the tower, does not unnerve him, the climber winds round the spiral staircase a dozen times, and finds himself, almost tired, on the first floor. He is in a room over 50 feet square, and in this grand apartment he will pause to reflect upon the splendours of the Victoria Tower.

The tower has a weight of 30,000 tons, and it helps us to realize its grandeur and strength if we reflect that its building was in progress for all but twenty years. The Londoner who went abroad for a year in the forties or the fifties came home to find that the new tower had risen not quite eight yards in his absence, and so, at the rate of 23 feet a year, the Victoria Tower grew, from 1842 until it was completed.

It has within it over 110 separate rooms, each one fireproof, each containing the precious State papers which tell the story of England and its Kings. Divided into eleven floors, all save two with sixteen rooms, the tower is a miracle of construction. How little the Londoners, who gazes at this splendid pile, imagines that at the top of it, on the 11th floor, works a powerful steam engine. It is its work to haul up through the well of the spiral staircase, the bundles of State papers, delivering them on the floor where they may be required, and it is a wonderful sight to see this huge narrow passage throb, as it were, with busy life. It is a wonderful sight, indeed, when the engine is not at work. The spiral staircase, stretching from the ground to the top, apparently without a single support, and looking like one long thin line of iron-work which the least over-balancing would bring clattering down, is one of the engineering marvels of our day. In reality it is held in its place by wrought-iron rods hanging from each floor through which it passes, but the rods are not readily visible to the eye, and it needs a more than ordinary nerve to scale this fragile staircase to the greatest height in London.

Yet this suspended Jacob's ladder has its own magnificent reward for those who climb it to the top. If one has enthusiasm to spare for architecture, the Victoria Tower has enough of the architect's genius to engage him for much longer than he will be able to stay. But it is the view of London from the top which will appeal to him who is neither architect nor antiquarian. The great city lies deep below like a toy ... of a diminished and smoky model of itself, wrote a climber nearly half a hundred years ago.

Even half-way up the tower London seems a dwarf city as you walk around ... above the first tier of windows, an arcade with massive pillars and enormous arches, and as wide as some of the streets you dimly see below. But the roof is the treasure of the tower. Built as lightly as could be, consistent with its safety from the wind, it weighs, nevertheless, 400 tons. The little parapet, looking like a speck of stone from Parliament Square, is 16 feet high. The lions and crowns are taller than a man, and the gilt tops to the four turrets are iron crowns, 5 feet across and a ton each in weight. The gilt railing at the top is 6 feet high, the four lions which guard the corners are 20 feet high. From these corners rise four arched buttresses of cast iron, forming the centre into a crown 30 feet above the roof, and through this again passes the flagstaff, from the top of which floats 400 yards of bunting made into the biggest Union Jack in England.

No man, except in mid-air, has ever seen London from the height at which this great flag flies.

THE HASTINGS COACH.

Ghostly Legend Attached to the House of the Earl of Loudon.

Mr. T. P. O'Connor tells the following in his Mainly About People: To many prominent Scottish families there is, as is well known, attached some ghostly legend or other, generally taking the form of weird music or a similar manifestation, which is believed to forewarn death of some member of the house. Of such a nature is the famous "Hasting coach," which is said to be heard (although not seen) driving to the door, when the death is imminent of any member of the ancient family of which the Earl of Loudon and Lord Grey de Ruthyn are now the heads. Lady Victoria Kirwan, mother of the lady who has for some years past devoted herself to further the material and moral welfare of the working shop girls of the West End, had good reason, she used to tell her intimate friends, for believing in the truth of this legend. Her brother was the fourth and last Marquis of Hastings, who died in 1868, in his twenty-seventh year, after a career on the turf alike brief, brilliant and disastrous.

Lady Victoria's story was that she was dining in her brother's company (I think in his own house) in the autumn of 1868, soon after the Newmarket October meeting, when Lord Hastings was seen on a race course for the last time. In the middle of dinner she heard the grinding of carriage wheels on the gravel outside, and immediately afterwards a loud ring at the door bell. The servants apparently heard nothing, but the young Marquis instantly rose from the table, and said he would go himself and see who had arrived. A few moments later he returned to the dining-room with a white face and a strange smile, and, looking around on the assembled company, offered to wager a large sum that there would be a funeral from the house within a month. Three weeks later he himself was lying dead in an upper chamber. The ghostly warning had come to no one in the room except his sister and himself—for it is heard only by those of the Hastings blood.

When Lord Minto Was Press

"One of the Crowd," writing to The New York Sun, upon the contradictions in the news from the seat of war, says: "I remember once reading in a magazine article, written, I believe, by the present Governor-General of Canada, of a correspondent in the last Afghan war, who submitted to the press censor with the British army a letter intended for transmission to his paper, in which a picturesque description of Afghan scenery was given, with crocodiles in the rivers, and palm trees along their banks. The censor sent for the writer, and pointed out to him the absurdity of putting crocodiles into the icy waters of the rivers and palm trees where none could flourish, but the correspondent insisted that the British public would be satisfied with nothing less; and so, as there were no military secrets to be extracted from the saurians and palm trees, the letter went forward."

It takes about twenty-five days to make a bank note and get it fully seasoned.

First Symptoms of Paralysis

Should warn you to revitalize the wasted nerve cells by the use of

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Though paralysis is dreaded by everybody, some do not recognize in nervous headache, sleeplessness, irritability and low spirits the indications of nervous exhaustion which point to paralysis as the final outcome.

Whatever else you may neglect do not allow the nervous system to become exhausted and run down.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is the most potent nerve vitalizer known to science to-day. You can use it with positive assurance that each dose is bound to be of some benefit to you in building up the system and preventing nervous prostration and paralysis.

Mrs. S. J. Schooley, 12 Arthur avenue, St. Thomas, Ont., states:—"I was troubled a great deal with nervousness, severe headache and sleeplessness and at times a sort of numb feeling would come over me. I was in constant fear of paralysis as the doctors told me my trouble was exhaustion of the nervous system. I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and soon noticed a great improvement. Now I can say that my nerves are completely restored. I sleep very much better and the distressing feeling of numbness has disappeared."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Toronto.

To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

Purified by Suffering

BY MARY J. HOLMES.

"In a tremor of anger and excitement I quitted the spot, my mind wholly made up with regard to my future. That there was something wrong about Genevra I did not doubt and I would not give her a chance to explain by telling her what I had seen, but sent her back to England, giving her ample means for defraying the expenses of her journey and for living in comfort after her arrival there. From Rome we went to Naples, and then to Switzerland, where Hatty died, leaving us alone with little Jamie. It was at Berne that I received an anonymous letter from England, the writer stating that Genevra was with her aunt, that the whole had ended as he thought it would, that he could readily guess at the nature of the trouble, and hinting that if a divorce was desirable on my return to England, all necessary proof could be obtained by applying to such a number in London, the writer announcing himself a brother of the man who had once sought Genevra, and saying he had always opposed the match, knowing Genevra's family.

"This was the first time the idea of a divorce had entered my mind, and I shrank from a final separation. But mother felt differently. It was not a new thought to her, knowing as she did that the validity of a Scotch marriage, such as ours, was frequently contested in the English courts. Once free from Genevra the world this side the water would never know of that mistake, and she set herself steadily to accomplish her purpose. To tell you all that followed our return to England, and the steps by which I was brought to sue for a divorce, would make my story too long, and so I will only state that, chiefly by the testimony of the anonymous letter-writer, whose acquaintance we made, a divorce was obtained, Genevra putting in no defence, but, as I heard afterwards, settling down into an apathy from which nothing had power to rouse her until the news of her freedom from me was carried to her, when amid a paroxysm of tears and sobs, she wrote me a few lines, assuring me of her innocence, refusing to send back her wedding ring, and saying God would not forgive me for the great wrong I had done her. I saw her once after that by appointment, and her face haunted me for years, for, Katy, Genevra was innocent, as I found after the time was past when reparation could be made."

Wilford's voice trembled, and for a moment there was a silence in the room, while he composed himself to go on with the story:

"She would not live with me again if she could, she said, denouncing bitterly the Cameron pride, and saying she was happier to be free; and there we parted, but not until she told me that her traducer was the old discarded suitor who had sworn to have revenge, and who, since the divorce, had dared seek her again. A vague suspicion of this had crossed my mind once before, but the die was cast, and even if the man were false, what I saw myself in Rome still stood against her, and so my conscience was quieted, while mother was more than glad to be rid of a daughter-in-law of whose family I knew nothing. Rumors I did hear of a cousin whose character was not the best, and of the father who for some crime had fled the country, and died in a foreign land, but as that was nothing to me now, I passed it by, feeling it was best to be released from one of so doubtful antecedents.

"In the spring of 185— we came back to New York, where no one had ever heard of the affair, so quietly had it been managed. I was still an unmarried man to the world, as no one but my mother knew my secret. With her I often talked of Genevra, wishing sometimes that I could hear from her, a wish which was finally gratified. One day I received a note requesting an interview at a downtown hotel, the writer signing himself as Thomas Lambert, and adding that I need have no fears, as he came to perform an act of justice, not of retribution. Three hours later I was locked in a room with Genevra's father, the same man whom I had seen in Rome. Detected in forgery years before, he had fled from England and had hidden himself in Rome, where he accidentally met his daughter, and so that stain was removed. He had heard of the divorce by a letter which Genevra managed to send him, and braving all difficulties and dangers he had come back to England and found his child, hearing from her the story of her wrongs, and as well as he was able setting himself to discover the author of the calumny. He was not long in tracing it to Le Roy, Genevra's former suitor, whom he found in a dying condition, and who with his last breath confessed the falsehood which was imposed upon me, he said, partly from motives of revenge, and partly with a hope that free from me, Genevra would at the last turn to him. As proof that Mr Lambert told me the truth, he brought the dying man's confession, written in a cramped, trembling hand, which I recognized at once. The confession ended with the solemn assertion: 'For aught I know or believe, Genevra Lambert is as pure and true as any woman living.'

"I cannot describe the effect this had upon me. I did not love Genevra then. I had outlived that affection, but I felt remorse and pity for having wronged her and asked how I could make amends.

"'You cannot,' the old man said, 'except in one way, and that she does not desire. I did not come here with any wish for you to take her for your wife again. It was an unequal match which never should have been; but if you believe her innocent she will be satisfied. She wanted you to know it—I wanted you to know it, and so I crossed the sea to find you.'

"The next I heard of her was in the columns of an English newspaper which told me she was dead, while in another place a pencil mark was lightly traced around a paragraph, which said that 'a forger, Thomas Lambert, who escaped years ago and was supposed to be dead, had recently reappeared in England, where he was recognized, but not arrested, for the illness which proved fatal. He was attended,' the paper said, 'by his daughter, a beautiful girl, whose modest mien and gentle manner had done much towards keeping the officers of justice from her dying father, no one being able to withstand her pleadings that her father might die in peace.'

"I was grateful for this tribute to Genevra, for I felt that it was deserved; and I turned again to the notice of her death, which must have occurred within a short time of her father's, and was probably induced by past troubles and recent anxiety for him.

"Genevra Lambert died at Alnwick, aged 22. There could be no mistake, and with a tear to the memory of the dead whom I had loved and injured, I burned the paper, feeling that now there was no clue to the secret I was as anxious to preserve as was my mother.

"And so the years wore on till I met and married you, withholding from you that yours was not the first love which had stirred my heart. I meant to tell you, Katy, but I could not for the great fear of losing you if you knew all. And then an error concealed so long is hard to be confessed. I took you across the sea to Brighton, where I first met Genevra, and then to Alnwick, seeking out the grave which made assurance doubly sure. It was natural that I should make some inquiries concerning her last days, I questioned the old sexton who was at work near by. Calling his attention to the name, I said it was an uncommon one and asked if he knew the girl.

"'Not by sight, no,' he said. 'She was only here a few days before she died. I've heard she was very winsome and that there was a scandal of some kind mixed up with her.'

"I would not ask him any more, and without any wrong to you, I confess that my tears dropped upon the turf under which I knew Genevra lay.'

"I am glad they did; I should hate you if you had not cried." Katy exclaimed, her voice more natural than it had been since the great shock came.

"Do you forgive me, Katy? Do you love me as well as ever?" Wilford asked, stooping down to kiss her, but Katy drew her face away and would not answer then.

She did not know herself how she felt towards him. He did not seem just like the husband she had trusted in so blindly. Again he asked forgiveness, and bent down to kiss her, but Katy answered "Not yet, Wilford, not till I feel all right towards you. A wife's kiss should be sincere."

"As you like," trembled on Wilford's lips, but he beat back the words and walked up and down the room, knowing now that his journey must be deferred till morning, and wondering if Katy would hold out till then.

It was long past midnight, but to retire was impossible, and so for one whole hour he paced through the room, while Katy lay with her eyes closed and her lips moving occasionally in words of prayer she tried to say, asking God to help her, and praying that she might in future lay her treasures up where they could not so suddenly be swept away. Wearily the hours passed, and the gray dawn was stealing into the room when Wilford again approached his wife and said: "You know I was to have left home last night on business. As I did not go then it is necessary that I leave this morning. Are you able to stay alone for three days more? Are you willing?"

"Yes—oh, yes," Katy replied, feeling that to have him gone while she battled with the pain lying so heavy at her heart, would be a great relief.

Perhaps he suspected this feeling in part, for he bit his lip impatiently, and without another word called up the servant whose duty it was to prepare his breakfast. Cold and cheerless seemed the dining room, to which an hour later he repaired, and tasteless was the breakfast without Katy to share it. She had been absent many times before, but never just as now, with this wide gulf between them, and as he broke his egg and tried to drink his coffee, Wilford felt like one from whom every support had been swept away. He did not like the look on Katy's face or the sound of her voice, and as he thought upon them, self began to whisper again that she had no right to stand out so long when he had confessed everything, and by the time his breakfast was finished, Wilford Cameron was, in his own estimation, an abused and injured man, so that it was with an air of defiance rather than humility that he went again to Katy. She, too, had been thinking, and as the result of her thought she lifted up her head as he came in and said: "I can kiss you now, Wilford."

It was human nature, we suppose—at least it was Wilford's nature—which for an instant tempted him to decline the kiss proffered so lovingly; but Katy's face was more than he could withstand, and when again he left that room the kiss of pardon was upon his lips, and comparative quiet was in his heart.

"The picture, Wilford—please bring me the picture, I want to see it," Katy called after him, as he was running down the stairs.

Wilford would not refuse, and hastily unlocking his private drawer he carried the case to Katy's room, saying to her: "I would not mind it now. Try and sleep awhile. You need the rest so much."

Katy knew she had the whole day before her, and so she nestled down among her pillows and soon fell into a quiet sleep, from which Esther at last awakened her, asking if she should bring her breakfast to her room.

"Yes, do," Katy replied, adjusting her dress and trying to arrange the matted curls, which were finally confined in a net until Esther's practiced hands were ready to attack them, then sending Esther from the room Katy took the picture of Genevra from the table where Wilford had laid it.

Could Not Lie On Her Left Side.

WAS TROUBLED WITH PAIN IN HER HEART FOR SIX YEARS.

Expected Her Friends Would Find Her Dead.

Mrs. C. Bondreau, Campbellton, N.B., was completely cured by

MILBURN'S Heart and Nerve Pills.

She tells of her experience in the following letter: "I was troubled with a pain in my heart and weakness for six years. Most of the time I could not lie on my left side. I consulted a doctor but got no relief and was completely discouraged. I did not think I would live long and expected my friends would find me dead. A friend brought me a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and I took them to please her, not thinking they would do me any good. I had not used half the box when I commenced to feel myself getting better and by the time I had taken two boxes I was completely cured and can recommend them to all sufferers from heart trouble."

The strongest castle could be reduced by siege if the garrison could be starved out. The strongest body has to give up the fight when starvation weakens it. There are more deaths from starvation than the world dreams of. When the stomach is diseased and the food eaten is not digested and assimilated, then the strength of the body begins to fail because of lack of nutrition, and the weak body falls an easy victim to the microbes of disease.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It restores physical strength in the only possible way, by enabling the assimilation of the nutrition contained in food.

"I was sick for over three years with a complication of stomach troubles," writes Mr. John B. Castona, residing at 241 Arch St. Chicago, Illinois. "Had tried every good physician I knew of, as well as many patent medicines, but received only temporary relief. One day a friend recommended your Golden Medical Discovery. I immediately procured some and began its use. Commenced to gain the first week and after I had taken only one bottle I could eat as well as any one without experiencing ill effects. I took five bottles and to-day am happy to announce that I am as well and healthy as any one could be. I owe it all to Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery."

The sole motive for substitution is to permit the dealer to make the little more profit paid by the sale of less meritorious medicines. He gains. You lose. Therefore accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery."

Early English Lotteries.

The first lottery in England, so far as can be ascertained, began to be drawn on Jan. 12, 1569, at the west door of St. Paul's Cathedral, and continued day and night till the 6th of May. The scheme, which had been announced two years before, shows that the lottery consisted of forty thousand lots or shares at ten shillings each, and that it comprehended "a great number of good prizes, as well as of ready money as of plate, and certain sorts of merchandise." The object of any profit that might arise from the scheme was the reparation of harbors and other useful public works.

Lotteries did not take their origin in England; they were known in Italy at an earlier date; but from the year mentioned down to 1826 (excepting for a short time following upon an act of Queen Anne) they continued to be adopted by the English Government as a source of revenue. It is difficult to realize that there were large and imposing offices in London, and pretentious agencies in the provinces, for the sale of lottery tickets; while flaming advertisements on walls, in new books and in the public journals proclaimed the desirability of such and such "lucky" offices.

What Annoyed Phil May.

In an article on the late Phil May and his work it is stated by one who obviously knew him well that he was of such a kindly nature that he was unable to say "No" for fear of giving pain. "He was done to death by a shoal of hangers-on who sent him to his grave before he was forty broken in health and empty in pocket. More than one even forged his name to bills, trusting to his good nature not to prosecute, and they were right in their calculations. On one occasion he was shown such a bill, and, strange to say, he showed resentment. 'I'm annoyed—I'm really very much annoyed,' he said quietly, as he stared at the signature; 'it's so badly done!'"—Magazine of Art.

EIGHT REASONS

why Scott's Emulsion is an ideal food-medicine.

1. It is partly pre-digested and therefore passes quickly into the blood.
2. It imposes no tax upon the stomach or other digestive organs.
3. It does not cause fermentation such as usually results from ordinary food when the stomach is weak.
4. Its action is mild and even, insuring the greatest nourishment with the least effort.
5. Its quality is always uniform.
6. It feeds and strengthens the bones, blood, nerves and tissues.
7. It is one of the greatest flesh producers known to medical science.
8. It is palatable and agreeable to the taste and easily taken.

How Dean Swift Helped the Business of His Barber.

One of the institutions of all civilized countries is the barber. Formerly, when wigs were worn and beards were not, the barber had his hands full. Dean Swift was every day shaved by a barber with whom he was on excellent terms.

When he was busy on his famous customer one morning the barber said he had a great favor to ask his reverence, adding that at the suggestion of his neighbors he had taken a small public house at the corner of the churchyard. He hoped, with two businesses, that he might make a better living for his family.

"Indeed," said the Dean, "and what can I do to promote the happy union?"

"If it please you," said the barber, "some of our customers have heard much about your reverence's poetry; so that, if you would but condescend to give me a smart little touch in that way to clap under my sign, it might be the making of me and mine forever."

"But what do you intend for your sign?" inquired the cleric.

"The 'Jolly Barber,' if it pleases your reverence, "with a razor in one hand and a full pot in the other."

"Well," rejoined the Dean, "in that case there can be no great difficulty in supplying you with a suitable inscription."

Taking up a pen he instantly wrote the following couplet, which was duly painted on the sign and remained there for many years:

"Rove not from pole to pole, but step in here,
Where nought excels the shaving but the beer."

Leadership and Nerve Power.

The tragedy is great. Hysteria, formerly the curse of the female sex, has been the cause of the downfall of two distinguished men. Lord Randolph Churchill succumbed to the ailment, Lord Rosebery has lost his grip of men, if not of matters, in consequence of fragile nerve fibre. No brain, however brilliant, can suffice in a leader of men. The extraordinary nerve power of Joseph Chamberlain is felt throughout the British Empire. Granted that at times his figures are inaccurate, his presentation of facts open to criticism of friends and foes alike, he yet has the power which makes him the acknowledged leader of men. Those who know him best, and who have the privilege of intimate personal intercourse—and they are few and far between—tell me that the way in which he guards the quietness of his home life is most remarkable. His wife simply devotes herself to his requirements and needs. She is hardly intimately known to a dozen women in her own circle of acquaintances. Mrs. Joseph Chamberlain is in public a "woman of no importance." She devotes herself to caring for the home in which the great statesman finds the storage of his electrical energy and power. All his speeches are, I am told, read over to her, in the quiet of his library, and her American blood tells when her criticisms are levelled at some point which she deems obscure, by reason of the language used.

THEY BADLY WANT "TEXAS" BURDELL.

London Police Hot after the Fugitive Convict.

The London, Ont., police, are hot after "Texas" Burdell, the noted criminal, who escaped from the gaol there last week, and has not since been heard of. Circulars have been sent to the police of every town, with Burdell's picture and description, and among the rest Chief Roszel has received one of them. It is for "Harry Burdell, alias McCrimmon, alias Darvie, alias Vance, alias 'Texas.'"

He is described as follows:—

"Aged 27 years; 6 feet 9 inches in height; wiry built; fair complexion; dark brown hair which he generally wears long, and parts in middle; scar one inch long on point of right elbow; vaccination scar on left arm, near shoulder; bullet mark back left knee; several small scars on right cheek; small scar on left finger on right hand; small scar on first finger of right hand.

"We hold warrant for his arrest on charge of burglary and housebreaking. Great care should be taken in arresting this man as he will stop at nothing to effect his escape. He has served several terms in prison. He has already been convicted in various places under different names in each case, and if arrested for any fresh offence will give a new alias. If captured wire at our expense.

SUGAR-MAKING ON SUNDAY A NECESSITY.

Decision of the Court Handed Out in the Berlin Test Case.

The following despatch from Berlin will be read with considerable interest in Peterborough, where the question of sugar manufacture is a live one at the present time:

Berlin, Ont., April 7.—Police Magistrate Weir, who has heard the case of the Lord's Day Alliance against the Ontario Sugar Company, in which three employees were charged with having worked on Sunday, January 11th, 1903, handed out judgment to-day. After reviewing the nature of the charges laid against the defendants, and referring to the decision of the Privy Council in regard to the Lord's Day Act, which was declared to be "beyond the competency of the Ontario Legislature to enact," he expressed the opinion that the process of making sugar from beets in the factory of the Ontario Sugar Company in the Township of Waterloo, is a continuous one, and that the beet-slicing machine, the vacuum pan and the crystallizer, are each a part of such continuous process. "Therefore, I find the work of the defendants on the 11th day of January, 1903, being the Lord's Day, was a work of necessity. Having arrived at this conclusion, I need express no opinion on the question of law raised by the counsel for the defence. I dismiss the case with costs."

In connection with the above, the secretary of the Alliance has made the following statement:

"The Alliance initiated this proceeding in order to have that very question of necessity carefully considered and in a judicial way decided. If the claim of necessity is warranted, then the Alliance has no objection to the operation of the factory. We claim, however, that merely commercial considerations, or the question of mere profit and loss are not sufficient to warrant an industry depriving their employees of rest day rights. Our local committee of course will have to consider the evidence submitted in this case, as well as the judgment of the magistrate, before a definite decision is reached as to whether an appeal will be taken to the Court of Sessions. There is, however, every probability that an appeal will be made."

PRESENTATION TO MR. MRS. W. SMITHSON.

Both Were Pleasantly Remembered by Friends on Eve. of Their Departure.

A number of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. William Smithson called at their residence, Lot 5, Con. 4, South Monaghan on Tuesday evening last and presented them with the following address and two Easy chairs:

To Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Smithson,—

Our apology for coming unbidden to your home this evening is two-fold. We believe that some time or other true friendship should be given formal expression, and faithful service be openly acknowledged and extolled. J. M. Barrie says, "The praise that comes of itself does not make us vain but humble," and if this be true such praise is twice blessed; "it blesseth him that gives," as well as "him that takes." You will not regret us when we ask to share this blessing with you tonight.

We have been prompted to gather here by a sincere regard for you both.

During the many years you have spent in our township and community we have found you ever worthy of our confidence and the better we have known you the more have our admiration and regard for you increased. Like true friends you have helped us in our troubles, rebuked us in our follies and rejoiced with us in our successes. Our gratitude as well as our friendship has brought us here to-night. In your humility you may be inclined to discount our assurance that we owe you a deep debt for all the services you have rendered us in the past. We are convinced however, that we speak only what is true. A great writer says, "To know one person who is positively to be trusted will do more for a man's moral nature than all the sermons he ever heard." You have been such an influence in our midst, as, with stainless reputation you have pursued in quiet simplicity a life that has been an example and an inspiration to us all. Some of us have been identified with you in church activity. We know how truly you have kept the interests of the church at heart and laboured for her success. All of us have been citizens with you of one of the fairest townships, provinces and counties in this bright world and we recall to-night how loyal and disinterested has been your service to the state and how worthy has been the ideal of patriotism you have inculcated by word and deed. The present has seemed to us a fitting occasion for expressing our long-cherished affection and gratitude, inasmuch as we have learned with regret that you are about to remove from our midst. We are sorry that circumstances have made this step necessary but rejoice that you are still to be near us and that you will continue to interest yourself in our welfare as you have done in the past. Will you be good enough to give these chairs a place in your new home as a permanent symbol of the appreciation we have tried to express. It will please us to know that they are adding to your daily comfort in your new surroundings.

Our best wishes are with you and Miss Smithson and the other friends who are to constitute your household, and our earnest prayer is that we may often meet you in this life and be united with you permanently in the Home Above.

Signed on behalf of your friends.
South Monaghan, April 5, 1904.

NEWS NUGGETS.

—The town council will meet this evening.

—All the leading brands of cigars and tobaccos at O'Brien's Cigar Store, 423 George street.

—Others may copy our name, but there is only one "Framery" in town. Remember the address, 428 George street.

—Maple syrup! Maple syrup! Fresh from the sappy trees this week. Only $1.20 per gallon. Also pure honey, fresh eggs and butter, Orange Meat, and other breakfast cereals, at Jas. R. Bell's grocery, 161 Hunter street.

—To meet the demands of the ever increasing patronage, "The Framery" is being enlarged and improved. Mr. G. F. King, of Ottawa, with 15 years experience in picture framing, has associated himself with the concern as partner, and the service given by the firm is now unrivalled in their line in town. 428 George street.

NOVEL SUICIDE CASE.

The Court of King's Bench, London, England, on 14th March, heard and decided a novel suicide case. One Firnberg, in November, 1902, secured a policy of assurance from the Mutual Life of New York, for $20,000. He agreed that certain answers and statements should be the basis and form part of the contract, and signed another statement, which read:—"I also warrant and agree that I will not commit suicide whether sane or insane during the period of one year from the date of this said contract." In February, 1903, he committed suicide in a fit of insanity. Mr. Justice Bigham decided in favour of the company, it being clear that they intended that, in the event of the assured committing suicide they should not be liable under the policy. While the judgment is equitably sound it was most extraordinary for a man to undertake that he would not commit suicide, sane or insane, within a given period, as though becoming insane were a voluntary act.

Charged With Bigamy.

Toronto, April 11.—John H Wood, a laborer, 26 years of age, who has been living at 7 Rosedale Lane, was married: After living with his wife for three months, they separated. A year ago, without going through the formality of procuring a divorce, he married Margaret Skelhorne. The first wife, Emma, learned of this second marriage, and swore out a warrant charging both John and Margaret with bigamy. They were both arrested yesterday.

Fines Amounted to Nearly $225.

Woodstock, April 11.—Saturday, in camera, Police Magistrate Ball fined the thirty defendants in the Good Friday cocking main $5 and costs each, amounting in all to nearly $225. The magistrate refuses to give out the names, and there is great indignation in town. Several of the pastors spoke of the matter from the pulpit yesterday, and there may be a public mass meeting to protest.

Drank Carbolic Acid.

Woodstock, April 11.—George Harwood, one of Woodstock's best known citizens, committed suicide by drinking two ounces of carbolic acid Saturday evening. He was 70 years of age, and was a native of this city. No reason can be assigned for the rash act. He retired from active business life some years ago.

Is Your Piano in Tune?

The change of seasons affects pianos as well as everything else. Mr. Geo. Gumpricht, practical piano maker and tuner, with twenty-eight years' experience, attends to all orders left at Mr. H. S. Macdonald's drug store.

DEATH AT A FIRE.

Mr. Pollard of the Napanee Express Suddenly Called.

Napanee, April 11.—Saturday morning about 5 o'clock fire was discovered in F. C. Richardson's photograph gallery, Dundas street. The building and contents are a total loss, estimated at $3,000.

While the fire was in progress John Pollard, editor and proprietor of The Napanee Express, left his home to witness the fire, but before proceeding a block he became faint and sank to the ground. He was carried to his home and expired an hour afterwards. Heart failure was the cause of his death. Deceased came to Napanee fourteen years ago from Tiverton, Bruce County. A widow and three children survive.

Fatal Head-On Collision.

Guelph, April 11.—Farmers' Cut, about a mile and a half east of this city, was the scene of a fatal accident yesterday morning between 1 and 2 o'clock, when two freight trains met with terrific force. Fireman Snowden and Brakeman Harvey Hall of the westbound train were instantly killed, and Engineer Paton of the same train and Fireman Payston of the eastbound train were seriously injured. The engines were telescoped and twelve cars smashed to kindling wood and piled on top of each other 30 feet high.

Lost Both Legs.

Ottawa, April 11.—Word was received last night of an accident at Chalk River, in which John Wilson, a C.P.R. brakeman of North Bay, lost both legs. He was operating a switch to let the westbound transcontinental through and did not notice a freight engine shunting in the yard. He was knocked down by the van and the engine passed over his legs, completely severing them. He was taken to Pembroke for treatment, but is hardly likely to survive the shock. He was a married man with three children.

Brakeman Killed.

Moncton, N. B., April 11.—Austin Laviolette, aged 20, brakeman on the Intercolonial Railway, was killed yesterday morning, 13 miles from here, by a special freight train. He fell between the cars, 25 of which passed over his body, which was mangled badly. Nothing was known of the accident till the train reached here.

Fingers Taken Off.

Woodstock, April 11.—Colin Denny, a lad employed at the Canada Furniture Factory, had the tips of the fingers on his right hand taken off at the factory Saturday by a buzzer. He is a son of O. C. Denny, East Zorra.

Seven Killed.

Santa Barbara, Cal., April 11.—Seven persons were killed, a score fatally hurt and 30 seriously injured in a street car accident yesterday. The car ran on a steep grade and jumped the track.

NUN'S ISLAND SUBMERGED.

Grand Trunk, St. John, Que., Lines Under Water For a Mile.

Montreal, April 11.—The municipality of Verdum is flooded and the lower part of Nun's Island completely covered. The ice jammed 30 feet high between the island and the mainland. At 3 oclock yesterday afternoon the water was up to the second storey of the convent on the island. Queen's Park is a lake, the water being the highest known.

Laprairie is pretty well under water, and the ice shove destroyed four houses. In St. Lambert the water is up to the fences, and the streets are covered in Longueuil. The Grand Trunk, St. John, Que., line is submerged for a mile near Brosseau. At 11 o'clock, however, the water had fallen a great deal, although the ice has not moved.

Moira River Rising.

Tweed, April 11.—The Moira River at this place is still rising, doing a great amount of damage. The Day of Quinte railway bridge, a mile north, has been carried away. The electric light company's foot bridge over the dam is gone, and the water is overflowing the power house. The Deseronto Milling Company's dam has been badly damaged and the mill cannot work. The electric light company's new brick building has the side torn out by the ice. The Ontario Powder Works bridge is in danger and may go. The water was still rising very fast on Saturday night and may do greater damage.

In Memoriam of Hiram Walker.

Walkerville, April 11.—The new St. Mary's Episcopal Church here, erected by the present generation of the Walkers in memorium to the late Hiram Walker, the founder of the firm, and his wife, was dedicated yesterday with appropriate ceremonies. The church, which is a fine architectural study, with its grounds and rectory and Sunday school adjoining, is the free gift of the builders, together with an endowment of $25,000 to the Church of England in Canada.

Russian Jews Not Molested.

St. Petersburg, April 11.—The Associated Press has received special reports from all the Jewish districts of Russia regarding the happenings of Easter Sunday. The Russian Easter passed quietly and there was absolutely no attempt to molest the Jews, the Provincial Governors, acting in accordance with instructions from St. Petersburg.

Janitor Dropped Dead.

Hamilton, April 11.—Edward Milligan dropped dead in the Sun Life Assurance Company's building on North James street last evening about 6 o'clock. He was employed as janitor of the building. The dead man was 10 years of age and leaves a widow and one son.

Nearly Asphyxiated.

Brampton, April 11.—Mr and Mrs John Asher and their daughter, a middle-aged woman, were nearly smothered by gas escaping from a coal stove on Saturday morning.

A Good Word for Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"In December, 1900, I had a severe cold and was so hoarse that I could not speak above a whisper," says Allan Davis of Freestone, N. Y. "I tried several remedies but got no relief until I used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, one bottle of which cured me. I will always speak a good word for that medicine." For sale by all druggists.

THE INEVITABLE CHOICE.

Parting of the Ways as Illustrated in the Downfall of Young Harold Webster, of Toronto.

Gold and diamonds, pearls and precious stones. Easy to conceal; readily converted into cash. Will he become a thief for their sake, revel for a brief time in unwonted affluence, and ever afterwards hate himself for his folly, or will he win respect, confidence, and an enviable reputation by adhering to the principles of strict integrity?

This is the question to which young Harold Webster, the Ellis jewelry pilferer, gave the wrong answer, says The Toronto Mail and Empire. His case is typical of many. In all lives the choice must sooner or later be made. The bait is not always the same, but the hook is ever there. It is worth while considering, from a purely business standpoint, what it costs to be caught by the snare, and what it means to avoid it.

Debt and Credit Account.

There is no greater fallacy than to suppose that anything in this world can be obtained for nothing. If it is earned one gives his labor. If it is bestowed as a gift one assumes an obligation which he will be bound to discharge. If it is stolen, be it of great value or small, the highest possible price of all is paid. The thief gives his character in exchange for his booty. That character may not be worth much in the later stages, but at the outset it is a priceless possession, the very best that any man has to give—better, indeed, than life itself. Let us, therefore, place on one side of the account a man's character, his future, his entire life's earnings, and, on the other side of the account, whatever the circumstances of the moment may place within his power. This, no doubt, is lowest in the plane on which the subject may be discussed, but it does not prevent one from rising to higher considerations. It enables one to declare with unqualified certainty that ill-gotten gains demand a sacrifice representing in hard cash ten times, a hundred times, nay, a thousand times, their apparent value.

Value of a Character.

What shall a man ask in exchange for his character—the one asset that is greater than all other assets? In every walk of life the man who is sought after is the honest man. To him all things are possible. Not only in banks, but in every branch of the manifold activities of business and of daily life, the strictly honest man is indispensable. He may have many good points, but unimpeachable integrity is his great qualification. Confidence is the corner-stone of business. Reputation is the superstructure, and it can be raised only on a well grounded foundation.

Slavery at Its Worst.

But the worst of all fates is the slavery of the dishonest. One false step may have been taken, and regretted so soon as taken. How often does it happen, however, that in taking that step a young man places himself within the power of another who is older in crime and has less scruples? Then exposure is threatened unless there are other betrayals of trust. Thus in the end the unwary become the slaves of those who are lying in wait to goad them to dishonesty and profit by their folly. In all such cases, and they are numerous, the bulk of the profit, if indeed it can be called profit, goes to the more crafty and experienced partner in the venture. The middleman establishes a supremacy over the operator, and reduces him to a condition of abject, trembling slavery, forcing him by increasing demands nearer and nearer the brink beyond which are ruin and desolation.

Value of Self-Respect.

Whether the wrong is immediately detected or not, the greatest penalty paid for the crime is the loss of self-respect. A man may be misjudged by his fellows, he may pass as genuine coin when he is really counterfeit, but in his own unerring consciousness he is known as he really is. What is to be compared in mere dollars, or their equivalent, to the ability to look the world unflinchingly in the face and to fear none? The folly of the thief who hopes to escape detection is past understanding. He is his own detective, his own judge and his own jailer. Be he ever so bold, there are nameless terrors for him on every street corner. Every eye penetrates into his secret. Every footstep alarms him.

Honesty as a Policy.

Better reasons for unvarying integrity might be advanced. There is the eternal command, and also the altruistic aspect of the question. But the point that is emphasized by daily experience, repeated over and over again, is that a life that is not steadied and guided by an honest purpose is doomed to become a worthless wreck, and that character is the pure gold coin of business life, that nothing can compensate for the sacrifice of reputation, freedom and self-respect. This means, of course, as the old proverb has it, that honesty is the best policy. It were better that men were honest for honesty's sake, but whether that suffices or not, it is always well to remember that honesty is the watchword of business success.

Why Young Men Fail.

Young men fail because they fail to weigh in the balance the ultimate cost of the first wrong step. They fail because they mistake the real source of happiness in life, and strive to acquire that which is not so precious as good reputation, with its accompanying pleasures—peace of mind and the confidence of their fellow-men. Money is not wealth. The greatest assets are a clear conscience and a good character. These conceded, all that a man can reasonably desire, certainly more than can be dishonestly acquired, is sure to follow. The prohibition of covetousness is not a meaningless law. He who is content with what he has or what he honestly earns is avoiding a great temptation, and is preparing for himself a joy which no man can dispute, and which he can enjoy as long as life lasts.

MOVEMENTS OF KUROPATKIN'S ARMY

To Cover Extreme Limit to Settle the Fate of the Campaign.

LAND FORCES CHANGE SHOTS

Japanese Outnumber the Russians North of the Yalu River—Land Movements Impossible in Corea After July Unless Japanese Secure a New Base—Corea's Minister Not Yet Recalled.

St. Petersburg, April 12.—Exceptional reliable information regarding the Russian military plans confirms the announcement made by the Associated Press that these plans will not mature till late in the summer. They are of far greater magnitude than is generally believed abroad, and take into account all possible contingencies. Gen. Kuropatkin has insisted that the men and guns to be placed at his disposal shall cover the extreme limit required to settle the fate of the campaign.

Land Forces Exchange Shots.

Paris, April 12.—A despatch to The Temps from St. Petersburg yesterday says some further exchanges of shots have occurred between the Russian and Japanese forces along the border of the Yalu River.

Che Foo, April 12.—A Chinese steamer has just returned from Newchwang. The port pilots would not respond to her signals for them to take the vessel up the river. Two British steamers found themselves in the same predicament. The port of Newchwang is practically closed to commerce.

Corean Minister Not Recalled.

St. Petersburg, April 12.—The Corean Government has not complied with Japan's reported demand for the recall of the Corean minister at St. Petersburg, who continues in official relations with the Russia foreign office.

Japs Outnumber the Russians.

London, April 12.—A correspondent of The Times at Seoul, cabling under date of April 17, says:

"It is believed that the Russians north of the Yalu are not sufficiently numerous to withstand the Japanese advance for any considerable distance beyond the river."

The Tientsin correspondent of The Standard says that Russia has again protested against the presence of Chinese troops on the Manchurian frontier, and has demanded their withdrawal within a five-mile limit of the Great Wall.

A correspondent of The Times with the Japanese headquarters, sends the following, dated April 11, by wireless telegraphy, via Wei-Hai-Wei:

Information Is Scarce

"At present information is scarce from the land front, owing to the distance of the existing sea base from the advance guard, but this will soon be remedied. It is doubtful whether the long-expected engagement for the possession of the Yalu River will ever occur, certainly not unless the Russians have been reinforced more heavily than my information leads me to believe. This was foreseen by the Japanese, and hence their strenuous efforts to block Port Arthur so that they may be able to reduce the length of their land communications by the establishment of a more convenient sea base."

It must be remembered that unless the Japanese secure the north of the Yalu with a new base by July the land movements from Corea will be come impossible.

"As the time is short, a new effort of the Japanese must be developed almost immediately."

The Russian officers says the correspondent consider that Japan lost the chance of occupying Newchwang, where the defences are now amply sufficient to repulse attacks.

Britain, Denmark, Russia.

London, April 12.—King Edward's visit to Copenhagen, according to the correspondent of The Daily Mail at that capital, has resulted in the beginning of negotiations for a new treaty between Great Britain Denmark and Russia, replacing the conventions with Denmark concluded by the late Emperor Alexander II. It is understood that the supposed arrangement will ensure the neutrality of Denmark in the event of an Anglo-Russian conflict.

Blue Jackets For Bluefields.

Kingston, Ja., April 12.—Acting under instructions from the Imperial Government, the British cruiser Retribution is now proceeding to Bluefields for the purpose of settling the dispute between the Nicaraguan authorities and Cayman turtle fishermen, and also for the purpose of arranging for the release of the schooners seized by the Nicaraguan Government and the crews undergoing imprisonment at Cracais a Dios

Flesherton Bank Robbery.

Hamilton, April 12.—Detectives Greer and Bleakley announce, in the Flesherton robbery, that they found that a relative of Jim Murphy, one of the prisoners, deposited $500 in one bank and $400 in another. The detectives claim they will be able to prove that this was part of the $2,000 stolen from the bank. That makes $1,952 they have obtained from the prisoners.

Drowned in the Nepis.

Melita, Man., April 12.—Wm. Seabrooks, recently from Sherbrooke, Que., was drowned yesterday in the Nepis River while attempting to cross the stream on horseback.

FOR RURAL SCHOOLS

Free Text Book Start in Ontario to Be Made With Readers.

MUNICIPAL LAW CHANGES

Cities May Control the Location of Stores in Residential Districts—Newspaper Proprietors and Municipal Printing and Advertising—Mr. Whitney Makes Weak Objection—The "Soo" Guarantee Debate.

Toronto, April 12.—The Legislature spent the greater part of yesterday in committee chiefly on the municipal amendment bill, which was finally reported for a third reading. The debate on the "Soo" guarantee will be resumed this afternoon, Mr. Whitney having the floor.

Free Books in Rural Schools.

Hon. Mr. Harcourt, in moving the second reading of the bill to aid Public and Separate School Boards in rural districts to furnish certain text books free of cost, said that the principle was new, and they should proceed gradually. It is in operation in Toronto, Hamilton and Brantford, and no one thinks of making a change. In Massachusetts and other States this system has been in operation for some years with many advantages, and the reports said little of disadvantages, except on sanitary grounds, and also that it tended to discourage individual ownership of books, and possibly therefore the habit of reading. In Toronto, Hamilton and Brantford it was found that the books could be supplied to children from 25 to 30 per cent. cheaper than by individual purchase. He suggested that the scheme should be limited to readers for one year, and that in order to secure interest in the scheme the Government should pay only half and that the municipality should be asked to pay the other half. While the Province would contribute half the cost, the ownership of the books would vest in the school section. He thought it should be limited to rural districts partly because the Province is now giving $50,000 to $60,000 to libraries, $25,000 to technical schools, and large grants to the university, from all of which in the nature of things the rural districts are excluded. He admitted that the scheme had been abandoned in Quebec possibly because of difficulties over the two languages. The bill was read a second time.

For Protection of Property Owners.

In committee on the bill to amend the municipal act, some objection was raised to the clause, put in at the instance of Toronto, to give Councils the right to control and prevent the erection of laundries, butcher shops, stores and factories with a view to preserve certain streets for residential purposes.

Hon. Mr. Stratton suggested that the clause empowering Councils to regulate the distance at which buildings on residential streets be built from the street line apply to cities and towns, and that regulating the location of shops, etc., apply only to cities. Mr Stratton's suggestion was adopted.

The clause providing that newspaper proprietors might sit in municipal councils notwithstanding the publication in their papers of official advertisements was approved, despite a mild objection by Mr Whitney.

Clause eighteen, making the present quo warranto proceedings applicable to Controllers, was passed without opposition. The bill reported with a number of amendments.

The following bills were read a third time: To incorporate the Ottawa River Railway Company (Evanturel); to amend the Factories Act (Dryden).

The House then went into Committee of Supply and passed the vote of $19,325 for colonization and immigration. The House adjourned at 10 p.m.

Wallace Wants to Leave.

Toronto, April 12.—A. E. Wallace, ex-president of the Atlas Loan Company, applied yesterday for permission to leave Canada, his doctor certifying that he was threatened with paralysis of the lower limbs. Master-in-Ordinary Hodgins was unable to grant the request, the matter being beyond his jurisdiction.

Kills Fever Germs.

New York, April 12.—Experiments are being made with the Bordeaux mixture, being copper sulphate, lime and water, used for spraying fruit trees, as an eradicator of typhoid and malaria germs in the water systems of cities.

To Jamaica and Bermuda.

Ottawa, April 12.—J. A. Ruddick, head of the dairy division of the Department of Agriculture, will report to Hon. Sydney Fisher on the possibility of extending our trade in dairy products with Jamaica and Bermuda.

Had Paid Money.

Montreal, April 12.—In the Cooke-Blakeley libel case, Lawyers Jacobs and Greenshields testified that they had paid money to the Crown prosecutors, but that Cooke had received of these amounts as counsel in civil cases.

Tidal Wave at Port Burwell.

Tillsonburg, April 12.—A tidal wave is reported at Port Burwell on Saturday raising the water in the harbor three feet four inches by actual measurement. The field of ice was carried back blocking up the entrance to the harbor, preventing the return of some fishermen, who were lifting their nets. They were obliged to sail up to Port Bruce and even then had considerable difficulty in reaching land.

Murder Mystery Solved.

Philadelphia, April 12.—The mystery surrounding the murder of John Thomas, the aged nightwatchman at the Houston Club of the University of Pennsylvania Sunday evening was cleared up yesterday by the arrest and confession of Lawrence Gibson, alias John Oakley, who was for a number of years employed as a utility man at Houston Hall. Gibson is a West Indian negro.

Gave Portrait to St. Kitts.

St. Catharines, April 12.—A portrait of the late Hon. J. G. Currie once Speaker of the Ontario Legislature and Mayor of the city, has been received by Mayor Marquis, and will be hung in the Council chamber. It was presented by Hon. Richard Harcourt.

Child's Jaw Broken.

New Sarum, April 12.—The three-year-old child of E. Stansell was painfully injured Sunday night by being thrown out of a rig by a kicking horse. The child's jaw was broken and she received two severe gashes in the face.

Turn Them Toward Colonies.

London, April 12.—The Secretary for the Colonies has expressed every desire to do all the Government possibly can to turn the tide of emigration to the colonies. He will shortly discuss emigration matters with the Canadian officials.

Smallpox at Guelph.

Guelph, April 12.—Two children of W. E. Buckingham developed mild cases of smallpox on Saturday.

Miss Rose Hennessy, well known as a poetess and elocutionist, of Lexington, Ky., tells how she was cured of uterine inflammation and ovaritis by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—For years I enjoyed the best of health and thought that I would always do so. I attended parties and receptions thinly clad, and would be suddenly chilled, but I did not think of the results. I caught a bad cold eighteen months ago while menstruating, and this caused inflammation of the womb and congested ovaries. I suffered excruciating pains and kept getting worse. My attention was called to your Vegetable Compound and the wonderful cures it had performed, and I made up my mind to try it for two months and see what it would do for me. Within one month I felt much better, and at the close of the second I was entirely well.

"I have advised a number of my lady friends to use it, and all express themselves as well satisfied with the results as I was."—MISS ROSE NORA HENNESSY, 410 S. Broadway, Lexington, Ky.—$5000 forfeit if original of above letter proving genuineness cannot be produced.

FISHING INDUSTRY AN IMPORTANT ONE.

Necessity for Securing Uniform Regulations in International Waters.

Arrangements Made for Replenishing the Stock of Fish Some Restrictions for the Benefit of the Industry.

The commercial fisheries of Ontario make up in the aggregate an important industry, with an output averaging about a million and a half dollars a year. The million mark was first passed in 1883, and in some favourable years the output has exceeded two millions. The Dominion Government now maintains three important hatcheries for restocking the inland waters of the Province, and as many as one hundred million fry have been deposited from them in a single year. The report of Mr. Bastedo, the Deputy Commissioner of Fisheries, contains much interesting information regarding the progress of commercial fishing, and the growing importance of game fish as an attraction for a rapidly-increasing number of holiday tourists.

The most important move with regard to the commercial fisheries has been in the direction of securing uniform regulations on the international waters. This will require the co-operation of all the States bordering on the great lakes and their connecting rivers, and the conference recently arranged shows that the long forbearance of the Ontario authorities has not been useless. The Government resisted the demands of Canadian fishermen, who were forced to observe a necessarily close season while indiscriminate and destructive fishing was going on before their eyes on the American side. They protested, and with a good show of reason, that it was impossible to preserve the fish by a close season on only one side of the chain of lakes and rivers, and that, as destruction was inevitable, they should have their share of the spoils. But the Canadian authorities did not yield to the counsels of despair, and Mr. Bastedo has succeeded in arranging a conference and securing a promise of uniform regulations. These practical results were not achieved in time for detailed comment in the report.

The growing importance of game fish in the northern waters is fully realized, and a considerable amount of work has been done in carrying out the policy of restocking the depleted lakes and streams with adult black bass. Deposits have been made in no less than 25 different lakes and rivers, chiefly in waters where holiday-makers congregate during the summer. Over 4,000 fish have been placed in Lakes Muskoka, Joseph, and Rosseau alone. These lakes are reported to be teeming with small bass, and the same is said of all waters which have been stocked. The work performed in 1901 is already manifesting itself in improved angling. A car load of bass was successfully sent as far as Rat Portage, and deposits in a small lake in the vicinity of the Lake of the Woods. Transplanting adult fish to such a distance is attended with many difficulties, and the success achieved reflects credit on the officers of the department.

There are parts of northern Ontario which will always be resorts for tourists and visitors, and there the game fish have an economic value to the whole community as well as a special interest to the sporting fraternity. The importance of this attraction is fully recognized in the law preventing the sale of brook trout, bass, and maskinonge. The question of adding pickerel to the list of game fish withdrawn from the commercial class is thrown out, and is certainly worthy of consideration. Depletion has not yet advanced sufficiently to warrant the suspension of the commercial fishing of pickerel in all parts of the Province. But the suggestion shows a keen appreciation of changing conditions. If the pickerel should lose its commercial importance through depletion the regulations will be modified in time to take advantage of their qualities as game fish. The report for 1903 has been made specially valuable by appropriate illustrations.—Globe.

WERE VICTIMS OF SHARP GAME.

How an Ottawa man and Wife Were Swindled.

Got Word From Ogdensburg That Their Son was Lying Ill in The Hospital There and Several Times Sent Money to Him.

Emile Cote, the eighteen year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Hurtubuise, of Ottawa, has been for some months the unconscious cause of a great deal of anxiety to his mother and his step-father. Emile, so his mother said yesterday, left on the 18th of December for Watertown, N.Y., to fulfil a long expressed desire on his part to enter the ranks of Uncle Sam's "boys in blue." His parents had acquiesced in this determination, in fact had supplied the young man with the money to go to the enlistment station. Since then nothing had been heard from him directly, although letters from Ogdensburg, purporting to be written by him, have been from time to time received by his anxious parents. The first letter from the border town stated he had not gone to Watertown at all, but had stayed at Ogdensburg en route for the former place, and while there had been badly crushed by a street car, as a result of which accident he had to be taken to an hospital. Various letters asking for money arrived in Ottawa and were promptly answered. The replies being rather incoherent, led the youth's mother to refer the matter for an explanation to Chief Powell, as her suspicions were aroused by the constant demand for money. Chief Powell wrote to Ogdensburg, and enquired as to the hospital situated at 51 Main street in that city, and requesting information concerning the young would-be soldier. The Ogdensburg chief of police answering the letter, stated that no such address was to be found, the only place answering to that description being a vacant lot. Then a hunt began to locate the writer of the letters, but no success was to be met with in this direction. The affair took on a rather mysterious complexion, and in spite of various telegrams and letters between the authorities, nothing further developed.

The mother all this time was under the impression that something direful had befallen her boy, while others thought that the affair might be a scheme on the part of some clever person in Ogdensburg, to secure money from the boy's parents in Ottawa. Inquiry at the King street house yesterday as to the latest news of the missing boy elicited the fact that another letter had just been received, in which the youth declares his intention to go up to Depot Harbour to work for the summer. He made no reference in the epistle to having been discharged from any hospital, or indeed of having been hurt by a car, or in any way having had an accident. So the affair still is in a most unsatisfactory condition, and the Ottawa parties concerned would like to know one or two facts concerning the Ogdensburg episode. Why was the correspondence addressed from a vacant lot, and who was the writer?

Quebec Timber Frauds.

Quebec, April 9.—The Commission on Colonization submitted its report to the Assembly Thursday. The document is a sensational and voluminous one. The charges that licenseholders of limits strip all the timber of the settlers have been proven. The paragraph on free grants to fathers of twelve children narrates operations of speculators who make a business of hunting up such families and buying grants, cases being known of speculations netting $20,000 for timber alone on lots for which they paid $30.

Alliance Workers Called.

Toronto, April 9.—An important circular has been issued by the executive committee of the Ontario branch of the Dominion Alliance calling a long delayed provincial convention of the temperance workers of Ontario in the Guild Hall, McGill street, on Thursday morning at 9 o'clock, the 21st inst.

RICHARDSON YIELDS AT LAST.

Toronto Controller Resigns After Consulting Conservative Party Managers.

Toronto, April 12.—In view of the attention directed to the means by which his majority was secured, Controller F. H. Richardson yesterday determined to throw up his office, and on the sympathy which such action might be expected to evoke trust to being re-elected. The decision was reached after a consultation with the party managers, and the Controller received assurances that no Conservative would oppose him. The letter of resignation was handed to the Mayor before the Council meeting yesterday by Mr. Richardson, who spent the afternoon in the members' room, but who did not attend the meeting.

Fisheries in Ontario.

Ottawa, April 12.—The Government will appoint a commission to investigate the Georgian Bay fisheries. The subjects to be inquired into are the vexed questions of pound nets, submerged trap-nets, seines and gill nets. The commission will consist of three commissioners, one a gill net fisherman, resident of the district, a representative fish merchant or buyer, and the Commissioner of Fisheries, who will act as chairman and represent the Government. The sittings of the commission will be held as follows: Thessalon, May 18; Spanish River, May 19; Manitowaning, May 21; Killarney, May 25; Depot Harbor, May 27; Midland, May 28; Owen Sound, May 5; Wiarton, May 31. The commission will probably investigate and report upon the extension of the close season in the fall.

Operators Give Evidence.

Guelph, April 12.—The inquest into the fatal wreck of Saturday morning was continued last night, when E. P. Murphy, G.T.R., despatcher, gave evidence. He described the receiving of orders. P. J. Lynch, trainmaster, had found the fatal order slip between the rails and platform. W. Croft, night operator at Rockwood; Frederick Grove, engineer of 714; James Johnston, conductor of 714, and Richard McKinley, night operator at Guelph, also gave evidence. James Craig, operator at Guelph Junction, and Robert Wall, agent, will be called when the inquest resumes on Thursday night. Engineer Patton will be in the hospital for a month yet. He is suffering severely. Brakeman Hasson will be able to leave in a few days.

G. W. Beardmore Sues.

Toronto, April 12.—George W. Beardmore yesterday entered an action against A. E. Ames & Co. and the Securities Holding Company to test the validity of the transfer by the firm to the company of all its assets and effects. The transaction is characterized as fraudulent, preferential, involved, voluntary and void and the various properties are described in the writ, a number of blocks of real estate and shares in various companies being included. An injunction is sought to prevent the disposal of any of the properties pending a hearing.

Revise Fur Seals Rules.

Washington, April 12.—President Roosevelt has signed joint resolutions extending the invitation of Congress to the inter-Parliamentary union and providing for the entertainment of its members, and requesting the President of the United States to negotiate with the Government of Great Britain for a revision of the regulations which now govern the taking of fur seals in the open waters of the North Pacific Ocean and Behring Sea.

Pioneer Ferryman Dead.

Ogdensburg, N.Y., April 12.—Capt. Lewis R. Plumb, the pioneer passenger ferryman on the Upper St. Lawrence, is dead at his residence here. His first ferry boat between Ogdensburg and Prescott, Ont., was propelled by sail. This was succeeded by a scow with horsepower, and later by a steamboat.

Fined at Owen Sound.

Owen Sound, April 12.—Yesterday Henry Fox, a tobacconist, appeared in the police court, charged with a breach of the recently passed cigarette bylaw. A fine was imposed, which, with the costs, amounted to $24.70.

G. T. PACIFIC DEBATE

How Shippers in Canada Are Discriminated Against.

R. L. BORDEN LACKED CANDOR

Lieut.-Col. Thompson of Haldimand Whittles Down Opposition Leader's Estimate of Cost Over One-Half—Mr. Jabel Robinson An Advocate of Public Ownership—Bills Dealt With in Commons.

Ottawa, April 12.—Two excellent contributions were made by the Government side yesterday to the discussion on the Transcontinental Railway bill, and the net result of the day's work was to leave the Opposition's case greatly discounted. Mr. Arch. Campbell of West York, opened the debate with a telling arraignment of the Opposition's case. One of his strong points was to show the discrimination against Canadian shippers to the Pacific Coast over the C.P.R., a condition which would be remedied by the new railway, over the rates of which the Government would have control. Lieut.-Col. Thompson of Haldimand, in a speech of great logic and convincing power, whittled down Mr. Borden's estimate of cost from $171,000,000 to $84,580,320. He maintained that Mr. Borden had lacked candor or was unable to deal with large financial questions when he estimated the cost of the eastern section at $40,000 a mile, while the mountain division would only cost $50,000. He had doubtless been guided by the cost of the C.P.R. over a much rougher country. Col. Thompson estimated that the sum of $11,325,706, if invested, would meet the country's liabilities on the railway. Mr. Jabel Robinson, the Independent member for West Elgin, rejoiced in the impetus the Opposition's stand had given to Government ownership. Mr. M. K. Richardson, the Conservative member for South Grey, spoke in general terms against the Government's scheme.

Government Bills.

Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick introduced three Government bills. The first to amend the Exchequer Court act, provides for an appeal in cases where the Crown is a party to the suit, even if the amount involved does not exceed $500. The second bill provides that when a fiat is granted under the petition of right act, instead of being handed back to the solicitor, it shall be fixed as of record in the court. The third bill, to amend the Yukon Territory act, confers authority upon the Commissioner and Council of the Yukon to make ordinances for the division of the Yukon Territories with respect to the election of the Council and also to determine the qualifications for office.

Chinese Head Tax.

In reply to Mr. Ralph Smith, Sir Richard Cartwright stated that the Dominion act increasing the head tax on Chinese immigrants from $100 to $500 has been literally enforced, and that no Chinese restricted by the act have entered Canada since it came into force. In reply to another question by Mr. Smith, the Minister of Trade and Commerce stated that there was no truth in the statement published in the press that Chinese immigrants would be able to evade the increased poll tax by becoming British subjects before entering into the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. Sifton, replying to Mr. Wilson, said that there were 405 immigrants deported from Canada between June, 1902, and March 15, 1904, for various reasons.

The House adjourned at 10 o'clock.

Population of Penitentiaries.

The report the Minister of Justice presented to-day gives the average population in the penitentiaries and territorial jails in 1902-3 as 1,224, a decrease of 70, as compared with the average of the previous year and the lowest in ten years. The number liberated on ticket-of-leave was nine per cent., pardons 2.8 per cent. and deaths 1.3 per cent. The report regrets that one-eighth of the total number of convicts are mere youths. The total expenditure on the Kingston Penitentiary was $190,000; the revenue $32,433, including $24,742 from binder twine. There are 592 convicts in the Kingston Penitentiary and 1,250 convicts in the penitentiaries; 635 gave their creed as Roman Catholics, 269 as Church of England, 127 as Methodist, 99 as Presbyterian, 76 as Baptist, and 14 as Lutheran. The net cost of the penitentiaries last year was $233,300, or $272 per head, the cost of each convict per day being 75 cents.

CRIMINAL VAGARIES OF A PEER.

Just Recently Out of Jail in Pretoria, South Africa.

Lord Haldon, who succeeded to the peerage of his impecunious father, "Piggy" Haldon, in December last, has been until now unable to take his seat in the House of Lords owing to his having been until a month ago in jail at Pretoria, charged, in company with two disreputable companions, with endeavoring to defraud a man of the name of Cowie by offering him a parcel of glass crystals, alleging them to be diamonds. The case came up for trial the other day, and the court acquitted him on the ground that he had permitted himself to be made the "cool" of a gang of swindlers, and that he was not primarily responsible for the attempted fraud, which, it may be added, did not succeed.

Lord Haldon at the time of his arrest was acting as checker and conductor on the railway at Pretoria, a position which, though humble, he had been exceedingly glad to get, as he had been literally starving when he received it, having been in a state of complete destitution at Johannesburg and at Pretoria after being mustered out of the Imperial Yeomanry at the close of the war.

This is not the first time that Lord Haldon has been in trouble, for, as I mentioned at the time of his accession, he placed himself in an unenviable position some years ago by raising money in London on a note which he had endorsed with the signature of his mother, who is wealthy in her own right. He wrote to her a letter informing her that, compelled by dire necessity, he had been obliged to put her name thereto. Although the note was for a comparatively small amount, which she could easily have paid, yet she preferred to produce her son's letter in court and to make it public rather than take up the bill. If no prosecution followed, it was because there was a strong presumption in favor of the belief that the usurer who had discounted the note had been well aware at the time of the fact that the Dowager Lady Haldon's signature was fictitious, and that he only let Lord Haldon have the money with the view to be subsequently able to blackmail his family.

A Smokeless London.

An article on "A Smokeless London" has appeared in Cassier's Magazine. The writer believes the attainment of such an object to be in the increased use of gasoline fuel, suitable for heating alone, and having no illuminating qualities, which can be made very cheaply and could be used in the place of coal for domestic and many industrial purposes. In the same way illuminating gas will be entirely replaced by electricity, and with gas employed for heating purposes and electricity for lighting, the problem would be in a fair way of solution.

McPherson & McGregor

(Successors to the F. R. J. McPherson Co.)

Take this opportunity of thanking the public for the very liberal patronage accorded the late firm. Trade has been so satisfactory that Mr McGrego decided to increase his interest in the business and, as a consequence, the firm will be known hereafter as McPHERSON & McGREGOR.

Our specialties are:—

Sanitary Plumbing
Sanitary Ventilating
Steam and Hot Water Heating
Electrical Wiring and Supplies

We wish to draw the attention of the public to a few of the many complimentary testimonials received by Mr. McGregor for the high quality of the work he has installed in Plumbing and Heating:—

From the Firm of Bennet & Wright, Plumbing, Heating and Electrical Contractors, Toronto.

This is to certify that Duncan McGregor has been in our employment steady for about fifteen years and during that time we have found him to be steady, honest and trustworthy. He has given every satisfaction as a practical mechanic in each of the following branches: Plumbing, steam and gas fitting, also electrical and conduit work, and for some time has had charge of some of our largest contracts with satisfactory results.

From Ilsley & Horn, General Contractors, Toronto.

The bearer, Mr. Duncan McGregor, had charge of the electric wiring at the King Edward Hotel Building. The job was a large and complicated one and by the way Mr. McGregor handled the work he proved himself a mechanic of more than ordinary ability. We unhesitatingly recommend him as a first class mechanic to anyone needing his services.

From Mr. J. Ross Robertson, of the Evening Telegram.

Mr. Duncan McGregor, who has been connected with the Bennet & Wright Co. for some years, and who has superintended the work of plumbing and heating for the Bennet & Wright Co., is not only in my opinion, but also that of my architect, a fully competent mechanic. His work, my architect informs me, has been most satisfactory. Any thing that has come under my own supervision has been likewise satisfactory.

An Extract Taken from the June Number of Domestic Engineering.

During the recent convention of the Canadian Electrical Association held in the King Edward Hotel, a thorough examination was made of all the electrical work in the hotel, and it was pronounced second to none on the continent. Therefore, great credit is due Mr. Duncan MacGregor, who superintended the entire conduit, electrical and power system for the firm of Bennet & Wright, of this city, who were the contractors for all the different branches of the electrical work in the new hotel.

PACIFIC SLOPE PIONEERS.

Reminiscences of Old Fur Trading Days—Recent Death of Mr. James Tod Brings Up a Flood of Them.

Memories of Canada's heroic age of old fur trading days of the Honorable Hudson's Bay Company, now fast fading from the minds of even our most aged men, are recalled by the death in Victoria of Mr. James Tod. While Mr. Tod was a notable pioneer of British Columbia, he was even more distinguished as the son of his illustrious father, John Tod, one of the greatest traders in the employ of the Hudson's Bay Company on the Pacific Slope. Of the son, it may be said that he was a worthy son of his great sire. He was one of those huge Scottish-Canadians, such as Ralph Connor delights in, a man standing some inches more than six feet in height, and, as The Victoria Colonist says, "built in proportion." We can well understand that "his bodily strength was amazing, that he never knew what fatigue was, and was never sick a day in his life." In its obituary notice of Mr. Tod, The Colonist goes on to remark, with significant emphasis, that "he was a man who minded his own business." Therefore he prospered and made of his farm, Cedar Hill, one of the finest demesnes in the whole countryside. One can imagine the old man of a Winter's night, gathering his children round the ingle nook and telling them strange, awesome tales of their grandfather and his companions, the first white settlers in British Columbia; of the days when, as a boy, he looked upon the beautiful City of Victoria and beheld it a Hudson's Bay fort, armed for defence against the Indians.

The Trader Controversialist.

It is through this period of our country, a period awaiting a Canadian Homer, that Professor Bryce carries us in his admirable work on the Hudson's Bay Company. Speaking of John Tod this writer says: "John Tod was the most unique and peculiar of all the traders of the Hudson's Bay Company. He first appeared in the Selkirk settlement and wrote a number of the Hargrave letters. In 1823 he was sent by Governor Simpson, it is said, to New Caledonia at the final settlement of the fur traders. The young Scotsman cheerfully accepted the appointment and became the most noted writer on the Pacific Coast. Indeed, he might be called the prince of the controversialists amongst the traders. He was a man of the broadest views and fearless in the expression of them. In religious matters a Latitudinarian, he sometimes startled the godly by his bold questionings and doubting regarding the authenticity of the Scriptures.

Hargrave, of Brockville.

The contest gives one the impression that the old man's "broad views" represented rather his lust for controversy than his real opinions. There is something rather droll in the long and animated correspondence which he kept up with one of the Ermatingers, a famous trader, who expended as much energy trying to persuade old Tod of the error of his philosophy as he did when he made his famous overland journey to meet Governor Simpson at Monterey. The Hargrave letters, mentioned by Prof. Bryce give another illustration of this unlucky Scotch tendency on the part of John Tod. The writer chose on these letters in London, which they had been sent after the death of James Hargrave, at his home in Brockville. All had been preserved with scrupulous care, tied up and sealed. They were only to be opened by Mr. Hargrave's children, and when at Prof. Bryce's request they once more saw the light of day, a treasury of information was revealed. For years Hargrave has been Hudson's Bay factor at York House, a most important post, and, apart from the business of buying furs, his chief avocation was in the writing of letters. Nearly all the chief traders, factors and officers of the company, besides scores of other prominent people, were among his correspondents.

The Two Douglasses.

It was a famous company that planted the white man's banner in British Columbia in the early part of the nineteenth century. The greatest of the company's servants there was undoubtedly James Douglas, a scion of the great Scottish family, who entered the service as a boy, and left it a knight. The mention of his name recalls that lesser Douglas, the botanist and naturalist, who nevertheless gave the family name to the Douglas fir, and this in a country where James Douglas was virtually the Emperor! David, by the way, narrowly escaped death at the hands of a trader named Black. The scientist had been thoughtless enough to criticize the Hudson's Bay Company in the presence of the staunch old trader, who had thereupon challenged him to a duel. With a slight loss of dignity but a decided gain in longevity, Douglas declined, and lived to be trampled to death by a bullock on another continent. Black's own death was violent, he being murdered by an Indian who was surrendered to John Tod by his own tribesmen.

The Pioneer's Last Days.

John Tod passed his last days in Victoria, after a long and adventurous career. It is said of him that even in his old age he would take his morning plunge in the sea, Winter and Summer. On the spot where he had once traded peltries he saw stately buildings erected, he lived to see the new order establish itself on the foundation that he and his comrades had established; to see round him a stalwart family, to feel that, after all, for the hardships he had endured, there was a recompense. Where he ended his son began, and now that James has died, an aged man, the memory of his father slips back apace into the dimness of the past.

Three Men Killed.

Washington, April 9.—Three men were killed and one fatally injured in an explosion yesterday at the Pintsch Gas Compressing Company's plant in Southwest Washington. Money loss, $2,000.

Alfonso Leaves Barcelona.

Barcelona, Spain, April 9.—King Alfonso left Barcelona yesterday morning on a visit to Corona. He will return to Barcelona to-day.

Health and Success.

Weakness and disease cause discouragement, failure and unhappiness, but with the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food there comes new life and vigour and energy, new hopes and new confidence, stronger determination to succeed, and the ability to apply one's self mentally and physically. Health and success go hand in hand. By restoring good health Dr. Chase's Nerve Food helps to success and happiness.

"The Man in the Street."

Edward W Parry writes to The London Spectator: "What is the origin of the phrase 'the man in the street?' In 'The Greville Memoirs' under date March 22, 1831, Vol II p. 131, occurs the following: 'The king will not consent to it "a dissolution", knowing, as the man in the street' (as we call him at Newmarket) always does, the greatest secrets of Kings and being the confidant of their most hidden thoughts.' The origin of the phrase is interesting. Does 'the man in the street' still obtain at Newmarket, and is he a 'tipster,' or merely one who speaks with confidant knowledge, having none? It will certainly interest modern journalists to know there was a 'man in the street' in 1831 of similar characteristics apparently to his latter-day representative."

What Tea Does to Rheumatics.

When you next take tea think of this.

Tea contains 175 grains of Uric Acid in every pound.

Meat contains only five to seven grains.

Rheumatism is Uric Acid in the blood.

Uric Acid accumulates from food when the digestive apparatus cannot create enough Alkaline elements (Like soda) to neutralize it.

This Acid collects urea, or worn-out waste matter from the system.

That Urea enters the blood when Alkaline action has not previously dissolved it.

By and by the waste matter reaches the joints and muscles, through circulation of the blood.

There it gradually deposits in solid particles, like granulated sugar.

These solid particles grind between the joints and muscles at every movement.

This grinding causes irritation and pain.

These in turn may develop inflammation and swelling. That inflammation bestirs Nature to help herself.

She proceeds to coat the hard Uric particles over with cushions of pulpy mucous, like the first healing strata of an outer sore.

This pulpy covering grows to the bones, as well as to the particles deposited. There it hardens like plaster or sealing wax. Then we have "bony joints," almost inflexible, and usually fixed in a bended position, from the pain and inflammation.

That is rheumatism at its worst.

It is bad enough before it gets that far.

There is but one sure way of curing Rheumatism. The first step is to neutralize the Uric Acid already in the system. Next, to dissolve, and carry away, the hard deposits that grind between the joints. Then get the digestive apparatus into such healthy condition that it will, unaided, produce less Uric Acid and more Alkalines.

This is what doctors generally have failed to do.

It is what I studied a lifetime to accomplish and achieved only after many failures and thousands of experiments.

At last I found in Germany, a Solvent which was not only effective, but absolutely safe to use.

Few agents powerful enough to be effective in Rheumatism are safe.

My discovery, now called "Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure," acts directly, but internally, upon Uric Acid in the joints and muscles.

It dissolves and carries off the painful deposits, producing an immediate Alkaline condition of the blood, and neutralizing the Acid in it which would have fed the Rheumatism and extended the disease.

It won't restore bony joints to flexibility and it can't undo, in a week, the damage caused by years of rheumatic condition.

But it will benefit every case, and it will entirely cure most cases of Rheumatism.

So sure am I of this that I will supply Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure, to any sick one who writes me for it, on a month's trial, at my risk.

If it succeeds, the cost to him is only $5.50 for the six bottle treatment.

If it fails, I bear the whole cost myself.

And,—he alone shall be the judge—shall decide who shall pay.

Surely you will not continue to suffer when you can thus get well, at my risk.

I have written an important treatise on Rheumatism, telling of its relief and cure.

It is free to Rheumatic people.

Write me a post card for it to-day. Address Dr. Shoop, Box 947, Racine, Wis.

P.S. Simple cases often yield to one bottle of Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure. (Druggists $1) But all druggists do not supply it on a month's trial. You must write to me for that. C. I. S.

Canada and Australia.

Ottawa, April 12.—Mr. Yonge, secretary of the Dominion Manufacturers' Association, is in town on departmental business. The Government have extended until May, 1905, the subsidy for the steamship service between Canada and Australia. The subsidy amounts to $170,000. It is understood that the service will be placed on an improved basis.

Rev. Joseph Kilgour Dead.

Peterboro, April 12.—About 10 o'clock yesterday morning the death occurred of Rev. Joseph Kilgour, a very highly respected citizen. Deceased was for forty-two years a preacher in the Methodist Church, and six years ago was superannuated and has resided here ever since. He was 72 years of age, and leaves a widow.

Strike Ends in Murder.

Rochester, Pa., April 12.—As an outcome of the strike trouble with the Rochester Tumbler plant late Sunday night Frank Johnson, a union glass-worker, was shot and killed by Joseph Finler, a private detective, who is in jail. Two other officers are held as accessories.

DANCE OVER AN ABYSS.

Sudden and Startling Termination to a Scottish Choir's Jubilation.

A Scottish choir party chose a strange dancing-hall last week, and their frolic had a sudden and startling termination.

The Edinburgh Select Choir had been making a first appearance at Cowdenbeath, and after a successful concert the members made their way to the old station, from whence it had been arranged that their carriage should be attached to a miners' train, which was to take them to Dunfermline.

It was a bitterly cold night, and the prospect of a wait of three-quarters of an hour in the wind-swept station was anything but cheering. A resourceful tenor suggested that the interval might be spent in an impromptu dance.

Soon the party were waltzing in an adjoining shed to the merry music of a whistling basso, who, besides providing the orchestral accompaniment, also acted as limelight man with the aid of a small pocket electric lamp.

Cold and darkness were alike forgotten when the frolic was suddenly interrupted by the appearance of the horror-stricken stationmaster. The music ceased, and the waltzers made a dead halt as the man in uniform grimly announced that beneath the floor was a disused mine shaft.

The concert party hastily retreated, and the startling discovery was made that while the dance was in progress the old shed had sunk fully two feet below the station platform level!—London Daily Mail.

Royalty Traveled Common Road.

The Duke of Connaught, the recently appointed first inspector-general of the forces, has traveled no royal road to that distinction. It is close upon 54 years ago since—to use his father's phrase—"a little boy glided into the light of day," and was received with jubilates by his sisters. "We are just as many as the days of the week," was the cry. So it was that the Duke got his first fond name of "Sunday." This, as Prince Albert wrote to Stockmar, "was out of well-bred courtesy to the new-comer." To his mother it seemed "a singular thing that this so-much-wished-for boy should be born on the old Duke's 81st birthday." She prayed that "that, and his beloved father's name, might bring this poor little infant happiness and good fortune." She was to live to see the full-grown man in the enjoyment of both. The "William" in the Duke's font-names came from his other godfather, then the Prince of Prussia, and afterwards the German Emperor. "My name," Prince Albert explained, "the Queen insisted on retaining by way of coda." It is curious to remember that, a month or so before this auspicious event, the command of the army had been under consideration. After the Duke, who was to fill that office? "The Queen and I," the Queen's husband wrote to the field-marshal commanding-in-chief, "have been considering your proposal to join A.G. and Q.M.G. into one chief of the staff, with a view to facilitate the future assumption of the command-in-chief by myself." In the Prince's modest estimation every general officer with experience in the field would do better than himself who had not had the advantage of such experience. Moreover, most important duties connected with the welfare of the sovereign, which could only be performed by himself, would be left unperformed. And, on the whole, he felt that he must discard the tempting idea of being placed in command of the British army.

Facing Death Calmly.

Some few years ago a Swansea vessel was caught in a terrible gale. The captain had his wife on board, and when the wind was still rising he told her to go down below and sleep, for all was well.

He remained on the bridge till the mate came up, and said, "We've done all we can. Hadn't you better tell the chaps to get out the boats?" "Yes, yes, my lad, if you think so," said the captain, who knew very well the only chance left was whether to go down with the ship or in a small boat, which couldn't live ten seconds in that sea.

The engineer came up with the news that the fires were all out. "Very well, my lads," said the captain, quietly; "save yourselves if you can." "Won't you fetch your wife on deck, sir?" asked one of the men. "No!" was the calm reply: "let her sleep, poor old girl. I am going down to have a smoke."

And smoking by the bedside of his sleeping wife, he went down with the ship.

Englishwomen's Feet.

The evidence of ladies' outfitters affords direct proof of the improvement in physique of modern woman. "Most decidedly," said the manager of a Regent street firm, "our lady customers require larger sizes than they did ten years ago. Formerly we stocked nothing larger than 5 and 5½ was the average size. Now we keep 7s and during last year even 8s and 7½s is the average size of Ladies' Gloves, hosiery and underwear are also being sold in the West End in larger sizes than ten years ago."—St. James's Gazette.

Not Much Difference.

Michael Davitt, during his recent visit to America, talked one day to a reporter about the cheerfulness of the Irish character.

"The very poorest among us don't despond," he said. "No man's condition is so wretched but he can crack a joke about it.

"There was a poor, old peat-cutter one day whom the parish priest invited to his house to dinner.

"'Come in, Pat,' he said. 'It isn't much of a dinner—only beef, and beer, and potatoes—but, indeed, you're very welcome to it.'

"'Sure, your reverence,' said the old fellow, his eyes twinkling, 'I'd have you make no apologies about the dinner. It's the same as I'd be gettin' at home, barrin' the beef and beer.'"

Not So Gleeful.

"So you belong to a glee club?"

"Well," answered the youth with longish hair, "that's what we call it, but no one seems very joyous when we sing."

SUGAR BY-LAW NOW PASSED SECOND READING.

Will be Submitted to the Ratepayers on May 5th.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE ALSO ON THAT DATE.

A Special Meeting of Town Council Held Last Night—A Law Suit for the Town—The Business Transacted.

At the special meeting of the Town Council held last night, the by-law authorizing the Town to guarantee the bonds of the Peterborough Sugar Company for $100,000 was given its first and second readings, and will be submitted to the ratepayers on May 5th along with the by-law to raise $50,000 for a Collegiate Institute. Ald. Best registered his objection to the by-law on the ground that the town was proposing to assist an industry which was not at present in the limits of the town. He contended that it was illegal on that account, and voted against the whole by-law. The Mayor ruled his objection out of order, because the by-law stated that the assistance was to be given only on condition that the Company "erect within the limits of the said corporation," their sugar factory. It was ruled to be a point of law, and the by-law was thought to cover the objection taken.

Considerable discussion arose over a letter sent to the Council by the Board of Education in which the request was made that the Collegiate Institute by-law be submitted on May 5th, and that no other question be submitted on the same day. The majority of the members thought that while the School Board should have the preference, it was hardly expedient to go to the expense of taking two votes, and thus incurring double the expense of that entailed were the two questions voted on at the one time. Some of the Aldermen expressed their opinion that if it became necessary to take two separate votes, the Sugar Company should be asked to stand the expense of submitting their by-law.

A motion to this effect was presented, but was subsequently withdrawn. It was finally decided that the two by-laws would be voted on at the same time, and instructions were given the clerk to advertise them to this effect.

A special meeting of the Town Council was held last night at which there were present:—Mayor Roger, Ald Best, McWilliams, Batten, Clarkscale, Johnston, Adams, Scott, Rush Mason, Morrison.

The minutes of the last meeting were adopted.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Communications were read and dealt with as follows:—

SUGAR COMPANY'S BY-LAW.

A by-law authorizing the town to guarantee the bonds of the Peterborough Sugar Company to the extent of $100,000 was given its first and second readings. The by-law is mainly as follows:—

A By-law to authorize the Corporation of the Town of Peterborough to guarantee the bonds of the Peterborough Sugar Co., Limited, to the extent of $100,000.

Whereas D. A. Gordon has proposed, with associates, to subscribe for one thousand shares ($100,000) in the capital stock of the Peterborough Sugar Co., Limited, with a view to the erection of a beet sugar factory of the capacity hereinafter mentioned, within the limits of the Town of Peterborough, on condition that the Corporation of the Town of Peterborough guarantee the bonds of the said Company to the extent of $100,000.

And whereas it is desirable and in the public interest to aid the erection of said factory by guaranteeing the said bonds to the extent mentioned.

And whereas the amount of the whole rateable property of the municipality according to the last revised assessment roll being for the year 1903 is the sum of $5,265,949.

And whereas the amount of existing debenture debt of the municipality, exclusive of local improvement debts, but including the sum of $230,000 incurred for the purchase of the waterworks is $558,040 07, and there is no part of the principal or interest in arrears;

Therefore the Corporation of the Town of Peterborough by the council thereof enacts as follows:

1. The Mayor and Clerk of the Corporation are hereby authorized subject to and upon the performance of the terms and conditions hereinafter expressed, to sign and seal on behalf of the Corporation a good and sufficient guarantee to the extent of $100,000 of the bonds of the Peterborough Sugar Co., their successors or assigns. (a) The said Company, their successors or assigns shall erect within the limits of the town of Peterborough, upon not less than 30 acres of land in all respects sufficient for the purposes of a beet sugar factory of 450 tons per day capacity, buildings of the dimensions and character and according to the plans already adopted by said company, and instal therein proper and sufficient machinery for the manufacturing into sugar of 450 tons of beets per day. (b) The machinery and plant for such factory of said capacity to be imported from Europe of the value and costing the sum of $156,000, shall be delivered on the said land on or before the 15th day of September, 1904 and shall be duly installed in said buildings as soon as practicable after the same shall arrive at the Town of Peterborough, and in any event not later than the 31st day of December 1904, provided however, that in case of unforseen delay, the said council may by by-law extend such time to a period not exceeding one year. (c) The bonds to be issued by said Company, their successors or assigns, shall be of the following denominations, namely: Fifty bonds of $1,000 each, payable on the first day of July in each of the years, 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912 and 1913, and eight bonds of $1,000 each payable on the first day of July 1914, and shall bear interest at the rate of four and one-half per cent per annum, payable half yearly on the first day of January and July in each year, interest coupons being attached to each bond and upon each bond shall be endorsed the guarantee of the corporation. (d) To secure the payment of the principal and interest of the said bonds and to indemnify the corporation against payment of the same, the said Company, their successors or assigns, shall acquire by good title, in fee simple, free from incumbrances, the said land and shall execute to the Corporation a good and sufficient mortgage which shall be a first charge upon their land, buildings, machinery and plant, which mortgage shall provide that the company shall insure and keep insured in the name of the Corporation, their buildings and machinery to the extent of $100,000, in a company to be approved by the said Corporation and shall contain all such necessary and proper terms, covenants and conditions as may be deemed necessary for the security of the Corporation by its solicitor. (e) The said mortgage shall further provide that upon default being made in payment of any instalment or principal or interest or on breach of any of the covenants in said mortgage contained, the corporation shall have power to foreclose the said mortgage or sell the mortgaged premises and the said machinery and plant and to realize the whole principal sum and interest secured thereby. (f) No portion of the said bonds shall be delivered by the Corporation to the said Company, their successors or assigns until the said mortgage is executed and delivered, the said insurance is effected, and the said Company's buildings are fit to receive the said machinery or plant and until such machinery or plant is delivered at the Company's premises free of all liens, claims or incumbrances and security thereon is given to the said Corporation pending the installation of the said machinery or plant, nor shall any portion of said bonds be delivered until said Gordon and associates shall have paid in the full amount subscribed by them, namely $100,000, and the same has been applied towards payment on account of said machinery or plant; but upon the fulfillment of all the above conditions the Corporation shall deliver to the Company, their successors or assigns, the first fifty of said bonds duly guaranteed, amounting to the sum of $50,000 and the remainder of said bonds, duly guaranteed, shall be delivered by the Corporation to the Company, their successors or assigns, as soon as the said factory of the capacity aforesaid shall be operated for ten days, provided that said land, buildings, machinery and plant are then free and clear of and not liable to any liens, claims or incumbrances.

2. The Corporation shall have the right to be represented upon the board of directors of the said Company by a director appointed by the Council.

3. The assessment of so much of the real and personal property of the said Company, their successors or assigns, situated within the limits of the Town of Peterborough as shall be used for the manufacturing purposes of the Company, and so long as the same shall be used is hereby fixed for the period of ten years from the first day of January 1905, at the sum of $10,000 and the returns and oath of the assessor in respect thereof shall be amended accordingly, but the Company shall be liable for all local improvement rates, taxes and assessments.

The by-law also provides for the taking of the vote on the question on May 5th next.

Ald. McWilliams in moving the first reading of the bylaw addressed the Council briefly in explaining the circumstances leading up to the presentation of the bylaw, reviewing the topics discussed by the members of the Council at the conference held on Friday afternoon. He stated that no objection had been taken to the proposal on the ground that the town by making this advance, as it practically was, is running itself dangerously near to its borrowing powers limit. This had been gotten over by the Sugar Company agreeing to pay back $50,000 in three years.

Ald. McWilliams in introducing the bylaw stated that the committee to whom had been intrusted the task of preparing the bylaw had taken special pains to have the town's security of the best.

Ald. McWilliams' motion that the bylaw be given its first reading was seconded by Ald. Adams.

Ald. Best raised a point of order to the effect that the Council could not legally ask the ratepayers to vote on a bylaw to assist an industry outside the limits of the town. Ald. Best also objected to the proposition on the ground that the security to the town was not ample.

The Mayor ruled that Ald. Best's objection was out of order in that it was taken at the wrong time.

Ald. McWilliams in answer to the objection expressed his opinion that the objection was taken at the proper time, but he believed that this objection did not apply to the by-law in its first or second readings. He admitted that the by-law could not be finally passed until the property were taken into the corporation.

The Mayor in explaining his position, stated that by the terms of the bylaw, the company was to erect a sugar factory within the limits of the town. The Mayor ruled that the objection was to the law and not to the rules. It was a point which would have to be dealt with by the solicitor.

Ald. McWilliams explained that the fact that the solicitor had drafted the bylaw was sufficient fact that he considered the bylaw legal.

Ald. Best reiterated his position, which was that the council should not ask the ratepayers to vote on the bylaw until the property had been taken into the corporation.

The Mayor, however, over-ruled Ald Best's objection for the time being.

The Mayor here stated that he had been waited upon by a deputation from the Board of Education, protesting against the council having the bylaw to raise the $50,000 to erect a Collegiate Institute, submitted to the ratepayers at the same time as that to guarantee the Sugar Company's bonds, and that if the council still adhered to their intention to do so they would feel it necessary to ask the withdrawal of the Collegiate Institute bylaw for the present. The Mayor stated that at the time that the Board of Education had requested the council to submit the bylaw it had also requested that it be submitted independent from other questions.

The bylaw was then discussed clause by clause.

Ald. Best objected to the preamble of the bylaw on the ground that the full debenture liabilities had not been fully stated in it. He said that the liabilities for local improvements had not been included in the bylaw.

Mr. Garvin in answer to a question from the Mayor stated that he did not anticipate any difficulty in obtaining the consent of the residents of the property to become united to the town.

Ald. Best further objected to the bonds being issued at 4 1-2 per cent. and Mr. Garvin, who was asked for an explanation, stated that the bonds were instalment bonds, and were of short duration, and the company felt that the bonds would not reach par unless they were issued at 4 1-2 per cent.

Ald. Adams explained that he had made investigations, and was of the opinion that 4 1-4 per cent. bonds on short date could not be sold at par.

At this point in the proceedings, a letter which had just been handed in written by the secretary of the School Board was read. The letter contained the following resolution:

"That the council be asekd to submit the bylaw for the Collegiate Institute on the 5th of May. It is the wish of the Board that the by-law be submitted apart from any other.

Ald. Johnston asked why the request was made. He said it was plain that if the two bylaws were submitted separately the expense would be double. He thought the School Board should be given the preference since their request was in first.

The Mayor thought with Ald. Johnston that the School Board should be given the preference, but he thought the request that no other question be submitted on the same day, was not a reasonable one.

Ald. Best thought that the taxpayers bore the expense of the election in any case, no matter whether the town or the School Board paid it. He thought that if the Sugar Company offered to bear the expense of submitting the bylaw it would simplify matters.

This view was concurred in by the other members of the council.

Mr. Garvin said that it was very important from the standpoint of the Sugar Company that the vote be taken not later than May 5th, as an option on machinery expired on that date.

The bylaw was at this juncture declared passed its second reading.

HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY AID.

Mr. D. W. Dumble appeared before the council on behalf of the Horticultural Society, and asked for a grant. He said the society would ask a larger grant this year than formerly, because the society would be under greater expense.

Ald. Adams moved, seconded by Ald. Johnston, that the request of the Horticultural Society be referred to the Finance Committee, which was carried.

The meeting then adjourned.

A RESOLUTION OF SYMPATHY.

To Mr. Kilgour from the Ministerial Association.

The special committee appointed by the Ministerial Association to draft a resolution of sympathy to Mrs. Kilgour on the death of her husband, the late Jos. Kilgour, sent the following resolution to her to-day:

"Mrs. Jos. Kilgour, town,—

"Dear Mrs. Kilgour,—We, the members of the Peterborough Ministerial Association, having just learned of the death of your beloved husband, Rev. Jos. Kilgour, desire to express to you our deepest sympathy in this your hour of great trial.

"It has been a great joy to us to be associated with him in council in regard to the things belonging to the Kingdom of God in our community, in which he has so often manifested most estimable Christian graces.

"Personally we feel his loss keenly and are brought into fellowship with you in our sorrow, and we pray that the God of all comfort may abundantly sustain you in your great loss. Yours in cordial sympathy,

Jonathan Bastow,

INTERESTING LECTURE ON THE PRESENT WAR.

Given Last Night by Mr. J. H. Burnham - A Musical Programme.

The T.A.S. Lecture Hall was crowded to overflowing last night when Mr. J. H. Burnham delivered a lecture on the crisis in the Far East.

The entertainment, which was greatly appreciated throughout, was opened with a vocal selection from Mr. J. Laurence, which was encored with enthusiasm. Miss Nellie McCabe recited "The Bridge," by Longfellow. The selection was greatly appreciated. The chairman, Mr. Frank Pope, then called upon the lecturer of the evening. Mr. Burnham, at considerable length gave a very interesting review of the history and social conditions of Japan, Russia and China. By degrees he led up to the causes which finally resulted in the present hostilities. The lecture was an able and thoughtful one and was made all the more delightful by Mr. Burnham's excellent phraseology. At its conclusion a vote of thanks moved by Dr. McNulty, who complimented the speaker on his lecture, and seconded by Mr. Jas. Hickey, was tendered to Mr. Burnham.

Vocal solos were then contributed by Miss May Callahan, Miss May Clancy and Mr. Mackay. Mrs. K. Eardley-Wilmot was to have sung but was prevented by illness. The pleasant event closed with the National Anthem.

Interest in the Carpet & Curtain Sale increases Daily.

Never before have we seen so much enthusiasm so plainly manifested in regard to a Carpet and Floor Covering Sale, and the question was frequently asked, "How can such values be given?" The principle is simple, as are all great facts, being in a large measure due to this: We buy for cash; we buy right. We sell right. You reap the advantage of the discounts we are enabled to secure and of our having no middleman's profit to consider. Cash gets extraordinary values when we buy. Come and see the great saving we can make you.

SHAMEFUL NEGLECT OF THEIR CHILDREN.

Cases in the Police Court All Through Whiskey.

The neglect which some parents have for their children is almost incomprehensible. One of these cases was ventilated at the Police Court this morning. A short time back the two children of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Burns were taken away from them and placed in the House of Refuge. This was caused by both parents habitually getting excessively drunk, and on such occasions abusing their children. Mrs. Burns burst into sobs when the case came up for hearing. However, the Magistrate was very lenient as both parents had promised to give up the drink. On their own request they were allowed to pay for the keep of the children at the House of Refuge and occasionally visit them.

Mr. R. M. Dennistoun gave some interesting evidence in the case of the Field's children. On Aug. 23rd, 1902, the father placed the oldest child, Louisa Irene Field, in the Shelter, saying that its mother had died and that it lived in Peterborough then, but is not here now. He was a cook in the Palace Restaurant. The child was aged 3 years. On Oct. 25, 1902, Police Magistrate Edmunson made an order committing the child to the Society. About a month or six weeks ago a woman who said she was Mrs. Field, called at Mr. Dennistoun's office and reported that she had two young children which she wished to give over to the Society, as they had been deserted by their father. She said she was the mother of Louisa Field, whom the Society had taken in 1902. The children were very young, one an infant of two months, and Mr. Dennistoun said it would be impossible for the Society to take the children. With regard to the other child Mr. Dennistoun told her that the Society would endeavour to locate the father and compel him by legal procedure to support the child. She then went away, but late in the afternoon sent Mr. Dennistoun word that she had found a good home and there would be no further need for the Society to bother more over the matter.

On March 25th, Mrs. Fields was arrested for conducting a house of ill fame. She was acquitted and has left town. The children were taken to the Shelter and are there now with the prospects of being on the hands of the Society for an indefinite time.

DELIGHTFUL CONCERT IN THE OPERA HOUSE.

Under the Auspices of Otonabee Lodge I. O. O. F. No. 13.

A Large and Appreciative Audience was Present Mr. H. Ruthven McDonald's Marked Success.

The concert given last night in Bradburn's opera house, under the auspices of Otonabee Lodge, I.O.O.F., No. 13, was attended by a large and appreciative audience, and one can freely, and without the slightest hesitation say, that for an all round good musical entertainment it was the best of the season. That this was so was evident in the ecstatic approval on the part of the audience, who literally demanded an encore to every number on the programme. Not the season have three artists made such a pronounced impression on a Peterborough audience. Several concerts have been unsuccessful from a financial stand-point, owing to the manner in which people have shrunk from entering opera houses after the ghastly Chicago holocaust. But last night was an exception. Scarcely a single seat was vacant. It is not often that local audiences get the opportunity of hearing such talent, and when it presented itself, as it did last night, it was grasped by all music lovers.

The artists who made their bows last night were Mr. H. Ruthven McDonald, bass soloist, Miss Marietta LaDell, elocutionist, and Master Harold Rich, boy soloist. Their efforts were on every occasion, met with deafening applause, which they merited in every degree.

Mr. H. Ruthven McDonald, was of course the star of the evening. His singing was excellent. Mr. McDonald has a bass voice of great range, and was heard at his best in "King of the Elves," and "The Soldier's Grave." Although his other selections were enthusiastically received, these two were more in his style of singing, and were in consequence much appreciated.

The elocutionist, Miss Marietta LaBelle, received rounds of applause, before and after each of her readings. Miss LaDell has a wonderful manner of imitating a child, and in such selections made the greater success. Most of her recitations were of a humorous character, and the house was now and then convulsed in laughter.

Master Harold Rich also made a "hit." His singing was good and his voice was heard at its best in "Life's Lullaby." In selections of "action" he seemed to over-exert his voice, cutting off his notes sharply. For a boy he sang excellently and was encored on every occasion.

The programme was opened by Mr. H. Ruthven McDonald, who sang "The Sailor's Grave," by Sullivan. He was encored and gave a medley of the popular songs of the decade. Among these were Auld Lang Syne, The Girl I Left Behind Me, Long Years Ago, In the Starlight, The Old Folks at Home, Home Sweet Home, Rule Britannia and others, which all ran into one another in a very humorous fashion.

Miss Marietta LaDell followed with "The Old Days and the New," a cutting blow at the so-called "Smart Set." She was encored and replied. Master Harold Rich's first selection was "The Green Old Isle." In reply to the encore he sang "My Sweet Anona." The fourth number on the programme was "King of the Elves," Davis, sung by Mr. McDonald. He was rapturously encored. The first part of the programme was brought to a close with "Nancy Peggy," by Miss LaDell.

Part II of the programme was as follows: "Life's Lullaby," Lane, by Master Harold Rich; "Jamie," by Miss LaDell; "Mattie O'Mear," by Mr. McDonald; "Tell Me That Beautiful Story," by Master Rich; "The Bear Story," by Miss LaDell; "Had a Horse a Finer No One Ever Saw," by Mr. McDonald. By request Mr. McDonald brought the programme to a close with "Alone in the Desert."

Otonabee Lodge, No. 13, is to be congratulated on the complete success which this, their first Annual concert, met with. Those who were present last night will undoubtedly look forward to this event next year. The concert was brought to a close with the National Anthem.

The floral decorations which were very beautiful, was the work of Jordan Bros. and Mr. Frank Wise, to whom the thanks of the Lodge are given.

OBITUARY.

Death of Mrs. George R. Davidson Occurred This Morning.

The death occurred this morning in Otonabee, after a year's illness, of Mrs. George R. Davidson. The deceased had suffered for some time from dropsy, which eventually was the cause of her death. The late Mrs. Davidson was a daughter of the late William Learmouth, and was born in Otonabee 60 years ago. She was married to Mr. Davidson about 30 years ago, and they have lived in Otonabee for 12 years. She leaves, beside her husband, two brothers, Thomas of Hastings, and Gabriel, of Peterborough. David, another brother, and two sisters, predeceased her. She has no family living.

The funeral will take place on Thursday at ten o'clock, from the family residence, lot 30, 10th concession of Otonabee, to the Norwood cemetery.

FORGED A CHEQUE; IS NOW IN GAOL.

A Serious Charge against Frank Sheldon.

An Alleged Nortorious American Criminial Arrested in Peterborough Forged a Cheque for ovor $6 0.

About March 20th Chief Roszel received a letter from the police authorities of Bradshaw, Nebraska, to the effect that they had information in their possession which led them to believe that one Frank Sheldon by name was in Peterborough known as George V——. The letter went on to ask the Chief to keep on the watch for the man in question, as he was wanted on a charge of forgery. Accompanying the letter was the following card, on the left hand corner of which was Sheldon's photograph.

"On October 29th, 1903, a man giving his name as Frank Sheldon forged a check for $621.00 and passed the same at the State Bank, of Bradshaw, York county, Nebraska. He received $421.00 cash and a certificate of deposit for $200. The certificate is issued by the State Bank of Bradshaw, Nebraska, dated Oct. 29th, 1903, and bears number 6336. Signed J. F. Houseman, cashier.

"All persons are warned not to cash such certificate.

"Sheldon is about 26 years old, weighs 172 pounds dark hair and eye; medium height. When last seen was smooth shaven, stands erect, and is rather good looking. He has a very deep dimple on the point of his chin. This is his distinguishing mark."

Without very much difficulty, Chief Roszel got on Sheldon's track, and yesterday he was arrested at his home.

After committing the forgery he made his way to this country, and reached Toronto. There under an assumed name he met a Peterborough lady, who is well known here and highly respected. After the brief period of one month the two were married in that city; that was on December 2nd. A few weeks later, from what can be gathered Sheldon and his wife came to town, and he under the same name on which he travelled in Toronto, worked for a time at the Canadian General Electric Works.

When arrested yesterday evening, Sheldon refused to make any statement whatever. Even when asked by Chief Roszel how long he had been in town, Sheldon replied that he had nothing to say. He waived extradition proceedings.

Directly after making the arrest Chief Roszel wired the Bradshaw police of his capture, and received the following telegram:

"I start on the first train; will reach Toronto on Thursday. Bring V—— to office of Chief Constable, Toronto; will meet you there. Your charges guaranteed. Wire me here your compliance. J. H. Afflerbuck."

In reply Chief Roszel sent word that the police officer would have to come to Peterborough for his prisoner.

In the meantime the police are holding Sheldon. For this purpose he was charged with vagrancy at this morning's police court and remanded for a week, on the understanding that he should be given up on the arrival of the American officer. He only had two cents in his pocket when arrested.

This, according to the Nebraska authorities is not the beginning of Sheldon's career as a criminal. He is known on the other side as a bad character, and it is believed that he is a deserter from the United States navy. The arrest is looked upon as a very important one and credit is due Chief Roszel for the manner in which he caught his bird.

Sheldon's wife is firmly convinced that there is some mistake and that her husband is innocent of the charge against him. She expressed a desire to travel to Nebraska in order to be with him during his trial. However there can be little doubt regarding mistaken identity as Sheldon's brother-in-law openly told Chief Roszel this morning that he had seen the certificate of deposit for $200.

A large manufacturer of Children's Dresses having decided to go out of this branch of their business, offered us their whole stock at a low rate on the dollar, and we cleared them all out.

In this Special Stock you will find all sizes up to 12 years old, and there is quite a large assortment of pretty shades, and when you look them over you will readily see that they are all made in this season's latest cuts and styles.

These pretty Dresses would be sold in the usual way at $1.50, $1.75, $2.00, $2.50 and $3.00.

All this week they will be put on sale at 75c and $1.00

This is a rare chance to supply your Children with two or three dresses each at the price of one.

FOUR INCHES ABOVE HIGH WATER LEVEL.

Otonabee River Higher than It Has Been for Years.

Recent Rains Have Caused a Flood—Residents and Business Men Becoming Alarmed.

The Otonabee River is likely to cause some trouble yet. The rain of last night had the effect of raising it still more, and the water is now fully four inches above the high water mark at the Hunter street bridge, and with prospects that it will go still higher. The C.P.R. sidings to the Cereal Works are almost under water and a number of residents and business places along the river bank are becoming alarmed and are wisely taking precautions to protect their property.

The water has entered the cellar of the Matthews Company and a considerable portion of the goods stored there has had to be removed.

Some fears are expressed for the Auburn dam. Men are watching it all the time, and the gates are wide open, in order to, if possible, prevent trouble occurring there. Should this dam give way it is hard to estimate the damage which would follow.

The oldest inhabitant can recall but few instances when the water has reached its present level, which may well be considered as being abnormal. Every effort is being made to prevent damage being done, and it is hoped that no serious results will follow this sudden and almost unprecedented flood.

"The river," said a prominent citizen this morning, "continues to rise. It is now floating Mr. Faint's sidewalk. High water is on about three weeks ahead of its time. In former years the high water was about May 10th or 12th. But now May 1st is the ordinary time for high water, and the old inhabitants don't remember such high water, so early as it is this year."

TRACKS IN SNOW.

A Tramp in Canada in Winter and Some of the Things the Observant Walker Saw by the Way.

A few days before the recent January thaw I started for a tramp through the snow-covered woods. The thermometer stood at 10 below zero, but as the snow was 20 inches deep on the level, the exertion of getting through it made me glowing warm before I had gone half a mile, and when occasionally I got out of the wind the air seemed almost springlike.

Whether we enjoy winter or dislike it depends largely on whether we are prepared for it or not. Cold weather has no terrors for us if we know that we are not going to be cold in it, and half the nuisance of snow is gone if we are sure that we can go where we like without getting our feet or clothing wet.

Some Precautions.

In other words, with warm clothing and a pair of rubber boots, or snowshoes if the snow is deep enough, there is nothing to prevent any healthy person from enjoying himself in the worst weather that winter can turn out. For a winter walk in the country an overcoat is a mistake; it trails in the snow and continually gets in the way. What one requires is some form of clothing which will permit perfect freedom of movement.

With such clothing one can afford to dress lightly for, as every cross-country athlete knows, a man can keep himself warm in zero weather with practically no clothing at all if he is allowed to keep moving at his best pace.

A pair of gloves, however, will go a long way toward making one enjoy a walk on a bitterly cold day. Not kid gloves, but a good big pair, which allow for a generous air space around your hands inside, and with gauntlets which come over the cuffs of your coat, and keep out not only the wind but the snow.

And if you are going along alone in bad weather, it is a wise precaution to tell your friends which direction you intend to take, and the length of time you expect to be gone. When the snow is deep and the air intensely cold, a sprained knee or a broken leg may mean death, if assistance does not arrive in time.

A Red Squirrell at Home.

I had not gone far into the woods, when, in passing a low-growing wild apple tree, I noticed that the surface of the snow beneath it had been disturbed in an irregular manner. It was furrowed, and here and there there were holes leading into little runways, which extended downward as far as I could see. The holes were much too large to have been made by a meadow mouse, and quite too small for a muskrat, and I doubt if I should have discovered what animal had made them, if the impudent head of a red squirrel had not appeared suddenly at one of the holes.

He had a look of astonishment on his face and a small apple in his mouth. He dropped the latter on the snow in front of him, but retained the former for about five seconds, or until, with a frightened squeal, he darted to the invisible regions below.

The little apple, lying upon the snow, told a pathetic story of the little fellow's hunger, and of his efforts to satisfy it, and I wondered if he had any sense keen enough to tell him where each individual apple lay, or whether he tunnelled blindly, with the hope of finding out one occasionally.

Paths Made by Rabbits.

Further on I came to a stretch of half-open country, covered with barberry and other bushes. And here I found the paths which the rabbits had made the night before, and all along these paths the twigs of the bushes under which they ran had been cut off clean, as though with a penknife, by the sharp front teeth of the rabbits.

And thus the snow, which had done the animals an injury in one way, by covering up their food upon the ground, served them well in another way, by lifting them to a height at which they could crop the tender twigs nearer the top of the bushes.

The grouse, too, had made use of the deep snow as a platform, from which to pick the barberries. In spite of their natural snowshoes, the birds had sunk quite deep in many places, and their trail was little more than a gutter.

And as I passed one of the bushes, I saw an old bird's nest which had been roofed by a white-footed mouse, and as I touched a twig, the tenant put his head out of the door to see what the matter was. But I stood very still, and presently he went in again, perhaps to curl up and go to sleep again until the fall of night should make it comparatively safe for him to go out in search of food and to leave his lacelike trail on the surface of the moonlit snow.

The Hungry Chickadees.

But the most delightful incident of my walk occurred when I was nearing home. A flock of hungry chickadees flew into a maple tree above me, perhaps knowing that I had something to do with the many square meals they have enjoyed this winter. One of them hopped to a branch close above my head, and I felt in my pocket for some broken nuts.

Taking off my glove, I extended the hand containing the offering, and I had his earnest attention in a moment. Down he came close to me crying "Dee-dee-dee," and peering into my face with his beady black eyes, as much as to say, "Is it all right? Come now, is it?" But without waiting for a reply, he flew upon my finger, calmly picked up a piece of nut, and flew back into the maple tree. With my finger delightfully tingling from that delicate grasp, I went home feeling as though I had shaken hands with a fairy.—Ernest Harold Baynes, in Toronto Sunday World.

Madrid, April 8.—An official telegram from Barcelona states that as King Alfonso was leaving the exhibition yesterday a petard exploded, injuring two peasants. One arrest was made. His name was kept strictly secret, but it is doubtful if in the confusion the police seized the right man, especially as no one present was able to tell exactly from where the bomb had been thrown.

BRITAIN'S THIN CRUST.

Hidden Beneath the Earth Surface of the Mother Country Many Dangers Lie—Burrowing Under London.

How many of the millions of inhabitants of this "right little island" realize that danger lurks hidden and unsuspected beneath many an apparently firm and rigid city pavement, beneath many a smiling green field, and even beneath the back gardens which they cultivate with so much assiduity and pride?

That may, perhaps, appear to be a somewhat alarmist way of putting it, but it is, nevertheless, justified by hard fact.

Britain is honeycombed in many districts to an extent which places the lives of large sections of the population in jeopardy.

Centuries of delving for coal and salt in the bowels of the earth have, in parts of South Yorkshire, Lancashire, Midlands, Cheshire and South Wales, left nothing but a thinnish crust between the vault of heaven and the cavernous depths below.

This has led to subsidences of the earth, which have so recently as the past month or two been attended with loss of life and damage to property in the shape of collapsing houses and sinking, undulating streets.

Another source of danger is to be found in the numberless disused wells that have become covered up with a slight caking of soil and a treacherous growth of weeds, and which from time to time claim unsuspecting victims.

But it is in congested towns and cities that a new danger is confronting us. The rapid growth of population and the necessity for obtaining means of rapid transit have driven man to employ his ingenuity in devising methods of locomotion in the air above and in the earth beneath.

London, to take the supreme example, is being burrowed from end to end with "tubes" and underground railways. It may be contended that these "tubes" are constructed at a depth so great as to preclude all possibility of danger; but already we have seen in the case of the Central London Railway bitter complaints of vibration and damage to property on the part of people living in houses immediately above the "tube."

This cause of complaint and other troubles still to be revealed will be multiplied as "tubes" increase in number.

A coal mining expert informed an Express representative yesterday that some 150,000,000,000 tons of coal remain to be extracted from the earth in Great Britain, and that as the enormous yearly extractions continue earth cavities will have to be made of such huge dimensions that an extensive system of underpinning must be resorted to in order to make the surface even tolerably safe for the people.

A correspondent who occupies a cottage in Kent writes to The Express a letter which relates a remarkable story.

He says that he and his wife and children were returning from a ramble in the country when they noticed a circular depression in the vegetable patch close to the cottage. The earth suddenly began to move, and the mother, in deep anxiety, snatched her children away just in time to see the earth sink and reveal a disused well which, when measured, showed a depth of 80 feet.—London Express.

That Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets Brought Back Complete Health After Four Years of Suffering from Dyspepsia

After four years suffering from Indigestion and Dyspepsia Elzear Cote, Jr., of St. Edwidge de Clifton, Que., is a strong, energetic man once more, and he wants all the world to know that he owes his new found health to Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets and to no other cause. Mr. Cote says:—

"For four years I was terribly troubled with my stomach. I was treated by three doctors and they all told me the same story, I had Dyspepsia, but none of them could give me relief.

"Then I dropped the doctors and started to use Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets and the results were marvelous. After the first box I had no more pain and I was soon in splendid health again.

"I do all my work. I am never tired. I am sure anyone who suffers from stomach disease can find a cure in Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets."

Apples to Stand Western Winters.

According to a statement made by Dr. William Saunders, Director of Experimental Farms, Ottawa, to the Committee on Agriculture the other day, it seems that an apple tree has been found which will withstand the rigors of the Manitoba and North-west Winters. It is brought about by crossing the Duchess of Wealthy, with a crab, and although the fruit will not be large, it will, nevertheless, be admirably adapted for domestic use. In the course of a couple of years Dr. Saunders hopes to have sufficient produced to place them in the hands of nurserymen for distribution to the Manitoba farmers.

Dr. Saunders gave some interesting statistics of the comparative yield of cereals per acre in Canada and the United States. Last year Canada produced 80,000,000 bushels of grain, as against 601,821,000 bushels in the United States. The average yield per acre in the United States was 13.53 bushels; in Ontario, 21; in Manitoba, 20 bushels.

On representation from the National Millers' Association of the United Kingdom that the English wheats were becoming weak, a consignment from the Experimental Farms, consisting of Red Fife, Preston and Percy, the two latter being hybrids of Dr. Saunders', was shipped to England. This seed was planted, and at the last meeting of the Millers' Association it was announced that good crops had been secured, and that the flour graded on an average 80 per cent. for baking, as against only 60 per cent. for the English product.

A BIG UNDERTAKING.

How Lord Stanley Will Nationalize the Telephone System of Great Britain—History of the Past.

Negotiations are progressing for the purchase of the National Telephone Company's system by the British Postoffice Department. Of that fact Lord Stanley, the head of the department, informed the House of Commons one day recently. The announcement will excite some attention in this province, where the problem of regulating telephone service has taken fresh possession of many minds. Ottawa proposed to solve it by setting one company to compete with another, but has apparently abandoned that idea for an exclusive arrangement with a single company. Toronto is about to make its choice between the same two principles of settlement. Port Arthur has ventured into municipal telephony; there is a company exchange in the town as well. To the interest in the telephone question the judgment of the Board of Railway Commissioners in the case of Port Arthur against the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Bell Telephone Company has contributed not a little. Here, where there is all this telephone controversy going on, Lord Stanley's announcement will not pass unnoticed.

Monopoly.

The swallowing-up of the National Telephone Company's works and lines into the Postoffice Department's great system of communication seems a natural development. Before telephones were known the Postoffice had got control of the telegraph lines of the United Kingdom. That it did not annex the telephone service when that came into demand was due to unfavorable circumstances. The telegraph lines had cost two million pounds more than the amount estimated, and, in 1879, when the owners of the telephone patents appeared in Britain, the Chancellor of the Exchequer was too strongly committed to economy to spare the money to buy them out. At all events, instead of being taken over by the Postoffice, the telephone service was left to the United Telephone Company, which had to pay the Postoffice Department for the license a royalty of 10 per cent. on its gross receipts. This arrangement, entered upon in 1880, was to terminate in 1911. To prevent encroachment on the Postoffice telegraph system the transmission of written message over the telephone lines was forbidden, and the operation of each exchange was kept within strictly defined local bounds.

Competition.

There was a demand for a change. Objections were made to the United Telephone Company's monopoly. Other companies wanted licenses. Connection between the exchanges of neighboring towns was desired. In 1884 Postmaster-General Fawcett threw the field open in telephone enterprise. He removed the restrictions as to the distance messages should be sent, and the requirement that they should be oral. But all telephone companies would have to pay the Government toll of 10 per cent. of the gross receipts. Competition did not develop, and could not well develop, until 1891, when the master-patents controlled by the United Telephone Company ran out. This company and the various local companies which sprang up under contracts with it held the field. Before the patents expired the United Telephone Company had, by a series of amalgamations, absorbed these subsidiary companies, and the consolidated concern became known as the National Telephone Company. This corporation had now exchanges in all the important towns, and had many of them connected by trunk lines. It was so strongly established that it could bar out competitors even after it lost the protection of its patents. This increase the cry against monopoly.

Government Takes Trunk Wires.

In 1892 the Postmaster-General so far yielded to this cry as to take over the trunk lines, confining private companies to local exchange areas. No new licenses were to be granted to companies for the whole country, but only for particular localities. This did not suffice. The municipalities, headed by Glasgow, demanded the right to establish exchanges of their own, but had to wait some years longer. In 1896 the Government acted on the law of 1892 and bought the trunk lines of the National Telephone Company. It built additional trunk lines, and in 1898 it had the most extensive trunk system in Europe. In the latter year a select Committee of the House was appointed to consider the undertaking of a telephone service by municipalities. This committee recommended competition both by the Postoffice and by the municipalities. The recommendation were adopted.

Municipality and State.

Under the new law the company could not be dispossessed or deprived of the privilege of extending or burying its lines in a town which had secured a license to establish a service of its own. In the four years which have elapsed since the Act was passed only three or four municipal exchanges have actually got to work, Glasgow being the foremost of them. And the Postoffice, which the Act authorizes to establish exchanges, has not done more than the municipalities to make the National Company's business less. In the provinces it has less than 5,000 subscribers, and the exchanges by which these are served are nearly all in localities where the company has not thought it profitable to operate. In London the Postoffice showed more activity, but even there it carries on business by agreement with the company for intercommunication, and for the use of the underground lines of the Postoffice by the company. This agreement also provides for the purchase of the company's plant in London when the license terminates at the end of 1911. Under this arrangement the company has very greatly expanded and improved its business. Outside of London it is on the trunk lines that the Postoffice has shown its greatest activity. It has 350 trunk line centres, and for every eight telegrams it handles it now transmits one long distance telephone message. But the long distance conversations in Britain are only about three per cent. of the total telephone conversations, the local communications making 97 per cent. And the National Telephone Company still does at least 90 per cent. of the whole telephone business notwithstanding the provisions for private, municipal, and State competition.

Government Ownership.

As has been said, the company's license runs out on the last day of 1911, but the Postoffice has the right, under the agreement, to buy it out at the end of 1904. Lord Stanley's statement shows that, as Postmaster-General, he deems it wise to exercise that option, and no doubt the company sees the advantage of closing out now. There is scarcely a doubt that if the company bides its full time its property will pass into the hands of the Government for next to nothing, because it can be neither used by the company itself nor sold without a franchise to operate it, and no franchise can be got from a Government that means to nationalize the telephone service as it has nationalized the telegraph system.

Chronic Liver and Stomach Troubles Thoroughly Cured by Using

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

In every home there is more or less suffering as a result of constipation and derangements of the digestive system.

Because Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills cure such ailments more promptly and thoroughly than other preparations they have come to be considered almost indispensable as a family medicine.

Mr. C. F. Immel, shoemaker, Western Hill, St. Catharines, Ont., states: "I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills regularly for some time and consider that they are unsurpassed for torpid liver, defective circulation, indigestion, headache and constipation, as these were my troubles. I used many remedies but got no relief until I tried Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and a few boxes of this preparation have completely cured me. I am not in the habit of endorsing any medicine but in this case I cannot speak too highly in praise of Dr. Chase's Pills for what they have done for me."

Mr. D. C. Holmes, Justice of the Peace for Lincoln County, states: "I am acquainted with Mr. C. F. Immel and consider him a reliable citizen in every sense of the word; in fact I have known him from boyhood up, and can say I believe him to be honest and truthful."

Purified by Suffering

BY MARY J. HOLMES.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Very cautiously the lid was opened, and a lock of soft brown hair fell out, clinging to Katy's hand and making her shudder as she shook off the silken tress and remembered that the head it once adorned was lying in St. Mary's churchyard, where the English daisies grew.

"She had pretty hair," she thought, "darker, richer than mine," and into Katy's heart there crept a feeling akin to jealousy, lest Genevra had been fairer than herself, as well as better loved. "I won't be foolish any longer," she said, and turning resolutely to the light, she opened the lid again and saw Genevra Lambert, starting quickly, then looking again more closely—then, with a gasp, panting for breath, while like lightning flashes the past came rushing over her, as, with her eyes fixed upon that picture, she tried to whisper: "It is—it is!"

She could not then say whom, for if she were right in her belief, Genevra was not dead. There were no daisies growing on her grave, for she still walked the earth a living woman, whom Katy knew so well—Marian Hazelton. That was the name Katy could not speak, as, with the blood curdling in her veins and freezing about her heart, she sat comparing the face she remembered so well with the one before her. In some points they were unlike, for thirteen years had slightly marred the youthful contour of the face she knew once—had sharpened the features and thinned the abundant hair; but still there could be no mistake. The eyes, the brow, the smile, the nose, all were the same, and with a pang crueler than she had yet felt, poor Katy fell upon her face and asked that she might die. In her utter ignorance of law, she fancied that if Genevra were alive, she had no right to Wilford's name—no right to be his wife—especially as the sin for which Genevra was divorced had by her never been committed, and burning tears of bitter shame ran down her cheeks as she whispered, "What God has joined together let no man put asunder." "Oh, if there was only some one to advise me—some one who knew and would tell me what was right," Katy moaned, feeling herself inadequate to meet the dark hour alone.

But to whom should she go? To Father Cameron? No, nor to his mother. They might counsel wrong for the sake of secrecy. Would Mark Ray or Mrs. Banker know? Perhaps, but they were strangers, her trouble must not be told to them, and then with a great bound her heart turned at last to Morris. Morris was her refuge, and to him she would go that very day, leaving a note for Wilford in case she never came back, as possibly she might not. Had Marian been in the city she would have gone to her at once, but Marian was where long rows of cots were ranged against the hospital walls, each holding a maimed suffering soldier. Marian was impossible, and Dr. Grant was the only alternative left.

But when she attempted to prepare for the journey to Silverton, she found herself wholly inadequate to the exertion. The terrible excitement through which she had passed had exhausted her strength, and every nerve was quivering, while spasms of pain darted through her head, warning her that Silverton was impossible. "I can telegraph and Morris will come," she whispered, and without pausing to think what the act might involve, she wrote upon a slip of paper: "Cousin Morris, come to me in the next train I am in great trouble. Katy."

She would not add the Cameron. She had no right to that name, she feared, and folding the paper, she rang for Esther, bidding her give the telegram to the boy Phil, with instructions to take it at once to the office and see that it went immediately.

CHAPTER XXXV.

Dr. Morris was very tired, for his labors that day had been unusually severe, and it was with a feeling of comfort and relief that at an earlier hour than usual, he had turned his steps homeward, finding a bright fire waiting him in the library, where his late dinner was soon brought by the housekeeper. It was very pleasant in that cosy library of oak and green, with the bright fire on the hearth, and the smoking dinner set so temptingly before him. And Morris felt the comfort of his home, thanking the God who had given him all this and chiding his wayward heart that it had ever dared to repine. He was not repining tonight, as with his hands crossed upon his head he sat looking into the fire and watching the bits of glowing anthracite dropping into the pan. He was thinking of the sick-bed which he had visited last, and how a faith in Jesus can make the humblest room like the gate of Heaven; thinking how the woman's eyes had sparkled when she told him of the other world, where she would never know pain or hunger or cold again, and how quickly her lustre was dimmed when she spoke of her absent husband, the soldier to whom the news of her death, with the child he had never seen would be a crushing blow.

Just at this point of his soliloquy, the telegram was brought to him. "Come in the next train I am in great trouble."

He read it many times, growing more and more perplexed with each reading, and then trying to decide what his better course would be. There were no patients needing him that night, that he knew of, he would go, as there was yet time for the train which passed at four o'clock.

It was nearly midnight when he reached the city, but a light was shining from the windows of that house in Madison Square, and Katy, who had never for a moment doubted his coming, was waiting for him. But not in the parlor, she was too sick now to go down there, and when she heard his ring and his voice in the hall asking for her, she bade Esther show him to her room. More and more perplexed, Morris ran up to the room, where Katy lay, or rather crouched, upon the sofa, her eyes so wild and her face so white, that, in great alarm, Morris took the cold hands she stretched feebly towards him, and bending over her, said: "What is it, Katy? Has anything dreadful happened? and where is your husband?"

At the mention of her husband, Katy shivered, and rising from her crouching position, she pushed her hair back from her forehead and replied: "Oh, Morris! I am so wretched—so full of pain! I have heard of something which took my life away. I am not Wilford's wife, for he had another before me—a wife in Italy—who is not dead! And I, oh, Morris! what am I? I knew you would know just what I was, and so I sent for you to tell me, and take me away from here, back to Silverton. Help me, Morris! I am choking! I am—yes—I am—going to faint!"

It was the first time Katy had put the great horror in words addressed to another, and the act of doing so made it more appalling, and with a moan she sank back among the pillows of the couch, while Morris tried to comprehend the strange words he had heard: "I am not Wilford's wife, for he had another before me—a wife in Italy—who is not dead."

Dr. Morris was thoroughly a man, and though much of his sinful nature had been subdued, there was enough left to make his heart rise and fall with great throbs of joy as he thought of Katy free, even though that freedom were bought at the expense of dire disgrace to others, and of misery to her.

"My poor little wounded bird," he said, as pityingly as if he had been her father, while much as a father might kiss his suffering child, he kissed the forehead, and the eyelids where the tears began to gather.

Katy was not insensible, and the name by which he called her, with the kisses that he gave, thawed the ice around her heart and brought a flood of tears, which Morris wiped away, lifting her gently up and pillowing her hot head upon his arm, while she moaned like a weary child.

"It rests me so just to see you, Morris. May I go back with you—your housekeeper, instead of Mrs. Hull—that is if I am not his wife? The world might despise me, but you would know I was not to blame. I should go nowhere but to the farm-house, to church, and baby's grave. Poor baby! I am glad God gave her to me even if I am not Wilford's wife; and I am glad now that she died."

She was talking to herself rather than to Morris, who smoothing back her hair, and chafing her cold hands, said:

"My poor child, you have passed through some agitating scene. Are you able now to tell me all about it, and what you mean by another wife?"

There was a shiver, and the white lips grew still whiter as Katy began her story, going back to St. Mary's churchyard, and then coming to her first night in New York when Juno had told her of a picture, and asked her whose it was. Then she told of Wilford's admission of an earlier love, who, he said, was dead; of the trouble about baby's name, and the aversion of Genevra; but when she approached the dinner at the elder Cameron's, her lip quivered in a grieved kind of way as she remembered what Wilford had said of her to his mother, but she would not tell this to Morris—it was not necessary to her story—and so she said: "They were talking of what I ought never to have heard, and it seemed as if the walls were closing me in so I could not move to let them know I was there I said to myself: 'I shall go mad after this,' and I thought of you all coming to see me in the mad house, your kind face, Morris, coming up distinctly before me, just as it would look at me if I were really crazed. But all this swept away like a hurricane when I heard the rest, the part about Genevra, Wilford's other wife."

Katy was panting for breath, but she went on with the story, which made Morris clench his hands as he comprehended the deceit which had been practiced so long. Of course he did not look at it as Katy did, for he knew that according to all civil law she was really Wilford's wife as if no other had existed, and he told her so, but Katy shook her head. "He can't have two wives living, and I tell you I knew the picture—Genevra is not dead; I have seen her—Genevra is not dead."

"Granted that she is not," Morris answered, "the divorce remains the same."

"I do not believe in divorces. Whom God hath joined together, let not man put asunder," Katy said with an air which implied that from this argument there could be no appeal.

"That is the Scripture, I know," Morris replied, "but you must know that for one sin our Saviour permitted a man to put away his wife, thus making it perfectly right."

"But in Genevra's case the sin did not exist. She was as innocent as I am, and that must make a difference."

She was very earnest in her attempts to prove Genevra was still a lawful wife, so earnest that a dark suspicion entered Morris's mind, finding vent in the question: "Katy, don't you love your husband, that you try so hard to prove he is not yours?"

There were red spots all over Katy's face and neck as she saw the meaning put upon her actions, and, covering her face with her hands, she sobbed violently as she replied: "I do, oh, yes, I do! I never loved anyone else. I would have died for him once. Maybe I would die for him now; but, Morris," he is disappointed in me."

"You cannot go home with me, Katy! your duty is to remain here in your husband's house," he said, and she offered no remonstrance. "It is not safe for you to be alone. Esther must be with you," he continued, feeling her rapid pulse, and noticing the alternate flushing and paling of her cheek.

A fever was coming on her feared, and summoning Esther to the room, he said:

"Your mistress is very sick. You must stay with her till morning, and if she grows worse, let me know. I shall be in the library."

Then, with a few directions with regard to the medicine he fortunately had with him, he left the chamber, and repaired to the library below, where he spent the few remaining hours of the night pondering on the strange story he had heard, and praying for poor Katy whose heart had been so sorely wounded.

The quick-witted Esther saw that something was wrong, and traced it readily to Wilford, whose exacting nature she thoroughly understood. Numerous were her conjectures as to the cause of the present trouble, which must be something serious, or Katy had never telegraphed for Dr. Grant, as she felt certain she did.

"Whatever it is, I'll stand her friend," she said, as she bent over her young mistress, who was talking of Genevra and the grave at St. Mary's, which was no grave at all.

She was growing worse very rapidly, and frightened at last at the wildness of her eyes, and her constant raving, Esther sent down for Morris, and bade him come quickly to Mrs. Cameron.

"She is taken out of her head, and talks so queer and raving."

Morris had expected this, but he was not prepared to find the fever so high, or the symptoms so alarming.

"Shall I send for Mrs. Cameron and another doctor, please?" Esther asked.

Morris had faith in himself, and would rather no other hand should minister to Katy, but he knew he could not stay there long, for there were those at home who needed his services. Added to this, her family physician might know her constitution, now, better than he knew it, and so he answered that it would be well to send for both the doctor and Mrs. Cameron.

It was just daylight when Mrs. Cameron arrived, questioning Esther closely, and appearing much surprised when she heard of Dr. Grant's presence in the house. That he came by chance she never doubted, and as Esther merely answered the questions put directly to her, Mrs. Cameron had no suspicion of the telegram.

"I am glad he happened here at this time," she said, "I have the utmost confidence in his skill. Still it may be well for Dr. Craig to see her. I think that is his ring."

The city and country physicians agreed exactly with regard to Katy's illness, or rather the city physician bowed in acquiescence when Morris said to him that the fever raging so high had, perhaps, been induced by natural causes, but was greatly aggravated by some sudden shock to the nervous system.

Mrs. Cameron was very glad that Dr. Grant was there, she said.

"Perhaps it is best she should not know of the telgram," he thought, and merely bowing to her remarks, he turned to Katy, who was growing very restless and moaning as if in pain.

"It hurts," she said, turning her head from side to side; "I am lying on Genevra."

With a sudden start, Mrs. Cameron drew nearer, but when she remembered the little grave at Silverton, she said: "It's the baby she's talking about."

Morris knew better, and as Katy still continued to move her head as if something were really hurting her, he passed his hand under her pillow and drew out the picture she must have kept near her as long as her consciousness remained. He knew it was Genevra's picture, and was about to lay it away, when the cover dropped into his hand, and his eye fell on a face which was not new to him, while an involuntary exclamation of surprise escaped him, as Katy's assertion that Genevra was living was thus fully confirmed. Marian had not changed past recognition since her early girlhood, and Morris knew the likeness at once, pitying Katy more than he had pitied her yet, as he remembered how closely Marian Hazelton had been interwoven with her married life, and the life of the little child which had borne her name.

"What is that?" Mrs. Cameron asked, and Morris passed the case to her, saying: "A picture which was under Katy's pillow."

Morris did not look at Mrs. Cameron, but tried to busy himself with the medicines upon the stand, while she too, recognized Genevra Lambert, wondering how it came in Katy's possession and how much she knew of Wilford's secret.

Baby Costs Too Much

When the price paid is the mother's health and happiness. The father doesn't realize as he romps with the child what years of wifely suffering must be set against the baby's laughter.

Chronic invalidism is a high price to pay for the painful joy of maternity, yet it is at such a cost that many a woman becomes a mother. Such a price is too much because it is more than nature asks.

By the use of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription maternity is made practically painless, and a quick convalescence is assured in almost every case.

"I am pleased to give my testimony and wish I could find words strong enough to induce other sufferers to use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription," writes Mrs Wesley Guy, of Kemptville, Ont., Box 6. "For eight years after my little boy was born I suffered with female weakness, also soreness in ovaries, especially on my right side, and pain in back. Was so miserable sometimes did not know what I was going to do. Tried several doctors but derived no benefit until I began using Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Had only used four bottles, also some of Dr. Pierce's Antiseptic and Healing Suppositories, when I felt like another person. I recommend Dr. Pierce's medicines to all my friends. If anyone wishes to write me I will gladly answer."

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription contains no alcohol and is entirely free from opium, cocaine and all other narcotics.

The dealer who offers a substitute for "Favorite Prescription" does so to gain the little more profit paid on the sale of less meritorious medicines. His profit is your loss; therefore, accept no substitute.

Doan's Kidney Pills

Cured Mr. George Graves, Pitts Ferry, Ont., of a very bad case of kidney trouble.

He tells about the cure in the following words: "I cannot recommend Doan's Kidney Pills too highly. I never took anything that did me so much good. I had a severe pain in the small of my back and could scarcely get up or down without help. I could hardly urinate, but when I did the pain was terrible. I was in the Hotel Dieu, Kingston, last winter and when I came out I was some better but not cured. It was then I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised. Since taking them I have been completely cured and have not had any trouble with my kidneys since."

Cures Rheumatism!

The Great South American Rheumatism Cure.

Seizes hold of the disease at once and in three days at the outside the wonder is done, oftener in one day. Relief felt at the first spoonful. Lumbago and Neuralgia flee before it; and it prevents their return. A bottle of it saves many a dollar and hours of pain, to say nothing of preserving valuable lives.

James A. Anderson, of Calgary, N. W. T., writes: "Rheumatism crippled me. I remained in the hospital six weeks and was treated by the best physicians without any improvement. I procured a bottle of SOUTH AMERICAN RHEUMATIC CURE. To my delight I got better at once, and I have been working every day since.

The Great South American Nervine tonic sets all the vital organs in order by first feeding the nerves. The best cure for any and all affections of stomach, liver, heart, brain.

THE LATEST NEWS FROM NORWOOD.

Personal Mention and Other Items of Interest from the Eastern Town.

Norwood, April 11.

The annual Vestry meeting of Christ Church was held Easter Monday. The reports presented showed the past year to have been the most successful in the history of the church. The contributions were larger than ever before, and all liabilities have been met. There is a surplus on hand which speaks well for the prosperity of the congregation. The following were elected for the following years:—

Rector's Warden—C. Alexander Grant.

People's Warden—E. P. Caffe.

Sidesmen—Messrs. Powell, Richardson, Baskin, Baker, Peters and Fleming.

Lay Representatives to the Synod—L. J. R. Richardson and A. N. Dymond, K.C.

Vestry Clerk—C. Richardson.

Auditors—Messrs. Grover and Wilkins.

Mr. Geo. J. Sherry, barrister, of this place, will visit Hivetock every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday afternoons. His office is in Drain's Block, over Curtis' furniture store.

The Village Council met on Monday evening at 8 o'clock; present, Messrs A. Brecult, Reeve; and Wm. Spence, W. J. Webster, B. W. Squire and H. Fry, Councillors.

The minutes of last regular meeting were read and approved. A number of accounts were presented.

Moved by Councillors Squire and Spence, that the accounts be paid and an order drawn on Treasurer to the Board of Health.

An account from Dr W. C. Redmond for service as Medical Health Officer, and disinfecting Mrs. Ray's house last year, was a motion of Councillors Spence and Fry.—Referred to the Board of Health.

A communication from Mr. L. J. R. Richardson, manager of the Union Bank, was read by the Reeve, stating that the balance in the Bank of the credit of the corporation on the 31st of March, was $262.23.

A communication from the Ladies' Aid of the Presbyterian church, asking for the use of the town hall on the second night of the fair in October next, was read by the Reeve.

Moved by Councillors Squire and Fry, that the Ladies' Aid of the Presbyterian church be allowed the use of the town hall on the second night of the fair, on the terms usually given to any of the local churches and societies.—Carried.

Mr. R. Scriver offered $10 for the use of the park to pasture horses during the summer and agreeing to keep fences in repair and to leave the key with Mr. Spence, so that any person desiring to do so may use the track for training horses.

Moved by Messrs. Squire and Fry, that Mr. Scriver be given the use of the park on the above conditions.—Carried.

The constable was instructed to notify Mr. W. C. Harrison to remove the logs from the street opposite his mill.

Moved by Messrs. Fry and Webster that the clerk bill the secretary-treasurer of the Choral Society for one cord of wood, $4.50, used by the society.—Carried.

Council adjourned at 9 p.m.

The death of the late Mrs. Martha Stinson, relict of the late Richard Stinson, of Emmsmore, occurred at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. Fred Gardiner, Dummer, on Friday, April 8th, after a short illness.

The funeral took place on Sunday afternoon to the Norwood cemetery, Rev. Mr. C. Parker, the Methodist minister, conducting the service. Mrs Stinson was 52 years old. She leaves five children to mourn her loss :Mr. Richard Stinson, Mrs. Fred Gardiner, Miss Mattie Stinson all of Dummer; Mrs. Samuel McGee, Mrs. Jas. Blakeley, Asphodel. The pall bearers were Messrs. Jas. Andrews, J. Patterson, G. Gardiner, A. Gardiner, R. McMaster and Frank Parker.

Local shippers shipped this week two cars, double decker, of hogs and calves to Toronto, one from Norwood and one from Owen Sound. The price paid for hogs was $4.60.

Mr. C. E. Puckenham received this week one car load of wheat from Owen Sound.

Mr. Wm. O'Keefe of Elinton, was in town on Monday visiting friends.

Mr. F. Birdsall of Birdsall's, was in town on Monday.

The death occurred in the Toronto hospital on Sunday of Harry Dafoe, son of the late Wesley Dafoe of this place. His remains will be brought to Norwood on Tuesday for interment.

Mr. Thos. Lobb, an old resident of the township of Asphodel, has decided to move to the west. He shipped from the C.P.R. station on Monday one car of settlers effects, to Millfort, Sask. Mr. Lobb's family will follow him in the fall.

MAN OF SILK AND STEEL

FASCINATING STUDY OF THE LEADING MAN OF JAPAN

One of Sir Edwin Arnold's Latest Articles Just Before His Death, Dealing With Marquis Ito, the Bismarck of Japan—At Home at Odawara—His Devoted Wife—Story of No Man's Land.

It was lately permitted me to sketch, for this newspaper, in light and respectful outline, His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Japan as I saw him amid his troops upon the hills clad with purple and gold blossoms which fringe the southern shore of the island Empire.

Next to that august figure the personage who will necessarily rise to the mind when thinking upon that interesting country and its present profoundly important position is her great statesman, the Marquis Ito.

I have ventured to call him in the title of this brief paper the "Bismarck of Japan," but the similitude between the two characters is only partial, and hardly covers more than the single fact that history will probably speak of both as the renovators and, in a sense, actual creators of their respective nationalities.

If the German Chancellor-Prince was of "blood and iron" his Japanese anti-type would rather be described as one of "silk and steel."

Justly to make up the human blend which would best present the chief statesman of Tokio to western imaginations one would have to add qualities taken from the subtlety of Cavour, the patriotism of William Pitt, the tenacity of George Washington, and the diplomatic resources of such keen ecclesiastical Ministers as France possessed in Richelieu and Mazarin.

I am not pretending that Marquis Ito unites in his genius and temperament all that belonged to these epoch-makers, but merely that in intercourse with him a student of character might be reminded of each and all the above-mentioned in their turn.

After that would remain that aspect of perfect simplicity and naturalness which every true-bred Japanese keeps for his inner and domestic life.

I have seen the famous politician who stands to-day across the path of Russia almost as grandly as Horatius upon the bridge, with not very many more than the two companions of the Roman hero to share his uttermost dangers and innermost hopes—as plain a country gentleman, as contented a rustic squire, as could be found in the shires.

At Home at Odawara.

He did me the honor of inviting me to pass some time with him at Odawara, one of those lovely hamlets which dot the Pacific coast of the southern kingdom.

The native house which he occupied there had no affectation of wealth or luxury. It was only a typical rural abode, two stories, with no large number of apartments, but some of these furnished in semi-European style, and the others frankly native, and such as any Tokio merchant or fairly prosperous seaside farmer of the Tokkaido might have tenanted.

No show of state was visible, although, then, too, my illustrious host was the most powerful man in Japan. The neat and demure little maids who opened to us the outer shoji were "nesans," such as would be waiting to take a visitor's footcoverings and to announce his arrival in any well-ordered Japanese house, but no guards or police or waiting men.

At the inner entrance was the statesman himself, wearing English garments and holding in his hand an English book.

The glory of the dwelling was its surroundings, its happy setting in the midst of the loveliness of that landscape, where the perfect hills came down to the perfect seashore, and one seemed to exist in the centre of a perfect picture.

At the point where the bright sea sparkled and foamed against the embankment of the garden there stood a little enclosure shut in with bamboo poles, lightly lashed to posts with grass string.

In the centre of this there paced about three or four grave storks, in their smooth but sombre plumage of black and white, with dark purple and bottle-green reflections—birds of restrained demeanor, dear to all Japanese artists and indispensable as symbols alike to the poets, historians and fan-makers of Dai Nippon.

These were high favorites, although I think they would have been glad to get out along the yellow sands, where the sea-shells and little crabs lay so invitingly, or among the square patches of the rice fields, whence innumerable frogs were beginning their evening chorus.

He spoke about the storks as "totems" of Japan, but I pointed away from the Tsuru to a great, glittering, long-bodied dragon-fly, balancing upon the leaf of a lily his jointed body of black and blue, big round eyes, formidable jaws, and filmy powerful wings.

That also is an accepted symbol of the land, the "Tombo," resembling in shape the long winding line of the Japanese archipelago, which numbers more than 2,000 islands.

I remarked that it reminded me better of Japan than did the solemn storks, for, I said, "After the fashion of that splendid creature your Empire has cracked the skin of 'O, Jishin' and emerged into 'Meiji.'"

To this day all Japanese speak of the great uprising which put an end to the Shogunate as the "Earthquake," while they term the new era, which has now lasted 36 years, as "Meiji" (Beginning of Order).

Yet none but the ignorant regard Japan as commencing civilized life six and thirty years ago. She was a cultured nation of a date when Britain was barbarous, and fought the armada of the Mongul conqueror Kutala Khan victoriously before Howard and Queen Elizabeth saved England from the Spaniard and the Inquisition.

His Devoted Wife.

At dinner time we left talking about rural matters, and I listened with deep interest to what fell from the lips of him who among the foremost, had built so strong and well upon the foundations which the "Earthquake" had fiercely laid.

Everybody knows about the early years of Ito's venturous life; how he foresaw the mighty future and prepared himself for it, studying the west down to its deepest principles, working his way to Europe as a common sailor, landing on England's shores with half a dollar in his pocket, but with a heart in his breast, ardent, patriotic, full of an Empire to be.

And by his side was the amiable lady who in the time of her childhood had seen this hero husband hiding for his life under the "tatami," while his enemies, searching everywhere and thirsting for his blood, dragged her by her long black hair from her cushions and threatened to kill her also.

Now she did the honors of her house, placid, demure, debonair, the kind eyes which had witnessed such deeds and days guarded by blue spectacles from the over-brilliant gold of the setting sun, while her illustrious lord, with only a gray hair or two in his black locks went back to finish behind the nearest screen the rules of the new Parliament, or busied himself in making lists of peers, as we catalogue pictures or books or sacks of rice.

I saw the great Marquis on the first day of that new Parliament, when, while peers and commons, with foreheads upon the floor, knelt in two hemicycles before the Mikado, he stood proud, but reverent, beside His Imperial Majesty, handing to him the first speech from the throne.

I shall never forget the bow of acknowledgment which the Mikado vouchsafed to the two Houses of his Legislature, thus simultaneously prostrate before him.

How would he discharge this recognition, descendant from the Sun, heir of a dynasty which has 2,000 years of record? He simply dropped his chin two inches and a half, so as just to touch the broad scarlet and white ribbon which crossed his breast, and in that Imperial parsimony of salutation I saw the inborn traditions of his line.

I saw and heard it all like a mouse at a chink in the wainscoat, for the master of ceremonies had solemnly whispered to me:

"You must not be seen. You are here by chance placed above the Emperor, which would be treason. You will see everyone sits below him except Ito. You must be honorably invisible." And so I was.

A Story of No Man's Land.

That night again in Tokio I had the honor of listening to him upon whom so much still depended, and was glad to find his first and last thought was to render Japan powerful enough to save herself, whatever might befall.

I should not, of course, dream of repeating here any of the weighty things he uttered, since they were all heard in private conversation; yet I may be allowed to mention an instance of his alert habit of mind and swiftness of action.

I had spoken of a group of islands eligible to possess, and, as I had gathered, not by any means out of reach of Japan's ownership if she wanted them.

Without directly replying he took a swift note in Japanese, despatched a messenger to the telephone, and returned quietly to the little pipe. I saw the message afterwards, the sense of it was:

"Send immediately full particulars, with map and latest commercial particulars, report of—" well, No Man's Land.

Not long afterwards I had occasion to find that he knew more about the spot in question than anybody, and the white and red flag of Japan floats over it now.

The last time I met the great Marquis was in Moscow, at the coronation of the reigning Czar.

Japanese Racial Distinction.

The first snow which follows maturity had sprinkled his temples and neck like the summer drift which lies upon the head of Fuji, but the firm face seemed more resolute than ever; the dark brows were even more sternly knit, the strong mouth had grown almost harder than before with use of words masterly and commanding.

He was not Ambassador for Japan at that time, but only, if I rightly remember, a representative Minister, who, so far as I could see, did not by any means waste his time while in the city of the green and golden domes.

It appeared to me that I was viewing history through an inverted telescope, seeing him and Count Lobanoff standing together, far off, in the miniature of events, but coming and certain to come into the large foreground.

The Russian statesman, who has not survived to carry out the anti-British plans he cherished, was tall, spare and punctilious; Marquis Ito is of average Japanese stature, which is lower than that of the west; and you could read difference of race in the Muscovite countenance, where the Slav blood mingled with the Teutonic, and that other countenance, which only the ignorant called Mongolian, and foolishly confuse with the yellow peoples.

It will be well when continental statesmen learn that a score of natural facts discriminate the Japanese people from the Chinese and the Tartars. There is more of Malay blood, there is even more of Kanaka and of Polynesian blood, in that fearless, self-reliant visage of the famous Marquis than of Gengis or Kulia Kean.—Edwin Arnold.

Lemon Baths.

A lemon bath is regarded as a luxury in the West Indies. Several limes or lemons are sliced into the water and allowed to lie for half an hour in order that the juice may be extracted. A remarkable sense of freshness is given to the skin by the acidulated water.

Tribute to a Mother.

Sir John Blundell Maple was never tired of telling his friends how much he owed to his mother. He used to say, "She was the cleverest woman I ever knew," and he often related the advice she gave him when as a boy he thought of being called to the bar. "If ever you were to become Lord Chancellor," she said, "you would have reached the end of all things in that profession. You would have such and such an income and such and such a position, which are already known to you. But if you go into business there is no limit to your opportunities." The boy chose his father's business and, as he often said, never forgot his mother's advice.

Lifebuoy Soap—disinfectant—is strongly recommended by the medical profession as a safeguard against infectious diseases.

WIT AND SENSE.

Capt. Hunter's Unique Lecture to Toronto Empire Club on "The Fatuous Insolence of the Young Canadian."

The other day, Capt. Hunter, LL. B., son of Dr. Hunter of the Registry Department of Ontario, delivered a rather unique lecture at the Empire Club luncheon on "The Fatuous Insolence of the Young Canadian." The World reported it as follows:

Capt. Hunter considered it one of the glories of the Empire Club that it was fitted by its organization for the beginning and ending of those family quarrels which make home life dear. He would not scorn the kangaroo, nor contemn the Africander, nor dilate upon the imbecility of the British, but wished to call their attention to "the fatuous insolence of the Canadian."

There were two elements in the national question. The fixed one was Canada; the variable, the Canadian. They had many books on the makers and builders of Canada, some of which they had subscribed for and some almost paid for, but while the older part of Canada had been made and re-made, conquered and reconquered, there had never been made a conquest of Canada. They had only hacked and whittled at it. It was a proof of the singular things which men took pride in to hear people glorying in the boast that the Northwest could support fifty millions, when the scanty population there looked like tacks on a map which held it to the wall. The wealth and resources of Canada, the locked storehouse of nature, were the ultimate prize of the ultimate masters of the world. They were familiar with a native wine sort of ecstacy over the hyphenated This-Canada-of-Ours, its forests of immemorial age, and its business men of similar antiquity, but the day of the young country, which was to be mothered and nurtured, had gone, and there was not a man in Canada who would not back his opinion against that of any Englishman.

Canada Had Assumed Insolence.

Inspired by the heroism of a few of us at Paardeberg, Canadians had taken on the first requisite of a great nation—insolence. There were two kinds of insolence—the benign and the malignant; the sustained and the fatuous. When Napoleon moved with 200,000 men at Jena he exhibited the sustained variety. In popular language, he had the groceries. When another Napoleon in 1870 tried to move with 350,000 men he presented an example of the fatuous kind. The French had not Batoche and Paardeberg to animate them, but they had Jena and Fontenoy and the Malakoff and other little fights.

Great Need of Carefulness.

It was unnecessary to point out the reasons for carefulness in face of this growing insolence. When a man thinks he can fight you need not go to Woodbridge Fair to arrive at the result. The same warriors that had been filling us with post-prandial valor have also been spreading abroad the glory of our possessions. There are our glorious forests, which we are too stingy to cut; our unwrought mines, which we make a pretext for selling each other worthless stocks; our boundless granaries, which somebody else will make haste to get us a tenant for if we cannot fill them ourselves. We have immense resources and nothing to defend them with. Since 1812 we have had complete peace and have forgotten the source of it, which was that nobody knew we had anything worth stealing. Manchuria had drawn the attention of brass-knuckled peace, the emperor of the double-headed vulture. In an unguarded time Christian nations had learned of the timber and coal and arable land in Manchuria, and we know the result. Russia had more regiments in Manchuria than Canada had companies in the Dominion. We have been foolish enough to "show our wad," and now we must protect it.

How England Might Lose.

We relied on England, but in a sea fight of five or six hours England might lose the command of the sea for six months. No nation would invade Canada with less than fifty or a hundred thousand men, and they would not give us time to prepare as the British did the Boers. In 1895 the Boers were in the same state of fatuous insolence which we now displayed. Every Boer was a heaven-born rifle shot. Instead of the two million dollars Sir Frederick Borden spoke of spending they had spent two million pounds. They had a rifle for every man. We had 40,000 for two millions.

Greece, to whose military preparations in 1897 our own bear a singular resemblance, had a navy and a toy-army. But they had nothing ready, as Canada has nothing ready. If we had a war we should be breaking into the stores for sporting rifles as the Greeks did. He supposed Larissa was Helenic for Ridgeway. They might say the Greeks were degenerate, but give Lord Kitchener the Greeks and the money and he would take Constantinople with the Greeks as he took Khartoum with the Egyptians.

Had a Cafe Politician.

The Greeks had a sort of cafe politician who was omniscient, who talked of the indomitable courage of their ancestors and bragged of Marathon, which was a free translation of Paardeberg. Our climate did not permit of cafe politicians like the Greeks, but we had dining clubs in which the national glory was vaunted amid thunderous applause of our own making. That sort of greatness feeds upon itself. Something practical was needed. If Sir Frederick Borden had made it ten millions and got the job done some time ago, we should now have more land and less Alverstonian patronage.

In conclusion he thanked the club for their attention and the patience with which they had listened to words which he hoped to the Lord they would have allowed none but a native Canadian to utter.

JAPANESE WERE CUT TO PICEES.

Japanese Patrol of Fifty Men Exterminated by the Russians.

HOT FIGHT ON YALU RIVER.

Naval Battle in Progress—Japanese Fleet Reported to be in the Vicinity of Port Arthur—St. Petersburg a Bombardment of Port Arthur and a Fight on the Yalu is Expected Momentarily.

St. Petersburg, April 13.—General Kuropatkin, in a despatch to the Emperor bearing yesterday's date, says that Gen. Krasnalinsky on the night of April 8 ordered a detachment of sharpshooters to cross to the left bank of the Yalu, opposite Wiju. The sharpshooters landed on the Island of Samalind and surprised a patrol of Japanese scouts, just as the latter were approaching the east side of the island in three boats.

The Russians allowed the Japanese to land and then fired on them. Nearly all the Japanese were shot, bayoneted or drowned and their boats sunk. The Russians sustained no losses.

Non-Commissioned Officers Louchkine and Souhaschonov distinguished themselves in the fight.

On the following day the Japanese lowered their flag at Wiju and their outposts, which lately have been seen, fell back.

On the night of April 9 four Russians crossed the river to Yanamo (Yonghampho?) and made towards a Russian village, where they found a squadron of Japanese cavalry. They remained there twelve hours, when they were betrayed by Coreans and found themselves obliged to swim the river, their boat having struck a sandbank. One soldier lost his life.

The Japanese pursued the Russians in a boat, but were in turn attacked by a Russian boat, which had come to the recue of the swimmers. The Japanese were all killed and their boat sunk.

Reported at Tokio.

Tokio, April 13.—It is believed that fighting has commenced on the Yalu River. It is known that the Russians occupy the right bank of the river in force.

No direct information from the Yalu district has been received here, but the position of the Russians is known, and while it is doubted that they will be able to prevent the Japanese from crossing the river, it is regarded as certain that they will offer some opposition. It is not believed, however, that there will be a serious engagement during the Japanese attempts to cross the Yalu.

The foreign military observers attached to the first Japanese army have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness to move, and it is expected that they will leave for the front in a few days.

Heavy Firing Heard.

Che Foo, April 13.—(11 a m.)—A correspondent of the Associated Press at Tengchow, 40 miles norhwest of here, telegraphs as follows:

"Sounds of heavy firing were heard at half past 6 o'clock this (Wednesday) morning. The firing evidently was being done between here and Port Arthur. It is believed at Tengchow that the long expected sea fight among the Miatao Islands has taken place. The Japanese battleship Asahi, flying an Admiral's flag, was seen off Che Foo yesterday going to the west, and there is no doubt that the reaminder of the Japanese fleet was in the vicinity of Port Arthur. The Russian fleet also was seen outside of Port Arthur yesterday.

Expect Another Fight.

St. Petersburg, April 13.—According to telegraphic advices received by The Novosti from its correspondent at Liaoyang, a bombardment of Port Arthur and a fight on the Yalu are expected momentarily.

Russians Entrenched.

Seoul, April 13.—Japanese advices from Northern Corea state that the Russians have strongly fortified Choutiencheng, a walled town on the Manchurian side of the Yalu River, about ten miles north of Antung. It is estimated that there are 20,000 Russians at Antung ready to oppose the Japanese crossing.

Swept By a Storm.

Vladivostock, April 13.—Valdivostock and the surrounding country have been swept by a heavy storm which crippled the telegraph lines and destroyed buildings. The telegraph lines have been repaired.

Russians Fatal Mistake.

London, April 13.—The Times' Newchwang correspondent, cabling under date of April 11, says: "Last night a pilot's flare was taken for the lights of a Japanese fleet and the Russians fired and sank the junk, with 35 hands, besides killing three persons and wounding seven in another junk. The native population is panic-stricken and leaving the town."

Who Go Down to the Sea in Ships.

Manistee, Mich., April 13.—The tug Frank Canfield, owned by the Canfield Tug Line of this city, ran aground on the outer bar at Point Sable and sunk Monday night. Capt. Henry Smith, Engineer Charles Kopfer of Manistee, and Helper William Justmann were lost. The mate and fireman were saved.

Rev. Dr Scrimger to Succeed.

Montreal, April 13.—The committee appointed to consider the matter of a successor to Rev. Dr. MacVicar, principal of the Presbyterian College, reported in favor of Rev. John Scrimger. This report will have to be approved of by the general assembly.

RUSSIAN WARSHIP SANK.

Reported Drowning of Commander of Russian Troops Japanese Repell an Attempt to Across the Yalu.

(Special to the Examiner.)

St Petersburg, April 13.—It is officially announced that Vice Admiral Makaroff was drowned at the time of the sinking of the battleship Petropavlovsk.

Chefoo, April 13 — A private despatch from Port Arthur says the Japanese attacked that place at daylight to-day, and that the Russian fleet, assisted by the fire of the forts drove the enemy off.

St. Petersburg, April 13. — A semi-official telegram announces that the Russian battleship, Petropavlovsk, has been sunk off Port arthur, and that only four of the officers were saved, among them being the Grand Duke Cyril, who was wounded. Between six and seven hundred were drowned.

Tokio, April 12.—An official telegram from Wiju says that a company of Russian troops attempted to cross the first stream of the Yalu River, west of Wiju this morning, and that a company of Japanese attacked and drove the Russians back. The bodies of 20 dead Russians, the telegram adds, were found after the fight. Their uniforms showed that they belonged to the 21ith Regiment of Sharp-Shooters. Finally the despatch says that small parties of Russians without uniforms have attempted to cross the Yalu River at different points between Wiju and Yongampo and that they were all driven back.

Pacific Liner Ashore.

New York, April 13.—A despatch from Acajutla, Salvador, which was received at the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company yesterday, states that the steamer Colon, bound from San Francisco to Panama with passengers and freight, is ashore near that port. All of the passengers were saved. Several of them were en route to New York.

Fatal Fall From Bridge.

Jordan, April 13.—Joseph Thompson, about 45 years of age, a resident of Port Credit, was instantly killed by falling from the old bridge on the G.T.R. over the twenty mile creek at Jordan yesterday morning. He was engaged with a party of workmen removing the spans.

Pe-ru-na a Prompt and Permanent Cure for Nervousness.

MRS. LULU LARMER.

Mrs. Lulu Larmer, Stoughton, Wis., says:

"For two years I suffered with nervous trouble and stomach disorders until it seemed that there was nothing to me but a bundle of nerves.

"I was very irritable, could not sleep, rest or compose myself, and was certainly unfit to take care of a household.

"I took nerve tonics and pills without benefit. When I began taking Peruna I grew steadily better, my nerves grew stronger, my rest was no longer fitful, and to-day I consider myself in perfect health and strength.

"My recovery was slow but sure, but I persevered and was rewarded by perfect health."—Mrs. Lulu Larmer.

Mrs. Anna B. Fleharty, recent Superintendent of the W. C. T. U. headquarters, at Galesburg, Ill., was for ten years one of the leading women there. Her husband, when living, was first President of the Nebraska Wesleyan University at Lincoln, Neb.

In a letter written from 401 Sixty-seventh street, W., Chicago, Ill., she says:

"I would not be without Peruna for ten times its cost."—Mrs. Anna B. Fleharty.

ALGOMA CENTRAL LOAN GUARNTEE.

The proposition of the Ontario Government to extend aid to the "Soo" industries by way of guaranteeing a loan of $2,000,000 seems peculiar to those who have not considered the conditions. In the first place it should be stated that the proposed loan is not a bonus or gift of money. The Government simply places its credit at the service of the company to that amount, for the short space of two years for the purpose of permitting the Company to negotiate a loan more readily. The province is amply secured from loss or even risk of loss. By way of security for guaranteeing the loan the Government gets control of all the paid up shares in the Algoma Central Railway, and Manitoulin and North Shore Railways, amounting to $10,000,000 and $214,000 respectively; it gets control of all the mortgage bonds of the two railways, amounting in the case of the Algoma Central, to $6,750,000, and in the case of the Manitoulin and North Shore, to $105,000, and besides a note of $725,000, secured by mortgages upon the vessels of the Company's plant. In addition the Government retains control of the land grant of 1,600,000 acres, made to the Algoma Central, and earned but not yet turned over. Here the province, for, so to speak, the mere endorsation of the Company's paper, has security of nearly $10,000,000 of property earning more than ten per cent. upon the Government's guarantee of two millions.

The conditions upon which this loan is guaranteed, provides for the completion of the railway to connect with the C. P. R., thus furnishing direct Canadian connection with the North-west, for the business of the district in the vicinity of Sault Ste. Marie, which formerly has passed through Wisconsin, via Minneapolis. This line when completed will be 225 miles in length. The nearly 100 miles already completed and in operation, is one of the best built roads on the continent, and laid with 85 lb steel rails; 110 miles are graded ready for the rails, and only 25 miles to be constructed from the ground. The Company is bound to continuously operate the road when completed. The reorganized company is to acquire all the industries at the "Soo" and start operations with not less than $1,000,000 of working capital; thus giving employment to 4000 or 5000 hands, pay off the Speyer loan and satisfy all other creditors, of whom many are Canadians. Included in these liabilities is that incurred for the payment of wages after the sudden collapse due to financial depression some months ago.

The completion and operation of the railway makes possible the otherwise impossible operation of the industries, which are dependent for successful and profitable operation on an adequate supply of raw material, which the railway only can furnish.

Some little idea of the importance of the aid which the Government is furnishing, is afforded by the following partial list of the industrial operations made possible by the completion of the railway, and that possible by the Government guarantee. The operations include iron and nickel smelting, steel works and railway construction, quarrying and transhipping of limestone, pulp making by both the raw and sulphide or charcoal processes, iron mining, iron working, charcoal works, products of electric energy for electric lighting and power purposes, railway construction and operation, and street railway and navigation service for both passengers and freight. Many of these works were in successful and profitable operation before the recent collapse, due largely to financial depression and manipulation. The steel rails branch of the Soo industries is of most vital interest to Canadians. In view of the present activity of railway construction, it is important that, as is possible, Ontario should supply her share of the demand. Rails of first-rate quality have been turned out at the Soo, and this can be continued, and doubtless will be continued under the new conditions. Up to the present Ontario has not supplied all the ore for steel rails making; the ore from the Helen and other Ontario mines, was too high in phosphorus, and admixture of ore from the Messaba range in Minnesota, was necessary. It appears from investigations made into the quality of ore of the Belmont mine in Hastings County, that it is suitable for purposes of rail manufacture. If this be so, the steel works at the "Soo," will make demands which will originate a very profitable industry. By means of a short railway line from the mines to the head of Stony Lake, and with the completion of the Trent Valley Canal, ore could be carried by water to the wharves of the steel works at the "Soo." About 100,000 tons of steel rails are used in Canada every year, and there will be unlimited demand for all that can be produced at the Sault Ste. Marie works.

The Province of Ontario, in view of the important trade results that will follow resumption of the "Soo" industries, is in interest bound to come to the rescue of the great industries, especially as only the loan of her credit, upon ample security, is all that is asked to secure such an end.

A THREE-FOLD BOON.

The idea to be gathered from Opposition speeches on the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill is that the existence of fertile lands in northern Ontario and Quebec is a fiction invented as a support for the Dominion Government's transportation policy, says the Toronto Globe. Every one who has taken any interest in the matter knows that hints of fertile lands in those northern latitudes had been brought out by various explorers and travellers, and that at length in 1900, three years before the launching of the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme, the Ontario Government sent into the field ten exploratory parties to spy out the land. The reports of the surveyors, land-lookers, and timber estimators who were attached to each expedition were so favourable that the country rang with the discoveries of great areas of land well fitted for settlement.

There can be little doubt that the facts made known by the exploratory parties of 1900 played an important, if not a principal, part in the subsequent railway policy of the Dominion Government. When the proposals of the promoters of the Transcontinental Railway were submitted, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues saw at once that the plan they were asked to aid promised the least possible advantage for Canada. The Grand Trunk had already been spoken of as a denationalized railway, because its ocean terminus was at an American port. The greater the amount of territory it served the greater would be the gain of that American port and the corresponding loss of Canadian ports. The problem to be solved was, how the desire of the Grand Trunk to get into the west could be availed of so as to secure the greatest good to the country. The Opposition seem to think that it could have been done by giving the Grand Trunk the permission it asked for, and demanding as a return that a clause be inserted in the bargain binding the railway to carry all its freight to a Canadian port. Does anyone believe that such a crude provision would secure the end in view? It might, indeed, secure the delivery of the freight at Montreal in summer, but, so long as the Grand Trunk had no line of its own to the Maritime Provinces, we may be sure the obligation would be virtually disregarded in winter.

The only way was to make it to the interest of the company to carry its freight to a Canadian port, and that is secured by making a Maritime Province line one of the features of the bargain, and by nominating in the bond that the freight rates to a Canadian port should not be higher than those to an American port. Mr. Northrup in his speech the other day said the Opposition would have granted the Grand Trunk the original request to build from North Bay. What was there in this for Ontario? Not one dollar's worth of development, not one additional acre of cultivation. To the Laurier Government the matter presented itself in this way. The desire of the railway to get into the west could be utilized to secure the opening up of wholly new regions from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

It is quite true that the cheap and bulky products of the west will in a large measure find their exit by water. This fact however does not do away with the necessity of transcontinental railways. The Canadian Pacific, the Great Northern, and other railways, carry a tremendous tonnage to the great lakes, but they have their all-rail connections to the ocean, nevertheless, nor could they do without them. They are a vital necessity to these roads, just as an all rail connection will be necessary to the Grand Trunk Pacific, although it will doubtless use the water route to the top of its capacity during the season of navigation.

Not only then does the bargain tend to keep the transportation of Canadian products within Canadian territory to the upbuilding of Canadian ports, but it also establishes a nerve of population from one side of the continent to the other, provides the shortest and most rapid route between Europe and Asia, and insures, as far as human foresight can provide, that one of the great highways between the two old continents shall be across Canadian soil. The road will be built with that aim in view; it will be built with the experience that has accrued in railway construction during recent years, and under the circumstances it will revolutionize transportation on this continent.

A CURE FOR INSOMNIA.

A Well-know St. John Merchant Tells how He was Freed From This Terrible Trouble.

One of the best known men in St. John, N.B., is Mr. G. G. Kierstead, grocer and general dealer, 611 Main street. Mr. Kierstead has an interesting story to tell of failing health, insomnia, and finally renewed strength, which cannot fail to interest others. He says:—"A few years ago I was all run down and failing in health, no doubt due to overwork and shattered nerves. I was unable to sleep at night and found no rest in bed. My life seemed a burden to me and I found no pleasure in anything. I sought medical aid and the physicians who attended me were unable to give me any relief. The doctors differed in their opinon as to my ailment. Finding that I was growing worse, and almost crazed through loss of sleep, I concluded to give up business and go to the country for a rest. Just when I was at my very worst and had almost no desire to live, my wife urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I had lost faith in all medicines, but to please my wife I decided to give the pills a trial. I have had reason to be thankful that I did so. Almost from the outset the pills helped me and I was able to find sleep. I continued their use until I felt perfectly well again. I could sleep as I did in my childhood; I grew healthy and strong and have never known one hour's trouble from that source since. I have no hesitation in saying that I believe Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved my life, and will always say a good word for them to any who are troubled with sleeplessness."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pill's work cures like Mr. Kierstead's, after doctors and common medicines fail because they actually make new, rich blood, and so strengthen all the organs of the body and brace up the nerves. That is the way they cure indigestion, kidney and liver troubles, nervousness, neuralgia, palpitation of the heart, rheumatism and the special ailments that filt the lives of so many women with misery. The genuine pills always have the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" on the wrapper around every box. If in doubt write direct to the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and the pills will be sent post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

INDIAN RIVER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The roads and land are drying rapidly for the anxious farmer and machine agents.

Mr. P. Burke has commenced his work on the Lestch and O'Leary Canal. The work when finished will be of much service to the surrounding country. Mr. Burke said in his speech at the Bachelors' Hall during the last session of the committee, that the object of the canal was two fold,—(1) It would open up the east to commerce. (2) That it would be most convenient for driving the lumber from Mr. Laundergan's limits. He also said on behalf of the lock, that the pattern would be taken from the Peterborough Lift Lock, the largest in the world, but on a smaller scale. Mr. Burke has the sympathy of the people for they realize the benefit of his work.

Mr. A. Devlin was the guest of Mr. D. O'Brien, of Ashburnham, last week.

McPherson & McGregor

(Successors to the F. R. J. McPherson Co.)

Take this opportunity of thanking the public for the very liberal patronage accorded the late firm. Trade has been so satisfactory that Mr McGrego decided to increase his interest in the business and, as a consequence, the firm will be know hereafter as McPHERSON & McGREGOR.

Our specialties are:—

Sanitary Plumbing
Sanitary Ventilating
Steam and Hot Water Heating
Electrical Wiring and Supplies

We wish to draw the attention of the public to a few of the many complimentary testimonials received by Mr. McGregor for the high quality of the work he has installed in Plumbing and Heating:—

From the Firm of Bennet & Wright; Plumbing, Heating and Electrical Contractors, Toronto.

This is to certify that Duncan McGregor has been in our employment steady for about fifteen years and during that time we have found him to be steady, honest and trustworthy. He has given every satisfaction as a practical mechanic in each of the following branches: Plumbing, steam and gas fitting, also electrical and conduit work, and for some time has had charge of some of our largest contracts with satisfactory results.

From Illsley & Horn, General Contractors, Toronto.

The bearer, Mr. Duncan McGregor, had charge of the electric wiring at the King Edward Hotel Building. The job was a large and complicated one and by the way Mr. McGregor handled the work he proved himself a mechanic of more than ordinary ability. We unhesitatingly recommend him as a first class mechanic to anyone needing his services.

From Mr. J. Ross Robertson, of the Evening Telegram.

Mr. Duncan McGregor, who has been connected with the Bennet & Wright Co. for some years, and who has superintended the work of plumbing and heating for the Bennet & Wright Co., is not only in my opinion, but also that of my architect, a fully competent mechanic. His work, my architect informs me, has been most satisfactory. Any thing that has come under my own supervision has been likewise satisfactory.

An Extract Taken from the June Number of Domestic Engineering.

During the recent convention of the Canadian Electrical Association held in the King Edward Hotel, a thorough examination was made of all the electrical work in the hotel, and it was pronounced second to none on the continent. Therefore, great credit is due Mr. Duncan MacGregor, who superintended the entire conduit, electrical and power system for the firm of Bennet & Wright, of this city, who were the contractors for all the different branches of the electrical work in the new hotel.

INTERESTING ADDRESS ON INDIA MISSIONS.

Delivered by Miss Nicholls at George Street Church Yesterday.

Speaker Interestingly Portrayed Life in India Hardships of Those Who Engage in Missionary Work.

Yesterday afternoon [illegible] one hundred ladies gathered in George street church, on the occasion of the anniversary of the Woman's Missionary Society, and the meeting was one of more than ordinary interest, made so by the fact that an address was delivered by Miss Nicholls, a returned missionary from India.

The meeting was presided over by Mrs. Kendry, the Hon. President of the Society, and in her opening remarks she dealt with the great work being done by the Society, and the wide field for missionary effort.

Preceeding the lecture solos were rendered by Miss Bertha Parnell and Miss Kendry, with Mrs. Mowat as accompanist.

The address given by Miss Nicholls was one thoroughly enjoyed by the large number of ladies present. It was intensely interesting, dealing as it did with the missionary work among the women in India. Miss Nicholls, who is now at home on a short vacation in order to regain her health, which had become unsatisfactory by her hard and self-sacrificing work under trying circumstances, has been for some years at Bombay, India, and in her address she spoke eloquently of the life of the Christian missionaries in that far-off land, and the hardships undergone by those who leave western countries to engage in Christian work in that country.

The speaker related many interesting incidents of life in Bombay. During the terrible plague and famine, she was engaged in her work in the midst of the greatest of suffering and danger. Her work was that of an educational and evangelistic nature, teaching the young, and endeavouring to lead them to Christ. The speaker also dealt with the founding of schools for Hindu girls, and described in an interesting manner the Indian Zenanas.

Concluding the address the ladies served refreshments in the basement and an enjoyable informal hour spent together.

JOINT MEETING WAS A SUCCESS.

Members of George Street Girls Guild Were Guests of Young Men's Guild.

The meeting of the Young Men's of the George street church held last night was one of more than usual interest, since the members of the Girls' Guild were at the meeting as guests of the young men. A large number of both Guilds were in attendance at the meeting, which was presided over by the first vice-president, in the absence of the president. The members of the Girls' Guild also assisted in the programme which though short was of a very enjoyable character. It opened with a solo by Mr. Fred Skitch, which met with well-merited applause. Miss Eva Whiten followed with a recitation, in which she greatly pleased her hearers. A piano solo by Miss Gumpricht was met with a demand for an encore to which she graciously responded.

A short time was then spent in social intercourse, and after this exercise a Guild paper contributed to by members of the Young Men's Guild, was read and thoroughly enjoyed. A great many local and personal references were particularly timely.

In the short business meeting which followed it was decided to hold an entertainment under the auspices of the two Guilds sometime in the near future and a joint committee was appointed to arrange details. The suggestion was made that since the union meeting had proved so successful, others might be arranged in the future.

PRESENTATION TO WM. FREDENBURG.

Members of Baraca Bible Class Given Him Silver Dish and Knife.

At a meeting of the Baraca Bible class held Monday evening in the Murray street Baptist Sunday School, the President, W. Garbutt, called upon the Assistant Secretary, J. Hardwick, to read the following address:—

Peterborough, April 11, 1904

Mr W Fredenburg,—

On behalf of the Baraca Bible Class it gives me great pleasure to present you with the small token of remembrance of you, not only as a member, but also as a faithful standby of the class. We hope that as you look at this you may remember many happy Sabbath afternoons spent in the class in the study of God's Word. And we hope that our interest will not be changed when you have become a member of the Ancient and Honourable Order of the Benedicts. We also hope that you will study the Word of God continually, and may the blessing of God be and remain with you. We join in best wishes to you and your intended and wish you all the success of married life.

Signed on behalf of class,

W GARBUTT, President.

J. ELLIS, Vice President.

L CROSS, Vice-president.

The President presented him with a handsome silver butter dish and knife. Mr. Fredenburg replied in a few suitable words, thanking the class.

Will You Write a Postal

So a Sick One May Get Well?

Send no money—simply a postal card, giving the name of some one who needs help. Tell me the book to send.

Then I will do this: I will arrange with a druggist near him so that he may take six bottles of Dr. Shoop's Restorative. He may take it a month at my risk. If it succeed the cost is $5.50. If it fail, the druggist will bill the cost to me.

That month's test will show you what the remedy can do. It is the easiest way to induce all who need help to accept it.

I make this offer to multiply my cures, and I am willing to trust the cured ones to be fair with me.

In the past 12 years I have furnished my Restorative to hundreds of thousands of sick ones on just those terms, and 39 out of 40 have paid gladly because they got well. I pay just as willingly when one says I have failed.

The remedy is my discovery, the result of a lifetime's work. I have perfected it by watching results in thousands of the most difficult cases that physicians ever meet. I know what it will do.

My success comes from strengthening weak inside nerves, and my Restorative is the only remedy that does that. When an organ is weak I bring back the nerve power which alone operates every vital organ. It is like giving an engine more steam. I give the weak organ power to do its duty, and there is no other way to make a weak organ well.

Can you conceive of a sick one who will neglect such a treatment, when I take the entire risk?

HE STABBED MAURA

Attempted Assassination of the Spanish Premier.

WAS NOT SERIOUSLY INJURED

Joaquin Miguel Arto, An Anarchist, the Would-Be Assassin, Was Arrested—Says He Has No Accomplices—Attempted Suicide By Dashing His Head Against the Wall —Premier Unpopular.

Barcelona, April 13.—Late last night a semi-official report of the attack on Premier Maura was issued, according to which the assailant held concealed a kitchen knife, with which he stabbed the Premier, but the force of the blow was broken and its direction diverted by the heavy lace on the minister's coat, resulting in only a slight scratch under the sixth rib. A doctor attached to King Alfonso's suite examined the Premier and prescribed a few hours rest. His Majesty sent a messenger to inquire concerning the attack, and as to the Prime Minister's condition.

Joaquin Miguel Artoa, the assailant, was employed as a domestic. He is an anarchist, and when arrested attempted suicide by dashing his head against the wall. He was injured.

According to another account, the Premier coolly drew the knife from his clothing and threw it on a seat in his carriage, after which he entered a palace, walked upstairs and telephoned to Minister of Interior Guerra, Madrid, saying:

"I have been stabbed. Don't be alarmed. The wound is not serious."

Premier Maura is very unpopular in Catalonia, owing to his firm attitude in suppressing labor disorders. The attack was made just after he had distributed 3,000 pesetas to the poor.

MUTUAL CONCESSIONS.

What Lord Lansdowne Says of the Anglo-French Treaty.

London, April 13.—The text of the Anglo-French Colonial Treaty was officially issued yesterday afternoon. It is prefaced by a despatch from Foreign Minister Lansdowne to the British Ambassador to France, Sir Edmund J. Munson, in which Lord Lansdowne says that a settlement was notoriously desired on both sides of the Channel, and that the movement in its favor received powerful influence from the respective visits of King Edward and President Loubet.

Lord Lansdowne lengthily reviews the main features of the agreement, and concludes:

"It may, perhaps, be permitted for the two countries to hope that in thus basing the composition of their long-standing differences upon mutual concessions, and a frank recognition of each other's legitimate wants and aspirations, they may afford a precedent which will contribute something to the maintenance of international good-will and the preservation of general peace."

Police Into Yukon.

Dawson, April 13.—An expedition of Northwest Mounted Policemen is en route from Herschel Island, in the Arctic Ocean, near the mouth of the Mackenzie River, to Dawson. This is the longest trip ever undertaken through an absolute wilderness on the continent in the dead of the northern winter. The windings of the route to be followed perhaps will necessitate 2,000 miles of travel.

Floods in the West.

Winnipeg, April 13.—An inundation of this city is feared. Miles of telegraph lines are down and trains are stalled by washouts. Heavy storms, followed by rains, have deluged the whole country north of the Minnesota border, and farmers along the Red River are fleeing to the hills with their families and live stock. Many narrow escapes have been reported.

HOTEL BURNED IN BOBCAYGEON.

The Rockland House Destroyed Early Tuesday Morning.

Fire the Work of an Incendiary Fire Engine Disabled and Brigade Consequently Handicapped—Heavy Loss to Proprietor.

(Special to the Examiner.)

Bobcaygeon, April 12th.—The fine hotel known as the Rockland House, was burned to the ground with all the contents and outbuildings about 2 o'clock this morning. The fire, which is believed to have been the work of an incendiary, started in the stables east of the hotel, and with which the latter is connected by a line of buildings all of a highly inflamable nature, and in a short time the beautiful structure was reduced to a heap of smouldering ruins.

Mr. Harvey Thompson, the proprietor, will lose heavily by the fire, as the only insurance was $6,000 on the buildings, and they cannot be replaced for that amount. One horse in the stables perished in the flames.

That the one who was responsible for the fire was determined that the deed should be accomplished was made evident by the fact that before the fire someone entered the firehall and let the water out of the fire engine, so that it was impossible to generate steam in it, consequently the brigade had to work with buckets and a small hand engine. Some additional help was afforded by the use of some hose from the water works department. The pumping station is small, however, and the relief afforded was not such as to enable the firemen to cope successfully with the flames.

Some snow fell during the night which, fortunately, prevented the fire from spreading.

Robert Read's barber shop was in the same building, but the contents of it were saved.

The hotel was a large brick structure with mansard roof, and it burned furiously. The citizens worked with a will to keep the flames from spreading to the buildings situated to the east and south and succeeded owing to the fact that the wind, being from the south, swept the flames and flying embers in the direction of the canal.

The fire will be a severe blow to the village as the hotel was largely instrumental in bringing numbers of tourists to the town during the summer season.

People of This Place.

There are people in every town and village of this country who have been cured of itching, protruding and bleeding piles by the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Ask your friends about this great preparation; they can tell you of its great soothing, healing and antiseptic powers. More reputable people have endorsed Dr. Chase's Ointment than any preparation you can name.

Sudden drops of temperature are impossible in the home heated by hot water. Stove fires die out, hot air furnaces heat unevenly, and the hot air switches to other parts of the house leaving the remaining rooms cold and drafty. But with the heating system of the in connection with Oxford Radiators an even, steady circulation of hot water is kept up throughout the house. Each radiator is diffusing the same temperature of heat in sufficient quantities for the size of the room.

The illustration below shows that the distance from the fire to the first surface is less than in any heater made, and the water has a shorter distance to travel, thus a more equal temperature is maintained in the water of the several sections.

Write for our booklets, they are of interest to everyone with a home to heat.

Mr. Elcome has a number of excellent specimens which he will exhibit on Monday evening. A musical programme will also be given. The League would be glad to have a large number present to hear, what no doubt will prove a most interesting lecture.

DELIGHTFUL MUSICALE WAS WELL ATTENDED.

A Pleasant Concert at Mrs. Andrew MacFarlane's Last Night.

A very delightful musical given under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of St. Andrew's church, was held last night at the residence of Mrs. Andrew McFarlane. Despite counter attractions and the weather a large number of persons were present and a most enjoyable time spent. The programme was a most enjoyable one and the audience was most enthusiastic in its applause. The first selection was an instrumental duet by Mrs. Peter Kerr and Mrs. Charles McClelland, and was followed by a vocal solo from Miss Florence Carter, entitled "Life's Lullaby." That both selections were highly appreciated was seen in the applause which was accorded. Mr. Sidney Glass sang, with marked success, "Past and Future," by Dekoven, and "A Song of Spring," by Neidlinger. "True Till Death," sung by Mr. A. E. Young, was rapturously encored, Mr. Young replying with "Barney O'Brien." A double number by Miss Violet B. Smith was greatly appreciated and evoked great applause. She sang "Ein Obdach Gegen Sturm," by Kahn, and "I Cannot Help Loving Thee," by Johns. A vocal duet, entitled "Sing Me to Sleep," was artistically rendered by Miss Miller and Mr. Glass. Rev. J. G. Potter rendered an excellent solo "The Pilgrim Fathers," and also pleased his hearers with an interesting reading, entitled, "Uncle Zeckle's Carpet," from the current number of Everybody's Magazine.

The very pleasant event was brought to a close with dainty refreshments, and before departing the guests expressed their thanks to Mr. and Mrs. McFarlane.

EVENING WAS ONE GREATLY ENJOYED.

Members of St. John's Girls' Guild Provided Good Programme.

"Aunt Jerusha Dow's Family Album Proved Most Entertaining—Great Credit Due Miss McCollum.

The entertainment given in the school room of St. John's church last night under the auspices of the Girls' Guild proved a great success. The room was comfortably filled, and everyone seemed to enjoy the programme to the full. The different numbers were well rendered and with credit to those taking part.

The play, "Aunt Jerusha Dow's Family Album," with Miss Alma McCollum as director, was certainly well executed, and caused considerable mirth to the audience. The different characters were in most of the numbers, well taken, and without exception, won the hearty applause of the audience. The director, as each picture was exhibited, gave a short biographical sketch of the lives of the originals, and in this way held the attention of the audience with marked success. The idea is a capital one, and no doubt if at another time a similar entertainment is given, with Miss McCollum as director, a larger audience will avail themselves of the opportunity to enjoy it.

The play was interspersed with solos and instrumental music from different persons, who proved themselves quite capable of holding their own with better known talent. Miss Dawson's solo was well received; she has a very sweet contralto voice and controls it well. Mr. Sawyers sang a solo entitled "Love's Old Sweet Song." It was well rendered. A particularly pleasing number was the solo by Mrs. Clarke, with piano accompaniment by her sister, Miss Jackson, Mr. Jos. Halpany playing the violin obligato.

Mr. F. E. Lount pleased the audience with a solo, which he had to respond to, giving "The Old Plaid Shawl."

Halpany's orchestra, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Halpany, and Masters Frank and Carl, was well received, and the numbers given were well executed. The number, "When the Moon Shines Bright," with the chorus, was well received, and an encore only satisfied the audience. "My Little Love Bird," was also well given, while the "Century March" almost literally brought down the house. Mr. Halpany deserves great credit for the training which he is giving his boys, and no doubt they will yet make their mark in the world of music.

At the close of the programme Rev. Mr. Davidson thanked the audience on behalf of the Girls' Guild, for their kind attendance, and expressed the wish that another similar entertainment would be given, and another opportunity of enjoying the very excellent entertainment, the credit for the success of which was largely due to the efforts of Miss McCollum, and of which the audience showed its unmistakable approval.

The following is the programme, giving the names of those who took the representation of the different characters:—

J. COYLE BROWN ON CURRENT WAR.

Gave Interesting Address Before St Paul's Guild.

A well attended meeting of St. Paul's Young Men's Guild was held last night with the President, Mr. Ross Cameron in the chair. After routine business had been transacted Mr. J. Coyle Brown delivered a most interesting lecture on the causes of the war between Russia and Japan. Mr. Brown mainly dealt with the two countries now engaged in hostilities, but incidentally touched upon Manchuria and the Siberian Railway.

At the conclusion of the address Mr. Brown was tendered the thanks of the audience.

THE WEDDING OF REV. D. R. SMITH.

Brother of Mr. W. A. Smith Married in Toronto.

A report of the wedding of Rev. D. Russell Smith, brother of Mr. W. A. Smith, of this town, from the Toronto Globe, will be read with interest here:

"The marriage took place on Saturday last of Rev. D. Russell Smith, rector of Grand Valley, and Miss Ethel Taylor, daughter of Mr. Robt. Taylor. The wedding was very quiet owing to the continued illness of the bride's mother. The Rev. E. C. Cayley, M.A., conducted the ceremony. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore very handsome brown travelling suit and was attended by Miss Ethel Smith. Mr. W. A. Smith was best man. Mr. A. E. Hewitson, presided at the organ."

TAKE SEPARATE VOTE.

In view of the proposal to submit the Collegiate Institute bylaw and the Sugar Beet bylaw at the same time to the vote of the qualified ratepayers, it is necessary to point out that this should not be done. The issues should be made separate and distinct. If both bylaws are submitted at the same time, this would not be to the advantage of either. If the Collegiate Institute bylaw were submitted first it would claim the undivided attention of the ratepayers as its importance demands. It is a matter of importance, in fact a matter of necessity, and should receive the greatest possible consideration. Of course submitting both bylaws at once would perhaps save expense, but the additional expense of separate submission will not be so great as to outweigh of having the two bylaws voted upon at different times.

Dress Goods, Millinery, Ready-made Suits and Skirts, Carpets and Housefurnishings.

Spring business is rushing. These FOUR DEPARTMENTS are particularly interesting these days.

Everybody Wants a New Dress.
Everybody Wants a New Hat.
Everybody Wants a New Carpet.
Everybody Wants New Housefurnishings.

We feel positive that it will be to your advantage to see our assortment of any of these goods before purchasing elsewhere. Our values are decidedly better than ever before and our assortments larger.

DRESS GOODS

Our Dress Goods Department is a wonderful department. There you will find the greatest collection of Dress Goods ever shown in this section of the country—Dress Goods of every description for both Suits and Fancy Dresses and at all prices to suit every pocket. For instance:

500 yds Tweed Dress Goods for the popular shirt waist suits. It is all wool, 44 ins. wide and comes in these popular shades,—brown, navy, reseda, fawn, mid blue, black and medium green,; they have all a pretty dash of white in them which give them a pretty, tweedy effect; our special price is, per yard ..... .50

700 yds French Voile, all pure wool, 46 in. wide in 8 popular shades—champagne, reseda, nile, brown, navy, mid blue, pearl grey and black, suitable for dressy dresses our special price per yard..... .75

MILLINERY

Our Millinery Department is the centre of attraction in this district both for Dress Hats and Suit Hats. Our Millinery has a style about it which stamps it decidedly Richard Hall & Sons' Millinery. Materials are different, shapes are different and the work is decidedly different to the ordinary millinery. We want to emphasize the fact that if you want your Spring Hat correct you had better leave your order here and leave it as early as possible to ensure early delivery, as our milliners are more than busy.

OUR BIG READY-MADE DEP'T

You will find it on the second floor, with an immense assortment of Suits, Skirts, Jackets Raincoats, Underskirts, Blouses, Whitewear and Wrappers. It's a grand department with grand values. For instance:

Our Special Black Suit at $15.00, made of black, all-wool broadcloth, Norfolk coat, trimmed with military pocket and military buttons, pretty flare skirt, strapped seams and stitchings, nobby suit at $15

Rain Coats. A new shipment of ¾ length Rain Coats just to hand, entirely new shapes trimmed with military buttons, very nobby and grand values at $10 and $12

Interest in the Carpet & Curtain Sale Increases Daily.

Never before have we seen so much enthusiasm so plainly manifested in regard to a Carpet and Floor Covering Sale, and the question was frequently asked, "How can such values be given?" The principle is simple, as are all great facts, being in a large measure due to this: We buy for cash; we buy right. We sell right. You reap the advantage of the discounts we are enabled to secure and of our having no middleman's profit to consider. Cash gets extraordinary values when we buy. Come and see the great saving we can make you.

THE LOCAL WOLLEN MILL NOT EFFECTED.

By Sale of the Plants of the Canada Woollen Mills Company.

Auburn Mills Has Sufficient Ready to Operate Continuously for Some Time Makes Better Class of Goods.

The Globe to-day says:

"Within a few days the properties of the Canada Woollen Mills Company, which include valuable plants at Hespeler, Carleton Place, Waterloo and Lambton Mills, will be advertised for sale. Employed in the different mills are some seven hundred hands, and if there is no sale they will be thrown out of work. The mills have been supplying the wholesale drygoods trade with a varied line of goods and their closing will be felt all over the country.

"At a meeting of the directors of the Canada Woollen Mills Company yesterday morning, the reports showed that the company has been carrying on business at a loss for the past three years. It was resolved that the several plants should be advertised for sale because of lack of orders. The properties included are the real estate at Lambton Mills, Waterloo and Hespeler Mills, and the Gillies and Hawthorne mills at Carleton Place. In these properties over a million dollars have been invested, but the directors state that in spite of the fact that the company has been steadily losing money, the different plants remain unencumbered, and that there are sufficient assets to satisfy every claim."

This, of course, will not affect the local woollen mill of the Auburn Company. The mills comprising the Canada Company have been engaged in making the coarser line of goods and it is in these lines that the greatest depression is being felt.

The Auburn Mills, it is learned, has ample orders to keep them in continuous operation for some time. The goods manufactured here are the finest in the Dominion, and in the better class of worsteds and tweeks which this company make a specialty of, the trade is active. It will be pleasing to all those interested in the local industry to learn that the conditions which make the operation of the other plants unprofitable, do not affect the local mill, which will continue in operation as usual.

THE BRIGHT PROSPECTS OF CANADIAN WEST.

Interesting Interview with Mr. W. C. Ackerman.

Who Has Just Returned from Fourteen Weeks' Business Trip and is Optimistic The Influence of Foreign Immigration.

Mr. W. C. Ackerman, who has just returned from a fourteen weeks business trip through Manitoba and the North-west Territories, was seen by an Examiner reporter this morning and gave some very interesting facts regarding that country, its present condition, the influence of foreign immigration and the prospects for the year.

THE PRESENT CONDITION.

The country has been somewhat tied up by an exceptionally severe winter. It can readily be believed, that, as in Ontario, the West has not experienced such weather for years. Snow has been on the ground for five months and is still in evidence to the depth of about four or five feet. Mr. Ackerman experienced the thermometer at 55 degrees below zero and once for five days on end during his trip was not above 40 degrees below zero. Such excessive weather has naturally been a source of great trouble and expense to the railroads. The train service, especially on the branch lines was bad. Delays were frequent as were accidents, the frozen snow derailing many trains. At North Portland Mr. Ackerman saw two hundred cars of settlors' effects waiting for the roads to clear. But it is not the railways alone which have suffered although their losses were perhaps the heaviest. Ranchers have also lost by death many of their weaker cattle through the severe cold, and many animals have perished this winter. However in spite of all Mr. Ackerman is optimistic. "The spring," he said, "will open up the usual trade and everything will be going ahead, once the snow has gone and traffic reopened."

FOREIGN EMIGRATION.

The West is perhaps populated by some representatives of every nationality. Emigrants have begun to arrive but only in small numbers yet, owing to the late spring. But already Scandanavians, Poles, Englishmen and Americans have begun the invasion which in the months pass will be far greater. "The Americans," said Mr. Ackerman, "are the best kind of emigrants." Apparently his reason for the statement is because the American settler is an experienced farmer. He opened up uninhabited land in his own country and succeeds in Canada much better than the others, many of whom know nothing whatever of farming. Mr. Ackerman remarked that the Barr colony which was so criticized by many newspapers, was doing excellently. He met three hundred Englishmen going to join the colonists. The authorities expected an increased American immigration, and are giving citizens of the United States liberal inducements, such as cheap excursion rates, no duty on settlers' effects, and so forth. The worst feature of the west, in the opinion of Mr. Ackerman, is the collections. These are somewhat slow, owing a great deal to such a heavy snowfall and to speculation

THE YEAR'S PROSPECTS.

The year's prospects are on the whole of the brightest. The almost world-famed Manitoba crop is expected to be even greater than it was last year, which alone speaks volumes. Winnipeg and the other western cities are growing at an exceptionally rapid rate, and although building operations have not begun as yet, much in that line will be done this year. Through the ever increasing immigration more land is under cultivation and the snow will put the ground in good shape. The business of the West continues to grow. Every month the stores find themselves doing a more extensive business and Mr. Ackerman's opinion is that undoubtedly this will continue.

SUGAR BEETS.

The Peterborough Sugar Company, Limited, will pay this year for sugar beets, delivered at the factory, $4.50 a ton, and $4.00 at the nearest railway station. Should the factory not be completed in time to slice the beets, the Wallaceburg Sugar Company, Limited, have agreed to take them at the above contracted prices, superintend shipment thereof, and pay the farmers direct from Wallaceburg. This is a special offer made by Mr. Gordon to encourage the industry here. The farmers will materially assist in carrying the bylaw by losing no time in contracting for beets. Seed will be ready for distribution on Saturday, 16th inst.

SUGAR PROPOSAL FULLY EXPLAINED.

If Accepted will not Necessitate Raising Money by Assessment.

Ample Security to the Town—Town to Have Representative on the Board.

Mr. J. W. Garvin has supplied the Examiner with some information relative to the proposal made to the town by Mr. Gordon, and his associates.

"Some misapprehension exists in town as to the proposed assistance to be rendered the local Sugar Company. The town is not asked to raise a dollar by assessment to aid the industry, but simply to guarantee the company's bonds to the extent of $100,000. This will enable the company to sell the bonds to some large financial institution and secure the cash without delay. For the guarantee given the town will have the company's grounds and factory as security. As the latter are to cost $350,000 in cash, the amount of guaranteed bonds is less than 30 per cent. of the total value.

"Furthermore the bonds are to be ten year instalment bonds, and the company undertakes to retire $50,000 of them in three years from the date of their issue, and $7,000 annually thereafter. They point out that it is easy for them to do this in as much as they have $200,000 in stock to sell during the next three years, and will receive in cash from the Ontario Government, during that period, as a bounty, about $75,000.

"The bylaw also provides that the town shall not guarantee the first $50,000 of bonds until the machinery, costing $156,000 in Europe, shall arrive on the company's grounds; and shall not guarantee the next $50,000 of bonds until the factory is in operation for ten days.

"The town also has the privilege of appointing a director of the company.

"If the bylaw carries Mr. D. A. Gordon and his associates are to invest $100,000 in capital stock of the company and the former has consented to take the presidency, and to take an active interest in the company's management. He is generally conceeded to be a man of exceptional business ability, and knowledge of the sugar industry."

WEDDED IN MILLBROOK.

Mr. D. J. Fleming Married to Miss Grace Ross.

At the Manse, Millbrook, the residence of Rev. W. Haig, on Wednesday, the marriage was solemnized of Mr. David James Fleming, Millbrook, and Miss Grace Ross, daughter of Mr. A. Ross, formerly of Grafton, and sister of Mrs. Haig. The ceremony was conducted by the bride's brother, Rev. A. S. Ross, Foxboro, assisted by her brother-in-law, Rev. W. Haig. The bride wore white mousseline de soie over white silk, and carried white roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Agnes C. McEwen, of Cobourg, wore white organdie and carried pink roses. The best man was Mr. Roy Fleming, brother of the groom. About thirty guests were present.—Globe.

A real cure for Catarrh

Catarrh may be relieved by douches, etc., but they will not cure. A permanent cure can be effected in only one way, viz., by building up the system and purifying the blood, thus enabling nature to throw off the disease. The only known specific for Catarrh is

Ferrol

If you are a sufferer try a bottle and be convinced. Send for testing sample to THE FERROL CO., LIMITED, TORONTO.

Hair Grower

GREW THIS HAIR

Testimonial No. 422.

MISS NORA GASTAGER
2108 Centre Ave., Pittsburg, Pa.

When the scalp throws off either dandruff or a gummy substance, it is an evidence of scalp disease, and no time should be lost in correcting it. You certainly would not hesitate to take treatment were you to look at this matter through a magnifying glass. When highly magnified it readily shows a mass of insects. These creatures absorb the nutriment for the support of the scalp causing the scalp to become dry and feverish, resulting in the loss of hair and finally baldness. Seven Sutherland Sisters' Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner works wonders in all such cases. It thoroughly eradicates all traces of scalp disease and makes the hair grow unusually long, strong and beautiful. One bottle is enough to show you that it will do just as we say—even more. NOW at all druggists, two sizes, 50c. and $1.00 per bottle.

ANGLO-FRENCH TREATY.

Prolific Source of Disturbance in Newfoundland Yet Remains.

London, April 12.—(C.A.P.)—The official text of article 2 of the Newfoundland convention reads: "France keeps her subjects on a footing of equality with British subjects in the matter of the right of fishing on the territorial waters in that part of the coast of Newfoundland included between St. John's Cape and Cape Bay going northward. This right may be exercised during all the fishing seasons terminating for all parties on Oct 20 in each year."

The Morning Post says that as a territorial cession and indemnity has been given for a mere readjustment of French rights, the arrangement is very one-sided. The competitive fishing rights which have so long been a cause of disturbance remain. This prolific source of possible disputes has not been dried up.

Dundonald on Cadets.

Lord Dundonald, writing to the Earl of Meath re cadets' drill says all the compulsory training of Britain's military work should be done between the 13th and 17th birthdays. All classes of work and discipline could be learned in 100 drills. Lord Dundonald encloses a scheme re the organization of cadet corps in Canada and the United States simplifying drill.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Jiminez, the fugitive Dominican rebel general, has arrived at New York.

The New York conference of the M. E. Church has passed a resolution deploring lynching.

The 8-year-old son of Rev. J. J. Hill of Pittsburg, accidentally shot and killed his 4-year-old brother.

Chas. Tucker, the young man arrested for the murder of Mabel Page, at Waltham, Mass., Monday, pleaded not guilty and was remanded until April 21.

Drowned at Ottawa.

Ottawa, April 12.—William Bergner, a milkman, residing near the Ottawa Lumber Yard, was drowned near Hardman's Bridge yesterday afternoon, just before 1 o'clock. Accompanied by a hired boy, Jim Leonard, he was driving in a single horse express wagon along the graded road, which is covered with water to a depth of as much as four feet in places, and accidentally getting off the track, was precipitated into the ditch, when a frenzied struggle for life began. A neighbor, W. P. Hardman, arrived in time to save the boy, but Bergner and the horse were drowned.

How a Boxer Died.

Quebec, April 12.—Louis Drolet's death resulted from hemorrhage caused by blows received from George Wagner in a boxing bout at the Patnoir Miroir, but Wagner did not deliver the blows maliciously. This was the verdict of the coroner's jury in the inquest which was brought to a close yesterday afternoon, after the medical men who made the post-mortem with Dr. Lelad, corroborated the latter's evidence. Wagner has been arrested and will come before Judge Chauveau to-day for the preliminary investigation.

Three Men Assault One.

Ridgetown, April 12.—Sunday afternoon three men entered Dr. Fry's livery office and attacked Bert Clack. They are George Hagaman, a merchant, Bert, his son, and a Detroit pugilist. One of the men had a revolver, which was taken from him by Chief Tye, who, however, allowed all to escape. The man assaulted is under arrest for assaulting George Hagaman a few days ago and it is supposed that Ben. Hagaman, the son, came over from Detroit to get even with Clack.

His Arm Pulled Off.

New York, April 12.—With his right arm torn completely off at the elbow and every joint and ligament in his body twisted and strained, Charles Metzen, an engineer, is at Roosevelt Hospital. His foot caught in a three ton punching machine screwed to the floor, while his arm was twisted in a belt above, and the machine was raised two feet in the air, then the arm severed.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Mr. Fisher Sympathetic.

Ottawa, April 12.—Mrs. Hoodless of Hamilton, Lady Tilley of Ottawa, and Miss Derick of Montreal, representing the National Council of Women, had an interview with Hon. Sydney Fisher yesterday morning in regard to co-operating in any movement to have an exhibit of women's work at St. Louis. The ladies found Mr. Fisher in a sympathetic mood and he will make enquiries into the matter.

THE ACTION IN THIBET.

Premier Balfour Will Introduce Resolution in the British Commons.

London, April 13.—The House of Commons assembled yesterday after the Easter recess.

In anticipation of the Opposition moving an adjournment in order to call attention to the bloodshed in Thibet, an urgent whip was sent out by the Government supporters.

Premier Balfour, however, headed off the Opposition by saying that there had been an action in Thibet which made it necessary to ask the House to sanction the employment of Indian troops beyond the frontier. He would introduce a resolution to that effect.

The chief interest centred in the licensing bill to be introduced by Mr. Balfour, which promises to be highly contentious, and the budget to be introduced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Chamberlain, April 19.

Fireman's Back Broken.

Buffalo, April 13.—Chas. Kaiser fell down a pole hole at fire headquarters early yesterday and broke his back and ankle. The alarm was for a blaze at the Cold Spring's car barns, where $200,000 damage was done.

Goyette to the Gallows.

Ottawa, April 13.—The Government will not interfere with the death sentence imposed upon Goyette, who murdered a farmer and his son, and for whom he worked. Goyette will therefore be hanged on the 28th inst.

Wont Repeal Coal Duty.

London, April 13.—The combined efforts of the coal owners, exporters, ship owners and miners have failed to induce Austen Chamberlain, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to repeal the coal duty.

Incendiary in Mobcaygeon.

Bobcaygeon, April 13.—The Rockland Hotel and stables were completely destroyed by fire early yesterday morning. The contents were partly saved. A valuable horse perished in the flames.

A Lasting Cure of Itching Piles.

A Chronic Case of Unusual Severity and Long Standing Cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Throughout Canada there are hundreds of cases similar to the one described below in which Dr. Chase's Ointment has proven a positive and lasting cure for the most severe form of itching piles.

Mr. Alex. McLaughlin, for 30 years a resident of Bowmanville, Ont., writes:—

"For twenty long years I suffered from itching piles, and only persons who have been troubled with that annoying disease can imagine what I endured during that time. About seven years ago I asked a druggist if he had anything to cure me. He said that Dr. Chase's Ointment was most favourably spoken of, and on his recommendation I took a box.

"After three applications I felt better, and by the time I had used one box I was on a fair way to recovery. I continued the treatment until I was thoroughly cured, and I have not suffered any since. I am firmly convinced that the Ointment made a perfect cure.

"I consider Dr. Chase's Ointment an invaluable treatment for piles. In my case I think the cure was remarkable when you consider that I am getting up in years, and had been so long a sufferer from this disease."

Dr. Chase's Ointment, 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box. 3

Purified by Suffering

BY MARY J. HOLMES.

"She must have been rummaging," she thought, and then as she remembered what Esther had said about her mistress appearing sad and unhappy, when her husband left home, she repaired to the parlor and summoning Esther to her presence, asked her again "When she first observed traces of indisposition in Mrs. Cameron"

"When she came home from that dinner at your house. She was just as pale as death, and her teeth fairly chattered as she took off her things."

"Dinner? What dinner?" Mrs. Cameron asked, and Esther replied "Why, the night Mr Wilford went away, or was to go. She changed her mind about meeting him at your house, and said she meant to surprise him. But she came home before Mr Cameron, looking like a ghost, and saying she was sick. It's my opinion something she ate at dinner hurt her."

"Very likely, yes. You can go now," Mrs. Cameron said, and Esther departed, never dreaming how much light she had inadvertently thrown upon the mystery.

She must have been in the library and heard all we said," Mrs. Cameron thought, as she nervously twisted the fringe of her breakfast shawl. "I remember we talked of Genevra, and that we both heard a strange sound from some quarter, but thought it came from the kitchen. That was Katy. She was there all the time, and let herself quietly out of the house. I wonder does Wilford know," and then there came over her an intense desire for Wilford to come home, a desire which was not lessened when she returned to Katy's room and heard her talking of Genevra and the grave at St. Mary's "where nobody was buried."

In a tremor of distress, lest she should betray something which Morris must not know Mrs. Cameron tried to hush her, talking as if it was the baby she meant, but Katy answered promptly: "It's Genevra Lambert, I mean. Wilford's other wife, the one across the sea. She was innocent, too—as innocent as I, whom you both deceived."

Here was phase of affairs for which Mrs. Cameron was not prepared, and excessively mortified that Morris should hear Katy's ravings, she tried again to quiet her, consoling herself with the reflection that as Morris was Katy's cousin, he would not repeat what he heard, and feeling gratified now that Dr. Craig was absent, as she could not be sure of him. If Katy's delirium continued no one must be admitted to the room except those who could be trusted, and as there had been already several rings, she said to Esther that as the fever was probably malignant and contagious, no one must be admitted to the house with the expectation of seeing the patient, while the servants were advised to stay in their own quarters, except as their services might be needed elsewhere. And so it was that by the morrow the news had spread of some infectious disease at No— on Madison Square, which was shunned as carefully as if small-pox itself had been raging there instead of the brain fever, which increased so fast that Morris suggested to Mrs. Cameron that she telegraph for Wilford.

"They might find him and they might not," Mother Cameron said. They could try at all events," and in a few moments the telegraphic wires were carrying the news of Katy's illness, both to the West, where Wilford had gone, and to the East, where Helen read with a blanched cheek that Katy perhaps was dying, and she must hasten to New York.

CHAPTER XXXVI

Wilford could not forget Katy's face, so full of reproach. It followed him continually, and was the magnet which turned his steps homeward before his business was quite done, and before the telegram had found him. Thus it was with no knowledge of existing circumstances that he reached New York just at the close of the day, and ordering a carriage, was driven towards home. All the shutters in the front part of the house were closed, and not a ray of light was to be seen in the parlors as he entered the hall, where the gas was burning dimly.

"Katy is at home," he said, as he went into the library, where a shawl was thrown across a chair, as if some one had lately been there.

It was his mother's shawl, and he was wondering if she was there, when down the stairs came a man's rapid step, and the next moment Dr. Grant came into the room, starting when he saw Wilford, who felt intuitively that something was wrong.

"Is Katy sick?" was his first question, which Morris answered in the affirmative, holding him back as he was starting for her room, and saying to him, "Let me send your mother to you first."

What passed between Wilford and his mother was never known exactly, but at the close of the interview, Mrs. Cameron was very pale, while Wilford's face looked dark and anxious as he said "You think he understands it, then?"

"Yes, in part, but the world will be none the wiser by his knowledge,

Deranged Nerves AND Weak Spells.

Mr. R. H. Sampson's, Sydney, N.S., Advice to all Sufferers from Nerve Trouble Is

"GET A BOX OF MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS."

He says: "I have been ailing for about a year from deranged nerves, and very often weak spells would come over me and be so bad that I sometimes thought I would be unable to survive them. I have been treated by doctors and have taken numerous preparations but none of them helped me in the least. I finally got a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. Before taking them I did not feel able to do any work, but now I can work as well as ever, thanks to one box of your pills. They have made a new man of me, and my advice to any person troubled as I was, is to get a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills."

I knew Dr. Grant before you did, and there are few men living whom I respect as much, and no one whom I would trust as soon."

Mrs. Cameron had paid a high tribute to Morris Grant, and Wilford bowed in assent, asking next how she managed Dr. Craig.

"That was easy, inasmuch as he believed it an insane freak of Katy's to have no other physician than her cousin. It was quite natural, he said, adding that she was as safe with Dr. Grant as any one. And I was glad, for I could not have a stranger know that affair. You will go up now," Mrs. Cameron continued, and a moment after, Wilford stood in the dimly lighted room where Katy was talking of Genevra and St. Mary's, and was only kept upon her pillow by the strong arm of Morris, who stood over her when Wilford entered, trying in vain to quiet her.

She knew him, and writhing away from Morris's arms, she said to him, "Genevra is not in that grave at St. Mary's, she is living, and you are not my husband. So you can leave the house at once. Morris will settle the estate, and no bill shall be sent in for your board and lodging."

In some moods Wilford would have smiled at being thus summarily dismissed from his own house; but he was too sore now, too sensitive to smile, and his voice was rather severe as he laid his hand on Katy's and said

"Don't be foolish, Katy. Don't you know me? I am Wilford, your husband."

"That was, you mean," Katy retorted, drawing her hand quickly away. "Go find your first love, where bullets fall like hail, and where there is pain, and blood, and carnage. Genevra is there."

"What God hath 'joined together let not man put asunder," was the text from which she preached several short sermons as the night wore on, but just as the morning dawned, she fell into the first quiet sleep she had had during the last twenty-four hours. And while she slept, Wilford ventured near enough to see the sunken cheeks and hollow eyes which wrung a groan from him as he turned to Morris, and asked what he supposed was the immediate cause of her sudden illness?

"A terrible shock, the nature of which I understand, but you have nothing to fear from me," Morris replied. "I accuse no man, but leave you to settle it with your conscience whether you did right to deceive her so long."

Morris spoke as one having authority, and Wilford simply bowed his head, feeling no resentment towards one who had ventured to reprove him. Afterwards he might remember it differently, but now he was too anxious to keep Morris there to quarrel with him, and so he made no reply, but sat watching Katy while she slept, wondering if she would die, and feeling how terrible life would be without her. Suddenly Genevra's warning words rang in his ear.

"God will not forgive you for the wrong you have done me."

Was Genevra right? Had God remembered all this time, and overtaken him at last? It might be, and with a groan Wilford hid his face in his hands, believing that he repented of his sin, and not knowing that his fancied repentance arose merely from the fact that he had been detected.

Worn out with watching and waiting, Mrs. Cameron who would suffer neither Juno nor Bell to come near the house, waited anxiously for the arrival of the New Haven train which she hoped would bring Helen to her aid. Under ordinary circumstances, she would rather not have met her, for her presence would keep the letter so constantly in her mind, but now, anybody who could be trusted was welcome, and when at last there came a cautious ring, she went herself to the hall, starting back with undisguised vexation when she saw the timid-looking woman following close behind Helen, and whom the latter presented as "My mother, Mrs. Lennox."

Convinced that Morris's sudden journey to New York had something to do with Katy's illness, and almost distracted with fears for her daughter's life, Mrs. Lennox could not remain at home and wait for the tardy mail or the careless telegraph. She must go to her child, and casting off her dread of Wilford's displeasure, she had come with Helen, and was bowing meekly to Mrs. Cameron, who neither offered her hand nor gave any token of greeting except a distant bow and a simple "Good morning, madam."

But Mrs. Lennox was too anxious to notice the woman's haughty manner as she led them to the library and then went for her son. Wilford was not glad to see his mother-in-law, but he tried to be polite, answering her questions civilly, and when she asked if it were true that he had sent for Morris, assuring her that it was not. "Dr. Grant happened here very providentially, and I hope to keep him until the crisis is past, although he has just told me he must go back to-morrow."

"Was you a widower when you married my daughter?" she said to him, when at last Helen left the room, and she was alone with him.

"Yes, madam," he replied, "some would call me so, though I was divorced from my wife. As this was a matter which did not in any way concern your daughter, I deemed it best not to tell her. Latterly she has found it out, and it is having a very extraordinary effect upon her."

And this was all Mrs. Lennox knew until alone with Helen, who told her the story as she had heard it from Morris. His sudden journey to New York was thus accounted for, and Helen explained it to her mother, advising her to say nothing of it as it might be better for Wilford not to know that Katy had telegraphed for Morris. It seemed very necessary that Dr. Grant should return to Silverton, and the day following Helen's arrival in New York, he made arrangements to do so.

"You have other physicians here," he said to Wilford, who objected to his leaving. "Dr. Craig will do as well as I."

Wilford admitted that he might, but it was with a sinking heart that he saw Morris depart, and then went to Katy, who began to grow very restless and uneasy, bidding him go away and send Dr. Morris back. It was in vain that they administered the medicine just as Morris directed. Katy grew constantly worse, until Mrs. Lennox asked that another doctor be called. But to this Wilford would not listen. Fear of exposure and censure was stronger than his fears for Katy's life, which seemed balancing upon a thread as that long night and the next day went by. Three times Wilford telegraphed for Morris, and it was with unfeigned joy he welcomed him back at last, and heard that he had so arranged his business as to stay with Katy while the danger lasted.

With a monotonous sameness the days now came and went, people still shunning the house as if the plague was there. Once, Bell Cameron came round to call on Helen, holding her breath as she passed through the hall, and never asking to go near Katy's room. Two or three times, too, Mrs. Banker's carriage stood at the door, and Mrs. Banker herself came in, appearing so cool and distant that Helen could scarcely keep back her tears as she guessed the cause. Mark too, was in the city, having returned with the Seventh Regiment; but from Esther, Helen learned that he was about joining the army as captain of a company, composed of the finest men in the city. The next she heard was from Mrs. Banker, who incidentally remarked, "I shall be very lonely now that Mark has gone. He left me to-day for Washington."

There were tears on the mother's face, and her lip quivered as she tried to keep them back, by looking from the window into the streets, instead of at her companion, who, overcome with the rush of feeling which swept over her, hid her face on the sofa and sobbed aloud.

"Why, Helen' Miss Lennox, I am surprised. I had supposed—I was not aware—I did not think you would care." Mrs. Banker exclaimed, coming closer to Helen, who stammered out, "I beg you will excuse me, I cannot help it. I care for all our soldiers. It seems so terrible."

At the words "I care for all our soldiers," a shadow of disappointment flitted over Mrs. Banker's face. She knew her son had offered himself and been refused, as she supposed; and she believed too, that Helen had given publicity to the affair, feeling justly indignant at this breach of confidence and lack of delicacy in one whom she had liked so much, and whom she still liked, in spite of the wounded pride which had prompted her to appear so cold and distant.

"Perhaps it is all a mistake," she thought, as she continued standing by Helen, "or it may be that she has repented," and for a moment she felt tempted to ask why her boy had been rejected.

But Mark would not be pleased with her interference she knew, and so the golden moment fled, and when she left the house, the misunderstanding between herself and Helen was just as wide as ever. Wearily after that the days passed with Helen until all thoughts of herself were forgotten in the terrible fear that death was really brooding over the pillow where Katy lay insensible to all that was passing around her. The lips were silent now and Wilford had nothing to fear from the tongue hitherto so busy. What Wilford suffered none could guess. He did not ask that she might live, for if all were well hereafter he knew it was better for her to die in her young womanhood than to live till the heart, now so sad and bleeding, had grown callused with sorrow. And yet it was terrible to think of Katy dead, terrible to think of that face and form laid away beneath the turf of Greenwood, where those who loved her best could seldom go to weep.

And as they sat there thus, the night shadows stole into the room, and the hours crept on till from a city tower a clock struck ten, and Morris, motioning Helen to his side, bade her go with her mother to rest. "We do not need you here," he said. "Your presence can do no good. Should a change occur, you shall be told at once."

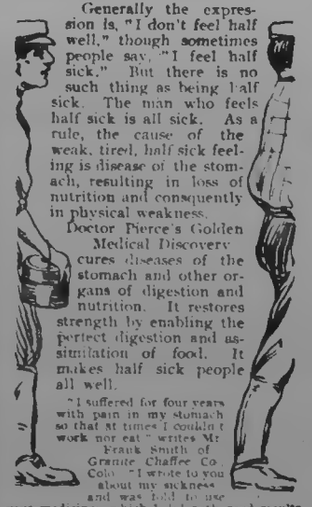
HALF SICK



Generally the expression is, "I don't feel half well," though sometimes people say, "I feel half sick." But there is no such thing as being half sick. The man who feels half sick is all sick. As a rule, the cause of the weak, tired, half sick feeling is disease of the stomach, resulting in loss of nutrition and consquently in physical weakness.

Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It restores strength by enabling the perfect digestion and assimilation of food. It makes half sick people all well.

"I suffered for four years with pain in my stomach so that at times I couldn't work nor eat," writes Mr. Frank Smith of Granite Chaffee Co. Colo. "I wrote to you about my sickness and was told to use your medicines, which I did with good results. I only used four bottles of your Golden Medical Discovery and must say that I am entirely cured and feel like a new man, and I can highly recommend your medicine to any sufferer."

"Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol and is entirely free from opium, cocaine and all other narcotics. It is strictly a temperance medicine.

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." There is nothing "just as good" for diseases of the stomach.

LATEST NEWS OF SPORT.

Annual Meeting of Bowling Club—Midland Football League Meeting Saturday—Sporting Intelligence.

VERY ENTHUSIASTIC BOWLERS MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of Bowling Club Well Attended.

Held in Canada Life Office Last Night Skips for Season were Elected.

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Lawn Bowling Club was held in the Canada Life Office last night and was attended by Messrs. R. Kerr, O. Laplante, A. H. Stratton, K. G. Lech, J. Maude, A. Weddell, E. Reynolds, W. O'Brien, J. E. Oles, F. H. Dixon, R. M. Waddell, G. H. Giroux, W. E. Talbot, W. Atchesoin and W. McIntyre.

Mr. R. Kerr occupied the chair and Mr. Atcheson was elected secretary, pro tem.

Mr. Kerr verbally reported that the club was in a good financial position with the brightest of prospects ahead for the coming season. The report was on motion adopted.

The next business was the election of officers, which resulted as follows:—

Patrons and Patronesses—Hon. and Mrs. J. R. Stratton, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Kendry, and Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Hall.

Hon. President—Dr. Boucher, by acclamation.

President—D. H. Moore.

Vice-President—T. F. Matthews.

Secretary-Treasurer — W. Atcheson.

Executive Committee—Messrs. W. Atcheson, G. H. Giroux, F. H. Dixon, J. E. Oles and K. G. Lech.

Schedule Committee — Messrs. R. Kerr, E. Reynolds and R. M. Waddell.

On motion the collection of membership fees was left in the hands of of the Secretary. All such fees must be paid by May 10th.

The proposition of an enthusiastic bowler to look after the green for $30 per season, was closed by the clubs.

The question of grounds was the source of considerable active discussion. Mr. Kerr said that Mr. James Stevenson did not yet know whether the Y.M.C.A. intended to select as a site for their new building his lawn, which the bowlers used last year. From what he had gathered Mr. Kerr did not think the Association were at all likely to settle upon that site. Mr. Stevenson would be able to give a definite answer next week.

It was moved by Mr. Waddell and seconded by Mr. Giroux, that all skips who take rinks to tournaments be elected by the Executive, as acting for the Club.

The next business was the election of skips, which resulted as follows: Messrs. R. Kerr, G. H. Giroux, K. G. Lech, E. Reynolds, F. J. Bell, A. H. Stratton, R. M. Waddell, R. J. Frost, W. McIntyre, J. E. Oles, J. H. Dixon, D. H. Moore, H. Armstrong, W. Sailsbury, Dr. Greer, E. W. Cox and S. T. Medd.

All Skips are asked to select their Vice-Skips by the next meeting, which will be held on Tuesday evening, April 19th.

MIDLAND LEAGUE LARGEST IN ONTARIO.

The Local Football League this Year will be Considerably Enlarged.

The encouragement which the officers of the Midland Football League are meeting with, presages a successful season for the League. A number of towns, which last year were unpresented in the League, will this year enter teams, and instead of the team extending from Omemee to Havelock, as it did in 1903, teams will enter from towns, including Bowmanville on the west and Belleville on the east. The fact that other leagues are anxious to amalgamate with the Midland, is proof that its success is assured, and this year it will be the largest football organization in Ontario.

The meeting to arrange the schedule and elect the executive, will be held on Saturday next at 1.30 p.m., in the Y.M.C.A. Board Room. All clubs entering the League should have a representative present to look after their interests.

The season will be starting in a very few weeks, and it is hoped that the games will be through in time to allow those who play football to start the lacrosse season.

JUNIOR LACROSSE CLUB ORGANIZED.

T. A. S. Decide to Place Two Teams in the Field.

A meeting was held last night in the T.A.S. rooms for the purpose of discussing the prospects for organizing a junior lacrosse club. It was the opinion of the majority of those present that there was sufficient material in the Society to support both senior and junior teams, consequently a club was organized and a good set of officers elected.

Mr. T. J. Begley, who occupied the chair, called on Mr. Jas. Dorris, Secretary-Treasurer to present the financial statement, which showed that the club had a credit balance. This report was adopted.

The election of officers resulted as follows:—

Hon. President—Rev. Dr. O'Brien.
President—T. J. Begley
1st Vice-President—E. Doherty.
2nd Vice-President—F. Whaley
Secretary-Treasurer—Jas. Dorris.
Manager—J. Dennard.
Executive—Manager, Captain, J. Gorham, O. O'Neill, W. McCormack.

With these officers the club starts out with excellent prospects for a successful season.

BASKET-BALL.

The first of a series of games to decide the intermediate championship of the league took place Monday between the Arrows and Beavers and resulted in a win for the former by 23 to 9. The teams were: Arrows—Forwards, Miller, Ross; centre, Staunton; defence, Loomis, Darling. Beavers, Forwards, F. Cressman, H. Cressman; centre, Waller; defence, Thornton, Winch. Umpires, Fitzpatrick and Laing. The second game will be played Thursday.

BASEBALL.

Mr. E. Bost, manager of the "Happy Thought" baseball team is said to be arranging to take his team south for their spring training.

• • • •

Kingston, April 12.—Chaucer Elliott left yesterday for Montreal and will proceed thence to Concord, N. H., to join the local club. His going away may make it a serious thing, as possibly a local senior team may not be arranged this year. It is proposed to have a city league of junior teams.

FOOTBALL.

Prospects for the Midland Football League for this season are very bright. Word has been received from Omemee that in all probability a team will be entered from that town this year, and the Quinte District has signified its intention of amalgamating with the League.

The meeting to be held Saturday for the arrangement of the schedule will be largely attended, and it is expected that this season will see the Midland League the largest Football organization in Ontario. The meeting will be held at 1.30 p. m., in the Y. M. C. A. hall.

• • • •

The Bowmanville Football Club will give a concert on April 22nd.

LACROSSE.

The executive of the Athletic Lacrosse Club will meet to-night at 7.30 at the Y. M. C. A.

Britain and Nicaragua.

Washington, April 13.—Friction, it is learned, is again developing between Great Britain and Nicaragua over the Mosquito Coast, which, since the early sixties, has been a matter of contention between the London Government and the Central American Republic. London authorities once more will protest against any violation of the Zeledon-Wyke treaty of 1860, by the terms of which Her Britannic Majesty agreed to recognize the sovereignty of Nicaragua over the country hitherto claimed by the Mosquito Indians. There appears at present no possibility of the United States concerning itself in the controversy.

Ice Wrecked a Dock.

Belleville, April 13.—The ice moved partly out of the Bay of Quinte Monday, in its passage wrecking badly the dock of the Deaf and Dumb Institute. The damage will be considerable.

MAKAROFF AND 600 SAILORS.

They Went Down in Admiral's Battleship Petropavlovsk.

STRUCK A MINE; TURNED TURTLE

An Irreparable Disaster—Grand Duke Cyril and a Few Wounded Men Escaped — The Disaster Considered a Terrible Blow at St. Peterburg—Admiral Togo Ruler of the Waves.

St. Petersburg, April 14.—The following official despatch has been received here from Rear Admiral Grigotovitch, the commandant at Port Arthur, addressed to the Emperor:

Port Arthur, April 13.—The Petropavlovsk struck a mine, which blew her up, and she turned turtle. Our squadron was under Golden Hill. The Japanese squadron was approaching. Vice-Admiral Makaroff evidently was lost. Grand Duke Cyril was saved. He is slightly injured. Capt. Jakovleff was saved, though severely injured, so were five officers and thirty-two men, all more or less injured. The enemy's fleet has disappeared. Rear Admiral Prince Ouktomsky has assumed command of the fleet."

The following despatch to the Czar has been received from Viceroy Alexieff:

Muken, April 13.—A telegram has just been received from Lieut.-Gov.

VICE-ADMIRAL MAKAROFF.

Stoessel, commander of the military forces at Port Arthur: "I regret to report to Your Majesty that the Pacific fleet has suffered irreparable loss by the death of the brave and capable commander, who was lost, together with the Petropavlovsk."

Another despatch from Viceroy Alexieff to the Czar says: "According to reports from the commandant at Port Arthur, the battleships and cruisers went out to meet the enemy, but in consequence of the enemy receiving reinforcements, making his total strength 30 vessels, our squadron returned to the roadstead, whereupon the Petropavlovsk touched a mine, resulting in her destruction. Grand Duke Cyril, who was on board, was saved. He was slightly injured. The whole squadron then re-entered port. The Japanese are now off Capo Liao Shan, the southern extremity of the peninsula on which Port Arthur is situated. No reports had been received from the acting commander of the fleet up to the time this despatch was sent."

A Terrible Blow.

The awful disaster to the battleship Petropavlovsk at Port Arthur, with a loss of almost her entire crew of over 600 men, and the death of Vice-Admiral Makaroff has been a terrible blow. The day has been one of intense excitement in St. Petersburg. The first inkling of the catastrophe leaked out on the receipt of a telegram by Grand Duke Vladimir from his son, Grand Duke Boris, announcing the loss of the Petropavlovsk and the wounding of Grand Duke Cyril, who was first officer.

The Czar Overwhelmed.

A religious service was immediately held at Grand Duke Vladimir's palace, in which thanks were returned to the Almighty for sparing the life of Grand Duke Cyril, but the Emperor was so overwhelmed with grief at the death of Vice-Admiral Makaroff that neither he nor the Empress attended the service. Instead, the Emperor sent a member of his personal staff to break the sad news to Vice-Admiral Makaroff's widow, who is living in St. Petersburg.

Six Unknown Mines.

The Associated Press learns that the location of six of the mines planted by the Yenesei were unknown, the charts having been lost when the vessel went down. Probably it was one of these mines that the Petropavlovsk struck.

Vice-Admiral Makaroff's death is a greater loss than would be that of several battleships. He was the pride of the navy and enjoyed the implicit confidence of his sovereign and of the officers and men of the service.

By Imperial command a requiem service will be celebrated at the Admiralty Church at noon to-day for the Emperor's favorite admiral.

Last night the grief-stricked widow, according to the Russian custom, had a requiem service celebrated at her residence.

Shot Up in Conning Tower.

Makaroff is believed to have been in the conning tower when the Petropavlovsk was blown up.

Grand Duke Cyril probably owes his life to the fact that he is a fine athlete and a splendid swimmer.

Alexieff to Command.

According to later reports, Grand Duke Cyril was more seriously injured than at first believed. He has been removed to a hospital at Port Arthur for treatment.

It is stated that Viceroy Alexieff will assume command of the naval forces in the Far East, presumably pending the arrival of Rear-Admiral Rojestvensky.

Togo Ruler of the Waves.

It was rumored here last night that Rear-Admiral Prince Ouktomsky (acting commander of the Russian fleet at Port Arthur), engaged eighteen Japanese warships off Port Arthur yesterday afternoon. Even if Rear-Admiral Prince Ouktomsky, who is in charge of the fleet at Port Arthur, is able to go to sea with four battleships, which it is not certain he can do, Vice-Admiral Togo could bring against him a greatly superior force. It is pointed out that all the Japanese admiral need now to do is to be outside Port Arthur, and transports can pass with absolute impunity.

British Tributes to Makaroff.

London, April 14.—The late Vice-Admiral Makaroff was well known in England, especially in the Newcastle-on-Tyne district, where he resided while the Armstrongs were building his ice-breaker, the Yermak. The editorials in this morning's newspapers deplore his loss and pay tributes of admiration to the way he met a hero's death in carrying out his own officially expressed conviction that "he who wishes to ensure victory should determine either to conquer or to die."

Russ Report Unsatisfactory.

A rumor is to the effect that Rear-Admiral Molas is among those killed aboard the Petropavlovsk. No great attention is paid to these rumors, but the universal opinion here is that the official explanations of the disaster are unsatisfactory.

Story of a Fight.

The Times correspondent says: "At 9.30 yesterday morning amid rain squalls we sighted a squadron, which proved to be the Japanese fleet of six battleships, followed by a first-class cruiser squadron of six ships, in line ahead, the third and fourth being the Kasuga and the Nisshin, which were making their first appearance with the fleet. With the Mikasa leading the vessels were shaping their course for Port Arthur. Forty miles distant from Port Arthur the battleships drew out at full speed. The Kasuga and the Nisshin joined the battleships, the other cruisers remaining behind, the interval between being maintained by the division of torpedo boat destroyers.

Had Covered Attack.

"As we neared Port Arthur we found two first-class and four second-class cruisers already there. This squadron had covered the torpedo attack in the small hours of the morning.

"The battleships now hoisted their fighting flags and steamed in the same formation, the Mikasa leading and the new ships bringing up the rear, to within six miles of Port Arthur's frowning promontory.

"At 10 20 o'clock the shore batteries opened, but the fire was only desultory and it seemed as though Vice-Admiral Togo was making a demonstration rather than a bombardment.

"Three times Togo's fighting squadron circled in front of the enemy's position, drawing a desultory reply, and at noon the admiral withdrew his battleships to the southward."

Cruiser Bayan Damaged.

The Daily Telegraph's correspondent at Wei-Hai-Wei, telegraphing under date of April 13, says:

"The British cruiser Espiegle reports that at 5.45 o'clock this morning she sighted five Japanese warships engaging the Russian cruiser Bayan, making for Port Arthur from the direction of the Yalu. The Russian cruiser Askold and another cruiser issued from Port Arthur to assist the Bayan.

"At 6.45 o'clock the Russians got under the shelter of the forts, but the Bayan was evidently damaged, as quantities of steam were seen escaping.

"At 8 o'clock the Japanese ships opened a heavy gun fire on the forts, which did not reply, and after 15 minutes' bombardment the Japanese retired to the eastward."

A Japanese Tribute.

The Japanese legation last night had no official information in regard to fighting yesterday off Port Arthur. Baron Hayashi, the Japanese minister, said Vice-Admiral Makaroff's death was an exceedingly dramatic occurrence, and he paid a tribute to the late admiral as a great strategist and tactician, and said he would be a great loss to the Russian navy.

PORT ARTHUR'S FALL IMMINENT.

Admiral Togo is Preparing to Land Troops for a Land Seige.

Four Russian Ships were Damaged in the Recent Naval Action — Alexieff Again in Command at Port Arthur.

Special G. N. W. Despatch to the Examiner.

JAPANESE REPORT.

Tokio, April 14th. — A brief despatch from Rear Admiral Urui, of Wednesday's fighting off Port Arthur reached the Navy Department this afternoon. It says Vice-Admiral Togo's fleet attacked Port Arthur in the morning and succeeded in sinking a battleship of the Petropavlovsk class, and one torpedo destroyer. One Jap was wounded. A detailed report of the fight is expected hourly.

FOUR RUSSIAN SHIPS HIT.

New York, April 14th. — A St. Petersburg despatch to the Herald says that the correspondent was informed by reliable authority late last night that the Petropavlovsk was sunk by three torpedoes fired by Japanese torpedo boats. The torpedo attack occurred when the Russian fleet went out to meet the enemy. In the engagement four other Russian ships were hit, and then fled back to the inner harbour badly crippled.

PORT ARTHUR'S FALL IMMINENT

London, April 14.—A despatch from Rome to the Central News says that a telegram has been received there from New Chwang which states the fall of Port Arthur is believed to be imminent. The despatch further says that Admiral Togo, Commander of the Japanese fleet is preparing to land troops for a seige of the town.

ALEXIEFF TO ASSUME COMMAND

Paris, April 14.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Echo de Paris, telegraphs the following under yesterday's date:—"At 3 o'clock to-day the Emperor telegraphed to Viceroy Alexieff ordering him to go to Port Arthur immediately and assume command of the squadron pending the appointment of Vice-Admiral Makaroff's successor. The Viceroy leaves to-night. Rumours that Rear-Admiral Prince Onktomshy was in action against 18 Japanese vessels this afternoon are still unconfirmed. Grand Duke Cyril telegraphs he is suffering from burns on the neck and contusions on the knees. It is certain that only two minutes elapsed between the explosion and the sinking of the battleship.

MORE DISASTERS

St. Petersburg, April 14.—Rear Admiral Prince Onktomsky wires from Port Arthur to-day that the Bezestrashni, one of the Russian torpedo boat destroyers sent out during the night to reconnoitre, became separated from the rest of the fleet, owing to the bad weather prevailing, was surrounded by Japanese torpedo boat destroyers, and was sunk in the fight. Five men were saved.

POBIEDA STRUCK

Admiral Onktomshy adds:—"I have taken command, provisionally, of the fleet since the disaster to the Petropavlovsk. During some manoeuvering of the battleship squadron the Pobieda struck against a mine amidships on the sturboard side. She was able to regain Port by herself. No one on board of her was killed or wounded.

THAT FIGHT ON THE YALU.

Japs Had No Casualties—Tokio Sets St. Petersburg Reports Straight.

St. Petersburg, April 14.—An official despatch sent by an aide de camp of Gen. Kuropatkin to the Emperor, dated April 12, says: "Gen. Kachtalinsky (commanding the Russian forces at the Yalu River) reports that April 11, during an engagement of outposts, our losses were one officer, one sub-officer and two soldiers killed and two soldiers wounded."

Twenty Dead Russians.

Tokio, April 14.—An official telegram from Wiju says that a company of Russian troops attempted to cross the first stream of the Yalu River west of Wilu Tuesday morning, and that a company of Japanese attacked and drove the Russians back. The bodies of twenty dead Russians, the telegram adds, were found after the fight. Their uniforms showed that they belonged to the 12th Regiment of Sharpshooters. Finally, the despatch says, small parties of Russians, without uniforms, have attempted to cross the Yalu River at different points between Wiju and Yongampo, and that they were all driven back.

THE GOVERNMENT COMMENDED

The Toronto News, which is not losing much sleep in showing friendliness to the Ontario Government, in the course of an article on "Politics in Ontario," has the following appreciative paragraph:—

The proposals of the Government to guarantee $5,000,000 of the bonds of the James Bay Railway, and to aid other pioneer [illegible] in unsettled areas of N[illegible]o, can hardly be successfully attacked. If it be true that as a result of the construction of the James Bay road the Canadian Pacific will obtain running rights over the new railway, and a direct connection with Toronto and with western and central Ontario, and that the Canadian Northern, which is to construct the Sudbury extension, will maintain a haulage arrangement with the Canadian Pacific over the Lake Superior section of that railway, great national advantages must result. Through such an arrangement the Canadian Northern would become a through system, and the Canadian Pacific connections with Ontario would be greatly improved. The whole conception is so practical and statesmanlike, and so thoroughly national in its scope and objects, that the Province can well afford the guarantee which the Government asks the Legislature to sanction. So the projected extension of the Temiskaming road to Lake Abitibi to connect with the Grand Trunk Pacific may be commended, and whether the Government operates the Temiskaming line or leases it to the Grand Trunk is probably not of material consequences. It is, at least, very necessary that the mercantile and manufacturing communities of Ontario should have direct connection with the West by means of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and this probably can best be had by the concession of running rights over the Temiskaming road, or by direct Grand Trunk operation of the Provincial railway. If all these projects should work out satisfactorily, this Province, which is virtually sidetracked under existing railway connections with the West, would have direct touch with three great through systems, the Canadian Northern, the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the Canadian Pacific, and in view of the rapid and continuous growth of western settlement, the resultant advantages to the mercantile and manufacturing communities of Ontario can hardly be over estimated.

WOOLLEN MEN ASK FOR TARIFF CHANGED.

Some of the Arguments Used in Support of the Request

Canadian Woollen Companies Said to be Over Capitalized Imports in Woollens.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Ottawa, April 12th.

The woollen men desire higher duties. The preferential to British woollens leaves the Canadian manufacturer with a protection of 23 1-3 per cent., plus the natural protection afforded by the ocean, insurance and rail rates which the British exporter has to pay whenever he ships a bale of goods to this market. The case for increases may be stated thus:—

A woollen plant which in England costs $100,000 costs $135,000 or more in Canada, in consequence of the duties levied on imported machinery. The cost of coal is higher in Canada than in England because of the tax we impose on soft coal on the interest on the Nova Scotia collieries. Labour in Canada is 10 per cent. dearer than in Yorkshire. It costs more to lay down Australian wool in Canada than in the London market. In Canada there is a scarcity of skilled operatives. In making tweeds and other woollen goods English manufacturers can shoddy freely, whereas the Canadian manufacturer uses all-wool and the cloth turns out a better, if dearer, product. Lastly, owing to his limited market, the Canadian manufacturer cannot afford to specialize, that is, to confine himself to some particular line of goods, as is done in England, but is obliged to turn out several lines from the same factory, which increases cost of production.

These, in brief, are the arguments in favour of an increase in the woollen tariff. By way of clinching them, the Canadian manufacturer shows that, since the preference was given to British woollens, the imports from Britain, the United States and other countries have risen from $7,125,000 in 1897 to $13,500,000 in 1903, the increase being chiefly in purchases from Britain. The complaints come chiefly from the manufacturers of tweeds and carpets, but, speaking generally, the entire trade is demanding higher duties.

Per contra, it is said that some of the Canadian woollen companies are over-capitalized and managed at too great a cost; that on the strength of the N.P. capitalists embarked in the industry without knowing much about it; and that certain mills have had to shut down either because they had been badly conducted, or because their machinery was out of date, or because they were too small to permit of cheap production. The imports of manufactured woollens in 1903 were really no greater, having regard to increase of population, than they were in 1887 or 1890, when they exceeded $11,000,000. The preference to British woollens is an undoubted benefit to the Canadian consumer, who, after all, is entitled to some consideration.

HAVELOCK.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The diphtheria question here has been of a serious nature for the past two weeks, and several new cases have broken out around the town, necessitating a number of persons being quarantined.

A very sad event was occasioned by the death of the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Cummings, after a severe illness. The child passed away last Friday. The parents have the deep sympathy of the community.

Mr. Bert Miller, the first storekeeper the C.P.R. had at this point, dropped into town on his way home from a visit to Montreal, Quebec, Three Rivers, to renew old acquaintances, especially the pretty girls, who were all glad to see him.

At the regular meeting of the town council on Monday night the usual amount of small business was attended to. A very amusing incident at the meeting was caused by the Constable, Mr. Graham, who during the week had to purchase a pair of long rubber boots, "so as to make drains to let the water run away." Mr. Graham proposed through a very elegant and touching speech that the council should pay for the boots, but a few of the members thought differently. After a discussion it was agreed that Mr. Graham's boots be paid for, and that they become the property of the town.

The question of lighting the town hall with electricity was discussed but nothing definite was agreed upon, on account of the electric light company, who are getting a man to do the work and waiting on material.

The matter of lighting the front street was also discussed, but no definite conclusion was reached.

Dr. Holderoft addressed the council for a few minutes in regard to the wirings. He claimed that if the company could put in the wires as cheaply and as nicely as an outsider, they should get the patronage.

Now that the electric light plant is running it is plain to be seen that a mistake was made by the council in not putting a light or two more on the street facing the railway tracks.

On account of the reduction in staff the C. P. R. have laid off a number of their general men. This we think will only be for a very short time as business is bound to increase.

SOME HAPPENINGS IN THE NORTHERN TOWN.

Personal Mention and Other Items of Interest at Lakefield.

Mr. J. M. Kilbourn left Saturday for Owen Sound.

We regret to report that the accident to Mr. Frank Young's hand, which occurred a couple of weeks ago, developed into blood poisoning which necessitated the amputation of one of his fingers. Since the operation Mr. Young has been doing nicely.

The pleasing show of millinery in Messrs. R. Graham & Son's millinery department is creating quite an enthusiasm among the ladies for spring bonnets.

Mr. E. A. Tanner spent a couple of days in Toronto this week, purchasing goods.

Mr. F. A. Kilbourn was in Peterborough Monday.

Mr. Frank Pullen, of The Dick Kerr Company, has returned to the village after an absence of a couple of months.

Miss Lillicrap is visiting friends in Toronto this week.

Mr. Hambly left Tuesday for a short visit at his home in Whitby.

Misses McGorman and Stephenson, of the local Public School staff, have returned after their Easter holiday.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Burgess entertained a number of their friends Easter week, at a very pleasant progressive euchre party.

The ice is out of the lake between Lakefield and Young's Point and navigation will soon be open.

Wm. Bates, formerly of Lakefield paid a visit to his son, Walter, of the village, on Monday. Mr. Bates has just returned from England, where he spent a couple of months.

Mrs. Miller of Peterborough, has been engaged to train the Presbyterian choir. The choir meets every Friday evening in the School Room of the Church, for a two hours' training. Mrs. Miller has also several private pupils.

NORTH MONAGHAN COUNCIL MEETING.

Regular Meeting was Held on Monday April 11th

The Township Council met on Monday, April 11th at 1.30 p.m., in the Town Hall. There were present,—Messrs. Jos. Madill, the Reeve, Smith, Morrow, and Brown, Councillors.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

The clerk reported having received the Auditors' report for the year 1903 and after having examined the same, in accordance with instructions, had it published and now presented to Council for final audit.

This report was then read and on motion of Messrs. Brown and Smith, the Auditors' report was received and adopted.

A communication was also received from Jas. R. Bell and Joseph Forster, the Township Auditors, stating that as the work of auditing the township accounts had increased so much that they felt entitled to an increase of salary, and asked the Council to increase the same to the sum of $8 each.—Received.

The Reeve presented an insurance policy on the Town Hall and shed and asked that the premium on the same be paid.

On motion of Messrs. Smith and Morrow an order was issued for the sum of $5.95, premium on insurance policy in favour of Davis, Thompson & Co.

Moved by Messrs. Morrow and Smith, that orders for the sum of $5 each be drawn in favour of Messrs J. Bell and J. Forster, salary as auditors for 1903.—Carried.

Moved by Messrs. Morrow and Smith, that a committee consisting of the Reeve and Councillors Brown and Smith are hereby appointed a committee to consider the appointment of one road commissioner for the year 1904, and to report to this council at a special meeting to be held at Peterborough on April 23 at 2.30 p.m.—Carried.

Moved by Messrs. Smith and Brown that Mr. Lillico be instructed to repair washouts in his road division forthwith.—Carried.

Moved by Messrs. Morrow and Brown that a committee consisting of Messrs. Smith, Fowler and Fowler be appointed to examine the bridge on the 13th concession, and to have the same repaired if found necessary.

Council then adjourned until special meeting on April 23.

The Harm Noise Does.

Noise is an undoubted factor in impairing the [illegible] one of the nerve centres. Whether we are conscious of it or not, it hurts the brain and has a deafening, dazing, bewildering effect on the mental processes. It tires the brain and tends to produce cerebral hyperaemia. To live in a noisy atmosphere is to shorten one's days. Irritability, neurasthenia, insomnia, are common effects. The tympanum or drum membrane of the ear is injured, the circulation of the cerebro spinal fluid is disturbed and the nerve cells themselves suffer as though subjected to mechanical violence.

BRITAIN'S ULTIMATUM.

But If Any Power Is to Be Predominant in Thibet That Power Must Be Great Britain.

London, April 14.—The House of Commons yesterday by 270 to 61 votes, adopted a resolution sanctioning the employment of Indian troops for the protection of the "political mission to Thibet."

Mr. Brodrick proceeded to defend the British action, saying that the British Government could not acquiesce to any change in the political status quo in Thibet, nor countenance an attempt on the part of any of the foreign Governments to establish a predominant interest.

Great Britain had no desire to occupy the country or to establish a permanent mission in Thibet, but the Government was absolutely resolved that if any power is to be predominant in Thibet it must be Great Britain.

The Liberal leader, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, warmly criticized and condemned the mission and the "slaughter" of the Thibetans, declaring that Mr. Brodrick's explanations were wholly insufficient.

The debate ended with a short speech by Premier Balfour, declaring the mission had no ulterior objects. The last thing the Government desired, he said, was to add to its Indian frontier responsibilities.

A WIFE MURDERER.

Magloire Hogue's Callous Confession to the Inmates of His House.

Montreal, April 14.—"It is too bad, I have killed my wife." With these words Magloire Hogue announced to inmates of his house yesterday morning the commission of a crime for which he will be tried for his life. Hogue and his wife lived in a small wooden house in the rear of 207 Montcalm street. The house they occupied, as well as No. 207, in front of it, belonged to Mrs. Hogue. The little house in the yard comprises but three apartments, two bedrooms and a kitchen. Hogue and his wife occupied one bedroom and Joseph Frechette and his wife the other and the kitchen was common. The woman was found dead with gashes on the head, and when the husband was arrested he confessed having killed her.

IMPUTES MOTIVES TO BRITAIN.

Other Than the Correct Ones Regarding Mosquito Coast.

Washington April 14.—Mr. Morgan in the House yesterday read from an article an account of the British Government sending a gunboat to Nicaragua for the protection of the Mosquito Indians, under a treaty entered into between Great Britain and the tribe. He suggested that the "Mosquito question" has been stirred up to disguise on the part of Great Britain to bring about the building of a canal by the Costa Rica-Nicaraguan route. He said the Government of Great Britain could furnish the money and provide for the building of the canal just as the Suez Canal was built. "That is all there is to the Mosquito question," he said.

Great Northern Wreck.

Spokane, Wash., April 14.—Great Northern passenger train No 4 was wrecked near Leavenworth, Wash., by an embankment giving way. The engine, mail and baggage cars went over the embankment. J. A. Wilson, the fireman, was killed and John Crook, the engine driver, was so badly injured that he soon died. Three tramps were also killed, and the little son of the engineer, who was with him in the cab, is missing.

Fire at Tilsonburg.

Tilsonburg, April 14.—At 3 o'clock yesterday morning fire broke out in the rear of the store, owned by Geo. Burke and occupied by C. W. Conn, tinsmith, totally destroying building and contents, also a dwelling owned by Mr. Burke, and occupied by W. James, and the Dalrymple property used by Mr. Dalrymple as dwelling and Mr. Coombe as furniture store. The losses are estimated at about $12,000.

To Increase Rates.

St. John, N.B., April 14.—The fire underwriters yesterday decided to increase the insurance in St. John on renewals. A few days ago they raised the rates 25 per cent. on all business, and yesterday's decision is to lift the rates on renewals. The cause of the increase is the poor water service in the city.

BLOCKED THE "SOO"

Mr. Smith Exposes the Tactics of the U. S. Steel Trust.

HE APPEALED TO CANADIANS

Significant Words By Member For Sault Ste Marie—Debate on Guarantee Continued By Messrs. Powell, Smith and Hanna—No Intention to Grant Further Subsidies This Session.

Toronto, April 14.—The Legislature devoted most of yesterday's sittings to the further discussion of the bill to aid the Algoma Central Railway. Mr. Powell criticized both the proposal and the character of the Algoma Central Railway from the standpoint of a practical contractor. Mr. Smith of Sault Ste. Marie, after an able review of the whole situation, appealed to the members representing Northern Ontario, especially Messrs. Smyth of Algoma, Gamey of Manitoulin and Mahaffy of Muskoka, to support a proposal of such vital interest to their constitutents. He also exposed the part played by the United States Steel Corporation in blocking the financial arrangements of an organization which would likely be a powerful competitor. Mr. Hanna dealt largely with the financial aspect of the question, and had not finished when the debate adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

The House will meet this afternoon at 2 o'clock, and will continue to meet each afternoon at that hour for the remainder of the session.

The Government's Intentions.

Before the orders of the day was called in the Legislature yesterday, Mr. Smyth (Algoma) asked if it was the intention of the Government to bring down any further railway subsidies this session.

"It is not the present intention of the Government to bring down any further railway subsidies," replied the Premier.

The "Soo" Guarantee.

Hon. Mr. Gibson, on the resumption of the debate on the bill to aid the Algoma Central, called the attention of the House to his statement the previous evening, that not only would there be provision for the Speyer loan and the payment of creditors and one million of working capital, but that the guarantee would not pass until these requirements are fulfilled. It had been stated that this was not in the act, and he replied that it was in the agreement. He was under the impression that he was correct, but he now wished to state that it was not so provided. The understanding was that the Government should be in that position, and correspondence to that effect on behalf of the Government is in existence. In pursuance of that understanding, which has existed for the past three of four weeks, a clause would be inserted containing that provision when the bill came before the Committee of the Whole House.

Third Readings.

The following bills were read for a third time at the Legislature: To confirm an agreement between the water works commission of St. Catharines and the Cataract Power Company of Hamilton; to amend the General Roads Companies Act; respecting boards of education in certain cities; to incorporate the Mount McKay and Kakabeka Falls Railway Company; respecting the Southwestern Traction Company.

Can Redeem Property.

A deputation from New Ontario called on the Premier and asked for an amendment to the act of last session providing that all land sold by the Crown and upon which the dues had not been paid for three years, should be confiscated by the Crown at the end of 1904. The Premier agreed that the owners should have the right to redeem the property within a year.

McPherson & McGregor

(Successors to the F. R. J. McPherson Co.)

Take this opportunity of thanking the public for the very liberal patronage accorded the late firm. Trade has been so satisfactory that Mr McGrego decided to increase his interest in the business and, as a consequence, the firm will be know hereafter as McPHERSON & McGREGOR.

Our specialties are:—

Sanitary Plumbing
Sanitary Ventilating
Steam and Hot Water Heating
Electrical Wiring and Supplies

We wish to draw the attention of the public to a few of the many complimentary testimonials received by Mr. McGregor for the high quality of the work he has installed in Plumbing and Heating:—

From the Firm of Bennet & Wright, Plumbing, Heating and Electrical Contractors, Toronto.

This is to certify that Duncan McGregor has been in our employment steady for about fifteen years and during that time we have found him to be steady, honest and trustworthy. He has given every satisfaction as a practical mechanic in each of the following branches: Plumbing, steam and gas fitting, also electrical and conduit work, and for some time has had charge of some of our largest contracts with satisfactory results.

From Ilsley & Horn, General Contractors, Toronto.

The bearer, Mr. Duncan McGregor, had charge of the electric wiring at the King Edward Hotel Building. The job was a large and complicated one and by the way Mr. McGregor handled the work he proved himself a mechanic of more than ordinary ability. We unhesitatingly recommend him as a first class mechanic to anyone needing his services.

From Mr. J. Ross Robertson, of the Evening Telegram.

Mr. Duncan McGregor, who has been connected with the Bennet & Wright Co. for some years, and who has superintended the work of plumbing and heating for the Bennet & Wright Co., is not only in my opinion, but also that of my architect, a fully competent mechanic. His work, my architect informs me, has been most satisfactory. Any thing that has come under my own supervision has been likewise satisfactory.

An Extract Taken from the June Number of Domestic Engineering.

During the recent convention of the Canadian Electrical Association held in the King Edward Hotel, a thorough examination was made of all the electrical work in the hotel, and it was pronounced second to none on the continent. Therefore, great credit is due Mr. Duncan MacGregor, who superintended the entire conduit, electrical and power system for the firm of Bennet & Wright, of this city, who were the contractors for all the different branches of the electrical work in the new hotel.

Interest in Grand Trunk Pacific Speeches Dying Out.

YOUNGEST MEMBER SPEAKS

An Effective Reply to Opposition Criticisms—Two Opposition Speakers—A Little Breeze Over Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Answer to a Member's Question—Protection From Floods Asked Now Bills.

Ottawa, April 14.—It is now expected that the debate on the Transcontinental Railway Bill will end Tuesday next. Yesterday saw the delivery of only three speeches on the now almost threadbare subject. The interest of the members has been appreciably reduced, and few speakers succeed in commanding general attention. Mr. Armand Lavergne, the 24-year-old member for Montmagny, who enjoys the distinction of being the youngest member of the House, opened the debate with a brief, but capital speech, in which he replied effectively to many Opposition criticisms. Mr. Clancy followed for nearly three hours, the last speaker of the day being Mr. Lancaster, also for the Opposition. The latter threw out the threat that the Opposition leader, if successful at the general elections, would repudiate the railway agreement and let the country in for heavy damages if the present Government proceeded with their plan. The adjournment of the debate was moved by Mr. M. K. Cowan.

The following bills were introduced: Respecting the Manitoba & Keewatin Railway Company, Mr. McCreary. Respecting the North American Telegraph Company, Mr. McCreary. To incorporate the Dominion Fire Insurance Company, Mr. Macpherson. Respecting the Canadian Northern Railway Company, Mr. T. O. Davis. To amend the criminal code, 1902, Mr. Lennox.

Floods in Montreal District.

Mr. Monet brought to the attention of the Government the question of providing improved protection works by which a recurrence of the floods at La Prairie might be prevented. He suggested that the embankments be raised and strengthened. He was supported in his request by Mr. Geoffrion.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier recognized the reasonableness of the request, and promised to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the matter.

Hon Mr. Prefontaine expressed the opinion that the source of the floods on the St. Lawrence was ice at points below Montreal, and the remedy was to be found in the use of an ice-breaking vessel there. He understood that some time since such a vessel had been constructed at Sorel, and he thought the experiment should be tried.

Mr. Monk supported the request of Messrs. Monet and Geoffrion.

Mr. Taylor asked the Government to give its immediate attention to the floods in the north end of Leeds County. A section of a Government bridge on the Rideau Canal had been carried away, and the situation in the vicinity of Merrickville was serious. "A dam is not built at once," said Mr. Taylor, "there will be no irrigation on the Rideau Canal [illegible] of Newburgh all summer."

New Commission.

Mr. [illegible] explained the delay in the submission of the report of the Commission appointed to enquire into the Yukon concessions. B. T. A. Bell, who was a member of that Commission, died before the report was drawn up, and on the advice of the Minister of Justice, it was decided to issue a new Commission.

Question of Giving Information.

A little breeze arose respecting the reply by the Premier a few days ago concerning the appointment of members of Parliament to office, that the information asked for was to be found in the public documents. The leader of the Opposition contended that the answer was not a proper one, and that there was no precedent for the refusal of the Government to give an answer.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier replied that if any member wanted information that was not accessible or in the possession of the public it was the duty of the Government to furnish it, but no object was to be served by asking questions the replies of which were to be found in the public records. There was nothing for the Government to be ashamed of in the matter at all, but it was no use taking up time repeating information that has been given again and again in the House.

The House adjourned at 10.45.

U.S. Government Must Pay.

New York, April 14.—The United States must pay $203,219 to the owners of the British ship Foscolia, which was sunk on May 28, 1898, by the United States cruiser Columbia, which was patrolling the coast looking for Cevera's fleet, when she collided with the Foscolia off Fire Island light.

Hymn Composer Dead.

New York, April 14.—George Fitzourwood Lejeune, composer of church music and organist and senior choirmaster of Trinity Parish, is dead in his 62nd year from influenza. He was the composer of "Jerusalem the Golden" and many other popular hymns.

Will You Help a Sick Friend?

Get My Book for Him Now.

Send me no money.

Only tell me which book to send.

You certainly know of someone who is sick—the sufferer who will be grateful for the help my book offers.

And that book tells of a way to help. Tells of a way so certain that I, as a physician, offer that help on trial. The book tells how, for thirty years in hospitals and at bedsides I researched for a way to cure the persistent and difficult diseases. It tells how I perfected my prescription—Dr. Shoop's Restorative. How by scientific experiment I traced out the causes that bring on chronic diseases.

I found invariably that where there was a weakness the inside nerves were weak. Where there was a lack of vitality that the vital nerves lacked power. Where weak organs were found, I always found weak nerves. Not the nerves commonly thought of, but the vital organs' nerves, the inside—the invisible nerves.

This was a revelation. Then my real success began.

Then I combined ingredients that would strengthen, that would vitalize these nerves. That prescription I called a restorative. It is known the world over now as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. After that I did not fail to cure one case in each hundred. In the extremely difficult cases my failures for five years were one in each forty treated. I found cancer incurable. Cancer is for surgery, not medicine.

Then how to get this prescription to sick ones everywhere was my thought. I must announce it in the public press. But, thought I, will they realize the truth of my discovery—the real power of Dr. Shoop's Restorative? Then a way came to me—like an inspiration. "I will offer it to the sick on trial. Then they will know I am sincere."

I wrote a reliable druggist in each city and village in America. They agreed to co-operate with me.

Now by any sick one

can be taken on trial. For a full month I will let you use it entirely at my risk.

Send me no money. Just write me for the book you need. When I send it I will tell you of a druggist near by who will permit the month's trial. Use the Restorative a month—then decide. If you say to the druggist, "It did not help me," that will relieve you of any expense whatever. He will bill the cost. This is my way of clearing your mind of all doubts, as to what Dr. Shoop's Restorative can do. No matter how prejudiced, you cannot dispute this absolute security I offer. You cannot resist an offer like this if you are at all sick.

If you have a weakness, write me. If you can't do things like you used to do them, tell me about it.

Write in confidence. As a physician I will tell you a way to help. Get my book, now—to-day.

Simply state which book you want and address Dr. Shoop Box 17 Racine Wis.

EXPLOSION KILLED 29.

Ton of Powder Exploded on U.S. Battleship Missouri.

Pensacola, Fla., April 14.—By the explosion of 2,000 pounds of powder in the 12-inch turret and the handling room of the battleship Missouri, Capt. W. S. Cowles commanding, 29 men were instantly killed and 5 injured, of whom two will die.

The Missouri was on the target range with the Texas and Brooklyn at practice about noon, when a charge of powder in the 12-inch left-hand gun ignited from gases, exploded and, dropping below, ignited four charges of powder in the handling room and all exploded. Only one man of the entire turret and handling crew survives. But for the prompt and efficient work of Capt. Cowles in flooding the handling room and magazine with water one of the magazines would have exploded and the ship would have been destroyed.

Killed By Yard Engine.

Winnipeg, April 14.—Late yesterday afternoon John Wellman was struck and instantly killed by one of the C.P.R. yard engines in Winnipeg yards.

A Mother's Recommendation.

I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for a number of years, and have no hesitancy in saying that it is the best remdy for coughs, colds, and croup that I have ever used in my family. I have not words to express my confidence in this remedy. Mrs. J. A. Moore, North Star, Mich. For sale by all druggists.

Thrilling Experience.

Brantford, April 14.—Wm. Walsh of this city had a thrilling experience in the Grand River here last evening. He was attempting to cross about half a mile above the dam, when his canoe upset. However, Walsh managed to grasp it and was carried swiftly towards the dam. Here he made a gallant struggle, but was carried over. The lifeboat of the fire department was quickly on hand and rescued the plucky fellow a few hundred yards below the dam. Walsh, who is a blacksmith by trade, was still clinging to his canoe, but was fast losing his strength. However, he will recover in a few days.

Will Lose $20,000.

Sydney, N.S., April 14.—The steamer Prietfield, which has been frozen in at this harbor for over two months, was released yesterday, and sailed for Glasgow with 5,000 tons of pig iron. The Dominion Iron & Steel Company, which had the steamer chartered will lose about $20,000 by her detention.

Cattle and Sheep.

London, April 13.—The receipts for the year 1903 at Deptford of cattle and sheep from Canada were 47,812 and 46,012 respectively.

London, April 13.—Live cattle firmer at 10½c to 12c per lb. for steers, dressed weight; refrigerator beef steady at 8¼c to 8½c. Sheep slow, 12¼c to 13¼c per lb.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Montreal, April 13. About 600 head of butchers' cattle, 25 milch cows, 2000 calves, 40 sheep and 30 spring lambs were offered for sale at the East End Abattoir to-day, and several hundred calves were sold at Point St. Charles this morning. Trade in cattle was very dull, as the butchers had bought on Monday nearly all the beef they need this week. The prices of good cattle have a downward tendency, none of the sales to-day exceeding 4¾c per lb., but a few choice beeves were held for more. Good medimms sold at 4c to 4¼c; ordinary mediums, 3½c to near 4c, and the common stock at 2¼c to 3½c per lb. There were some remarkably fine milch cows on the market, two of the best being held at $70 each, but there were few buyers around. The market was glutted with small calves, which sold at from $1 to $2.50 each; good veals sold at $5 to $10 each; yearling sheep that had been shorn sold at 4c to 4½c per lb.; spring lambs at $3 to $4.50 each; fat hogs are dull of sale at declining rates, only choice porkers bringing 5c per lb.

Manitoba's Agricultural Directors.

Winnipeg, April 14.—An Order-in-Council has been passed by the Manitoba Government to secure the election of ten directors, who will govern the new agricultural college, four to be elected by farmers delegates, two by university council, three by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council and one to be Minister of Agriculture (ex-officio).

The World's Water Power.

John C. Hawkshaw, president of the Institute of Civil Engineers, has calculated the total water power of the world to be equivalent to 10,340,000,000 horse-power (apparently annually). To obtain this figure he assumes a rainfall of ten inches to flow off every square inch of land and places the mean height at 2,250 feet above sea level. "Our present yearly output of 225,000,000 tons of coal would give that horse-power for only a little over half a day."

Don't Always Last.

On a very rainy day an American in London got into an omnibus. Very soon he noticed that drops of water were pattering down upon his head from the roof. At that moment the conductor entered to collect the fares. "What's the matter with the roof?" said the damp passenger. "Does it do this always?" "No, sir," replied the conductor, "only when it rains."

THE WILD FLOWERS.

Awakening of an Interest in Them Has Brought Destruction in Its Train—Plea for Their Protection.

It seems an unfortunate rule that the first awakening of an interest in nature and her ways prompts unthinking destruction. Perhaps it is a necessary stage on the road to knowledge, still we should strive to avoid it if possible, and at least to leave it behind as speedily as we may. The indiscriminate collector has disappeared from among the bird lovers. He may have served a good purpose in his time, but his work is done. Such destruction of bird life as the scientific investigators have found necessary has been fully atoned for by their work in the cause of preservation, both by legal and moral restraints. The work of examining the tissues of dead birds has been completed. The food of every species at all seasons of the year has been determined by examination and analysis. Complete collections of skins at all stages of development and conditions of plumage have been made. The naturalist must turn from a study of the dead to a study of the living, and there a fascinating and inexhaustible field awaits him. The laboratory has done its work, but the more enticing secrets of the woods, the marshes, the shores, and the fields await the diligent investigator.

As nature's sylvan treasures begin to recede there is a sudden awakening of interest and keen appreciation of their manifold charms. The lover of wild flowers is no longer alone, but finds kindred spirits on every hand. Familiar and once lonely routes through the woods and along the streams and marshes are changing to worn pathways. And this new awakening of interest brings destruction in its train. Many of the familiar wild flowers are disappearing from their usual haunts, and it remains for their steadfast friends to save them from further destruction. Man's interference helps the coarse and the commonplace to push aside the fragile and delicate. In the struggle for existence the encroaching grass crowds out and kills off the most delicate and beautiful flowers of the suburban woods. In parks where the leaves are raked up and burned the destructive grass takes immediate possession and the wild flowers are doomed. And where grass is not aided by such vandalism the continuous depredations of flower lovers is a slower process of extermination.

To protect and preserve our native flora demands a higher degree of altruism than the preservation of bird life. The ever-potent appeal to selfishness can be advanced on behalf of almost all our feathered visitors, and he who is not moved by their glad message of spring nor their happy activity in the weary summer will give heed to their value in protecting the farm, the garden, and the orchard. Their fine, sensitive organism gives them a higher claim, for it appeals to a human sympathy that recoils from the infliction of pain. But to see the beautiful ultramarine flower of the fringed gentian and the bright scarlet tuft of the painted cup, and leave them that they may produce seed for the next season, requires an altruistic perfection of mind to which poor humanity can seldom attain. These and other annuals are suffering severely, and will be exterminated in the vicinity of cities and towns unless their admirers can be made to realize that the supreme test of love is renunciation. Annuals are plants that die after filling their mission in the production of seed, and they suffer most from their admirers. Plants with perennial roots, that send up new growth with each succeeding spring, survive depredations. The trailing arbutus, though possessing a perennial trailing rootstock and hardy, evergreen leaves, has been exterminated in some localities through the carelessness of admirers. The perfume of its early flowers is irresistible, and the stems are so tough and strong that the careless gatherers tear up long trailers from the ground. A little care will save its life without sacrificing any of the pleasures of early spring. The violets and fly flowers survive because their most fruitful flowers are hidden under ground. The daisies of summer and the asters and golden rods of autumn may be gathered by the armful. But true lovers of nature must prove their worthiness by leaving the annuals to fulfill their mission. Abnegation is its own reward.

Canada's Ability to Feed Britain.

Dominion Statistician George Johnson writes: If Manitoba took a strip of land five miles on each side of her existing railways it would give an area of 14,000,000 acres, which, at the average yield of 18.65 bushels per acre, would yield 260,000,000 bushels of wheat, which is more than Great Britain ever imported in one year. If we took the 2,100 miles of railway in the Northwest, beyond Manitoba, there would be another 14,000,000 acres, which would give in all 260,000,000 bushels of a surplus. Taking actual results, in 1902 the yield of 2,000,000 acres was 53,000,000 bushels of wheat. Four times that acreage would give all that Great Britain required and 20,000,000 bushels over. Manitoba contains 48,000,000 acres from which to select the 8,000,000 acres required.

HOW IT'S DONE.

It's from the stomach the blood is fed and the nerves controlled.

Undigested food ferments for lack of gastric juice. The fermentation and putrefaction in the stomach and alimentary canal are the main causes of disease.

It upsets the nerves.

It poisons the system.

Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill increases the necessary supply of gastric juice in quantity and quality to insure perfect stomach action. It has similar action on bile formation. Anyone can prove this for himself by addressing WILSON-FYLE Co., Niagara Falls, Ont., for free sample.

SIGNIFICANT VERDICT GIVEN.

Craig Inquest at last Brought to a Close.

STRYCHNINE CAUSED DEATH

James Craig's Sudden Death No Poison in the Fish Analyst Ellis Report.

Lakefield, April 13.—(Staff special) "We find that the death of James Craig was caused by strychnine poison, but are not, from the evidence, able to find out how, or by whom, administered. We are of the opinion that it was not a case of suicide." Such was the significant, if not incriminating, verdict which the jury returned yesterday at the adjourned inquest into the circumstances surrounding the death of James Craig, who died here some time back, so suddenly and under such strange conditions that an inquest was ordered. Ever since Craig's death the event has been the sole topic of the villagers here, and when it became known that the affair was being investigated by Detective Murray, some wild rumours, for which apparently there was absolutely no foundation, were indiscriminately flouted. Craig it will be remembered died suddenly a few hours after eating three sardines. At the time he complained that they tasted bitter and threw the tin containing the remainder away. It was at first supposed that he was poisoned by the fish, but this theory broke down yesterday. Craig leaves a wife and young daughter.

Yesterday in the Court room Coroner Gray filed the following report from Provincial Analyst Ellis. It is the result of an analysis made on the deceased man's stomach and the jury based their verdict upon it:—

Toronto, April 12, 1904.

Dr. Gray, Coroner, Peterborough.

Dear Sir,—I have examined the contents of a parcel sent in by Dr. J. R. Fraser, of Lakefield, with the following results:—

In the open box of sardines I have found no strychnine.

In the bottle labelled "Vomit" I have found strychnine. The quantity contained in the vomit I estimate at about one-eighth of a grain.

In the contents of the stomach I also found strychnine. I estimate the quantity in the stomach at about one-eighth part of a grain. The total amount of strychnine in stomach and vomit I estimate at about one-quarter of a grain.

I have not determined the quantity of strychnine in the liver and other viscera.

It is not possible if strychnine be taken, to recover from the stomach more than a fraction of the whole quantity taken. I have no doubt, therefore, that the deceased must have taken a quantity of strychnine sufficient to cause death.

I am, yours truly,
W. H. ELLIS.

Detective Murray was an interested person at the inquest. The first witness called was Dr. Fraser, who on being sworn said: "After the first adjourned inquest, I sent a portion of the stomach, the vomit and a portion of the liver to the Provincial Analyst, Toronto. I received the following letter:—

Toronto, April, 12,

J. R. Fraser, Esq., M. D., Lakefield, Ontario.

Dear Dr. Fraser,—I have examined the articles you sent me, and find strychnine in the vomit, and in the stomach of the late James Craig. I find none in the sardines.

The quantity of strychnine in the stomach I estimate at about one-quarter of a grain.

I infer that the deceased must have taken a fatal dose of strychnine.

Your truly,
(W. H ELLIS,

"My opinion as to the cause of death has been confirmed by the analysis. I believe his death was caused by strychnine poisoning. I don't think that in my evidence I stated when he got the ale. In reply to my asking him if he had been drinking, deceased said he had had one glass of ale, but did not say when he got it. I do not know if he took the ale just before retiring." The doctor continued by saying that the first symptoms of strychnine were shuddering, spasms and cramps.

R. P. Davidson, manager of the Lakefield Branch of the Traders Bank, was next called.—Witness was at the Craig House on the night of deceased's death. He saw deceased for the last time about 10 o'clock, lying on the sofa. Mrs. Davidson, wife of witness, told him that she heard a noise during the night and at one o'clock witness heard someone groaning. Putting on a dressing jacket he went into the hall and saw Mr. John Craig at the door of deceased's bedroom. Dr. Fraser was in the room, where the deceased seemed to be in convulsions. Witness went on to say that during his stay there, which had been since last October, he had heard disturbances in the kitchen. He did not know between whom. On one occasion James Craig and Boyea, the batsman, had an altercation, the former was evidently abusing the help in the kitchen, and Boyea went to the girls' assistance. Witness had heard that Jas. Craig and his wife disagreed. He himself left the hotel for a time on account of the trouble between Craig and Boyea. Asked if he knew one Jas. Lang, witness replied that he did, and indeed in answer to a question said he did not remember seeing him that night. Continuing witness said, "My room is near Jas. Craig's room. I did not see Mrs. Jas. Craig or the daughter retire that night. I heard John Craig call the deceased after I was in bed. He called him to bake some bread in the kitchen. There were no angry words. I heard someone go to the kitchen."

Charles Shannon deposed that he heard no quarrelling between James Craig and his wife on the night of his death. He was aware that the two disagreed.

Mrs. Jos. Craig on being sworn said that she and her husband occupied the same bed. Their daughter slept in the same room. Her husband on the night in question retired about 11 o'clock, and to all appearances was in his usual good state of health. He wound and set his watch, as was his nightly custom. Witness heard John Craig call her husband. She had no theory in her mind as to how her husband could have got the strychnine. She had seen none in his possession.

Irene Craig, daughter of the deceased, told of waking up at her father's groans. Her mother made an effort to wake him and then called Mr. John Craig.

Jas. Long was not over anxious to tell his story, and on being called persisted that he had told everything he knew. Witness however testified as follows: "I did not say after the last adjournment that I knew more than I had told. I remember the bottle that I got in Jonory. It was like the one produced. I forced a like bottle under the latter. Eight pills were made and I took six to the pig yard. I did not see how much strychnine Jas. Craig used. He poured the strychnine on some cheese. The pills were a little bigger than a pea; about the size of a bean. He made each pill separately. I do not think he measured the strychnine. I did not talk to him afterwards about the strychnine. We used the strychnine in the meat house and I looked there for it. It was the second day after his death in the morning that I started to look for it. It was none of my business to do so; I can't say why I searched for it; I just took it into my head to do so. I have never heard what caused his death. No one told me of what the doctor said, and I was never told the doctor died of strychnine poisoning. I did not hear the doctor's evidence on the first day of the inquest. I was quite a while looking for the strychnine; perhaps ten or fifteen minutes. It was more than five minutes. I put it back where I found it; I did nothing with it. I can't say why I looked for it. I went for it again with Mr. Cochrane. I did not open it; there was a fork in it. I simply gave it to Mr. Cochrane. I saw deceased put the strychnine in the cheese; it was like a powder, of light colour. The witness went on to say that he was looking for a lock when he found the strychnine, which latter he found between 8 and 9 o'clock in the morning. Witness heard of Jas. Craig's death the morning after it occurred."

This concluded the evidence, and after a short withdrawal the jury returned the above verdict.

The jury was composed of J. F. Lillierap, foreman; Chas. M. Shannon, John B. Richardson, Wm. Cox, sr., Thos. Webster, Francis K. Richardson, John English, George Murdoff, John Grylls, Wm. V. Reynolds, Lawrence G. Steele, John C. Baldwin, W. Cox, jr.

OBITUARY.

Sad Death of Mr. J. E. Chambers which Occurred Yesterday.

A very sad death occurred yesterday, when Margaret Boyd, the wife of Mr. J. G. Chambers, of 463 Stewart street, passed away, after an illness of about a month from typhoid fever. The deceased was born in Hope township about 45 years ago, and 23 years ago married Mr. J. G. Chambers, also of Hope. About three years ago the family removed to Peterborough, where they have since resided.

Besides the bereaved husband, a family of six small children, ranging in years from 4 to 15, four boys and two girls, are left to mourn her loss. The four sons are Howard, Victor, Stanley and Reginald, and the girls are Ethel and Florence.

The deceased was a consistent member of the George street Methodist church, and her motherly disposition and exemplary Christian life had won for her many friends, who join in expressions of the sincerest regret at her demise.

The funeral will take place from the family residence, Stewart street, to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, and will proceed to the Little Lake cemetery for interment.

PAID HIGH TRIBUTE TO HIS MEMORY.

Funeral of the late Rev. Joseph Kilgour Largely Attended.

The Services at Charlotte Street Church —Addresses by His Fellow Ministers —A True Christian Character.

The funeral of the late Rev. Joseph Kilgour, whose death occurred last Monday, took place yesterday afternoon, and was very largely attended. A large number of friends of the deceased gentleman gather at the Charlotte street Methodist church, where the services were held to pay a last tribute to the memory of one greatly beloved by all who came into contact with him. The church was filled with friends of the deceased, not only from Peterborough, but outside towns were also largely represented. The feeling of genuine sorrow which pervaded the gathering, spoke eloquence of the universal love and respect in which the deceased was held. Many persons from outside the immediate church and denomination, of which the deceased was an honoured member, gathered at the church, and joined in the respect being paid to the memory of one of earth's noblemen.

During the years in which the late Mr. Kilgour has been a resident of Peterborough, his many sterling qualities and Christian integrity have been amply exemplified, and on many occasions he has assisted in various way those who have gone to him with troubles.

Among the members of the clergy present at the service yesterday afternoon were:—Revs. Dr. Torrance, J. G. Potter, J. A. Wilson, J. Bastow, A. H. Brace, W. J. Jolliffe, J. P. Wilson, J. G. Lewis, C. C. Davidson, of Peterborough; J. W. Bunner, of Bridgenorth; W. B. Secombe, of Keene; H. B. Kenny, of Millbrooke; Clark, of Little Britain; T. W. Leggott, Lakefield; Henry McQuade, Warsaw; J. E. Robeson, Bethany; H. V. Monteer, Cavanville; N. D. Drew, Fraserville; R. Edwards, Port Hope. The service at the church was conducted by Rev. J. P. Wilson, chairman of the District, who paid a high tribute to the Christian character of the deceased brother minister. Mr. Wilson said:—

"We are assembled to pay the last tribute of respect to one of the noblest and best of men. The generation to which he belonged, the generation which helped to lay the moral foundations of this new land, is passing rapidly away. A noble race of men of whom the world was not worthy. As a citizen, husband, minister of the Gospel and a Christian he commanded the respect of the whole community. Rev. Mr. Kilgour was one of the strongest and gentlest of men. He has stood in the white light of public gaze for 40 years, and we can place on his bier to-day the white flower, emblematic of a spotless life. The land is better and richer because he lived in it. We can say, 'for he was a good man, full of the Holy Ghost and of Faith.'

"Mr. Kilgour was a friend to both young and old. He seemed not to grow old. He was held in the most profound respect by his brethren in the ministry. He always bore himself with gentleness and quiet dignity. He was loved for the strength, gentleness and sweetness of his character. In conversation he excelled, for all his rare treasures of reading and observation were completely at his control. Such ample information, critical knowledge of men and things; such a genial glow of spirt; such real humour and pathos, and such thorough good breeding made him most interesting in conversation. And he was a Christian and a ripe and good one. He loved his church with peculiar fondness; its doctrines, usages achievements and possibilities were dear to him. Yet he was no bigot, he counted his friends in all the churches. Before the union of the Methodist churches he anticipated it; if he were living he would be energetic in his endeavour to bring about the great union of the churches which is now under anticipation, and why should he not love the church, which, in the good providence of God, had led him into so rich an experience of pardon and salvation. The grace of God did much for him. Naturally stern, proud, retiring, intellectual, it softened all the firmer virtues, and made him what he was—gentle and helpful. Few men educated in the old theology, were so broad in their teachings. While holding to the doctrines and dogmas of the church tenaciously, he had grand views of God's great love and mercy towards repentant sinners. His charity was broad and generous. He passed calmly away, and the community feels the loss of this earnest Christian minister. Surely it was not dying; it was rather a triumphal march to an eternal coronation. His passing from this world realized the promise of his Lord 'He that liveth and believeth in Me shall never die.' After a few days of decline he passed away to wear the crown of the righteous. 'Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.'

Rev. Mr. Clarke of Little Britain, also spoke briefly. It was through the influence of the deceased that the speaker became a minister of the Gospel. He spoke of the effect of the life of the deceased, and paid a tribute to the high moral character possessed by him.

Mr. D. W. Dumble, representing the George street church, spoke of the inspiration which a life such as that lived by the deceased, would give. He was of a very kindly disposition and his help in connection with the George street church had been rendered cheerfully, and indeed often when he was physically unfit he had assisted in the services. There would always be a warm place in the hearts of the George street church people for the memory of the deceased. He had given freely of his time and efforts to the church of which he was a member, and his life had been spent in an endeavour to bring men to Christ.

Rev. W. J. Jolliffe, pastor of the Charlotte street church, followed, and spoke of the deceased in his relation to his pastor. He had always found the late Mr. Kilgour devoted to his church. He was a manly character, and he was a man of firm convictions of right and wrong, and firmly living up to his belief. He read much and thought more. He was self sacrificing to his church and his neighbours, and many there are who can testify to his sterling qualities of character. Mr. Jolliffe attended him in his last illness, and he was fully prepared for the end when it came and passed triumphantly away.

There were many beautiful floral tributes, including "Gates Ajar," from the Woman's Auxiliary and the Ladies' Aid; a star from the Epworth League; an anchor from the Young Men's Guild; an anchor from the Quarterly Board; a basket from the Sunday school of the Charlotte street church; a beautiful cross of pink roses from the George street church; a wreath from the Mark street church; a wreath from Cavanville friends; baskets of flowers from Mr. and Mrs. Robert Neill, Mr. and Mrs. Austin, and Dr. and Mrs. Morrison; a sickle from Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Kennedy, and a beautiful bouquet of cut flowers from the Misses Morrow; wreath from Peterborough and Corinthian Lodges, A. F. and A. M.

The pall bearers were taken from the ranks of his fellow ministers, and were: Revs. Messrs. Leggott, McQuade, Robeson, Mounteer, Edwards and Drew.

The remains were interred in the Little Lake cemetery, the funeral procession being a very long one.

The flag on the George street church has been flying at half mast since Mr. Kilgour's death.

A memorial service will be conducted in the Charlotte street church next Sunday morning.

LATE JAS. PILLING BURIED YESTERDAY.

The Remains were Taken to Port Hope Where Interment Took Place.

The remains of the late James Pilling, who died in Peterborough on the 21st day of January, were interred in the Union Cemetery here this afternoon. Since his death, the remains have been in the vault at Peterborough. Mrs. James Pilling, wife of the deceased, Miss Martha, Edward and Jack, daughter and sons, were present at the burial.—Port Hope Guide.

PETERBOROUGH BECOMES LIABLE.

For the $100,000, if the Sugar Company By-Law Carries.

Letter From a Citizen in Which Some Pertinent Facts are Quoted Government Bonus Only for Three Years.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—In the issues of the daily papers yesterday evening, it is asserted that the Town does not raise a dollar by assessment for the purposes of this by-law but simply guarantees the payment of the Company's bonds. Surely if A. endorses B.'s note, which is just what the town is to do in the proposed by-law, he makes himself liable for the whole amount of it, and if the Company should fail to meet the bonds at maturity, then we know the Town must forthwith pay them. None of these bonds will mature for several years and the town in the interim will remain in uncertainty and with its credit exhausted.

It is also stated that the bonds are instalment bonds, of which $50,000.00 are to be retired by the Company in three years, etc., but if the Company should fail to do so, then no explanation of what is to occur is given.

It is also asserted that the Company has $200,000 of stock to sell but the question arises, why, with the lavish promises made by the Company to farmers and investors, is it that it has only been able to get rid of $50,000 during the past year. The expectation that it will sell $200,000 more in three years is so remote a contingency that it is not worth considering. Neither farmers nor investors will touch it under the peculiar circumstances which have arisen.

Again, the evening papers say that D. A. Gordon, with associates, will give $100,000 if the town guarantee $100,000; but if the Town has to pay the $100,000 then we must be in extreme danger of losing our money or becoming partners, with all the responsibilities attached to that position.

It is also said that when completed the factory will raise $350,000 and the Town has first mortgage on this value. Has it? The by-law provides that the Town shall give its guarantee for the first $50,000 of bonds before the sugar plant is installed and the security obtained. Is that not so, Mr. Editor? If not, please quote the by-law and show I am wrong.

I understand the Company has sold $50,000 of stock and that of this about $25,000 has been applied in improvements. It would be interesting to know, and before the Town incurs the liability for $100,000 it is right and proper that we should know to what purpose the other $25,000 has been applied; also what amount is owing and unpaid to farmers for beets sold to the Company during the past year for which it is said it has been paid. A good many farmers are complaining that they have not received their money. Farmers are the most unlikely people in the world to invest their money in the purchase of stock of a company that has defaulted to them. I would not have said a word that might reflect on the Company's management had the question of this by-law not arisen, but it is too serious an affair to the whole community not to question a proceeding that will probably fail, and will destroy the Town's credit. It is a case in which all citizens should speak out and search for, and insist upon learning the basis upon which the affairs of the Company have been conducted, so as to obtain a guide for future expectations.

I am credibly informed that the Dresden and Wiarton sugar factories have proved failures and that the machines and plant are being removed out of Canada; also that the Wallaceburg factory has paid no dividend during the past year, although it received a very large sum from the Government by way of bounty.

The manufacture of beet sugar in Ontario is in its experimental stage, and without the bounty from the Government none of the factories could continue in business. The extension of the bounty has only been made for three years, and there is no reason to suppose, let alone know, that it will be renewed. Belgium has discontinued it. Peterborough has now over $500,000 of liabilities standing against it. The taxes are increasing yearly and I am confident it will not enlarge the debt another $100,000 by putting it in a business that is of little interest to the town, one must be raised shortly to provide must be raised very shortly to provide a Collegiate Institute.

Your obedient servant,
W. H. MOORE.

RINK COMPANY'S FINE SHOWING.

A Satisfactory Balance on the Right Side.

The Dividend of 5 Declared at Annual Meeting Held Last Night in Council Chamber.

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Hockey Rink Company, Limited, was held in the Council Chamber last night. There was a large attendance of shareholders and the chair was occupied by the President, Mr. A. H. Stratton. After the minutes of the last annual meeting had been read and confirmed, the Secretary-Treasurer, Mr. James Hamilton, presented his report, which will be published to-morrow.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

Gentlemen, — In moving the adoption of the second annual report of the Peterborough Hockey Rink Company, Limited, which the directors now with submit, show a very satisfactory state of affairs in connection with our company.

Our rink opened on the evening of December 12th, and finally closed on the evening of March 29th. The shareholders, I think, have good reason to be gratified with the net earnings of the company for the past year, which amounted to $2,072.46, which is equal to 52 per cent of the paid up capital.

Our expenditures have been more than ordinary during the year, as we had a number of outstanding accounts to settle, which remained from the previous year, amounting in all to $332.95.

We paid all our current liabilities, and reduced our mortgage to the extent of $1,000, and paid the premium on our Endowment Policy of $331.75, making in all amount paid on same $633.50, each year becoming a more valuable asset, which, we believe, taking everything into consideration, is a very satisfactory showing.

Out of the balance the directors propose paying a dividend of five per cent., provided the proposition meets with the approval of the majority of the shareholders, and we now ask if agreeable that you confirm same.

The rink during the past year has been kept in first-class repair; the seating accommodation has been improved, with an eye to the comfort of our patrons. We were obliged to have heavy iron bars put on the windows to keep the small boys from gaining access to our games. The ladies' dressing room has been improved, and increased accommodation added to the hockey apartments. There are still a number of improvements that could be made, and which would add materially to the comfort of our patrons. Among them, and what is needed very badly, is a better system of plumbing, which can be arranged during the coming year.

Everything considered, we have every reason to be satisfied with the support received from the townspeople generally, and we appreciate the hearty co-operation of the Peterborough Hockey Club and the T. A. S. Hockey Club, which added in a great measure to the success of the year.

Our rink management during the past season has been in very capable, painstaking and obliging hands, and has, we believe, given the public and your directors, the best satisfaction. Our secretary has given a great deal of his time and energy to further the interests of our company and we feel sure that every shareholder will appreciate the very capable manner in which he has discharged the duties of Secretary-Treasurer.

It is with the deepest regret that we have to report the death of our esteemed president, the late Mr. W. A. Sanderson, whose untimely end cast such a gloom over the community. We especially miss his face from our directors, as he was the most enthusiastic worker we had, taking the greatest interest in everything pertaining to the welfare and progress of our company. Your directors saw fit to appoint Mr. Geo. W. Morrow to succeed the late Mr. Sanderson on our Board, and it is needless to say he has taken a keen interest in it, and has shown that they used good judgment in their selection.

Generally speaking, I feel sure the past year's operations will be regarded with great satisfaction by all concerned and I am certain that under the continued watchful care of the directors and officers, and with the co-operation of the shareholders, the best of prospects exist for the steady advancement of our company.

AUDITORS' REPORT.

The auditor's report, which was adopted, was as follows:

Balance from last season		$1,630 95
Receipts for season 1903-04		3,472 46
		$5,103 41
Operating expenses	$1,350 54
Interest on Mortgage	252 15
Organization expense	75 05
Organization exp. written off	400 00
		$3,025 67
Net profit this year		$1,794 72

JNO. CRANE,
Auditor.

The motion was seconded and carried.

Mr. Stratton next said that it was the opinion of the directors that a 5 per cent. dividend be declared, now that the company had a balance of some $500 on the right side. His personal opinion was that a dividend should be declared.

It was moved by Mr. Nugent, seconded by Mr. Bradburn, that the shareholders endorse the proposal of the directors to pay a dividend of 5 per cent.—Carried.

On motion of Mr. Bradburn, seconded by Mr. Nugent, the old Board of Directors was re-elected.

On the chairman asking if anyone had any suggestions to offer, Mr. Glover asked if it could not be possible to have a special room for senior players of the Peterborough Hockey Club. Owing to lack of accommodation the senior players did not get the attention which was their due. In reply, the President remarked that the matter would be brought to the attention of the directors and anything advisable done which might add to the comfort of their patrons.

At a subsequent meeting of the directors, Messrs. H. R. H. Kenner, Geo. Morrow, J. S. Knapman, A. H. Stratton, Jas. Hamilton and W. H. Hall; Mr. A. H. Stratton was re-elected President, Mr. W. H. Hill, Vice-President, and Mr. James Hamilton asked to continue in the capacity of Secretary-Treasurer for a while. Mr. Hamilton declined to accept the position for the current year.

A PROGRAMME OF ATHLETICS

Will Form Part of the Entertainment for Monday at Y. M. C. A.

Another of the many features of the Y.M.C.A. at home on Monday evening, April 18th, will be the programme in the gym. The medals won in the different contests during the past season will be presented by Mr. Connal, chairman of the Physical Committee.

The other events are assault at arms, Sergt.-Major Brittain vs. Sergt. Sturgeon, basket ball game, Athletics, city champions, vs. Brownies, the Provincial boys champions, apparatus work, by leaders in senior squad. Wrestling — Robert G. Long, vs. A. C. Yokom. C. Graham, referee.

PETERBOROUGH TO PLAY INTERMEDIATE.

Will Enter a Team in the Intermedite C. L. A. this Year.

A meeting of the Athletic Lacrosse Club executive was held last night in Dr. Wightman's office, when it was decided to change the name of the club to the Peterborough Club, and it was also decided to place the team in the intermediate series of the C. L. A. this season. It is expected that Ottawa, Lindsay and Belleville will also place teams in the intermediate series in the district.

The colours of the club will be the same as those worn by the hockey team last season, dark blue and white.

FOOTBALL CLUB WILL HOLD CONCERT

In the S. O. E. Hall on Wednesday, April 27th.

An enthusiastic meeting of the Old Country Wanderers' Football Club was held in the Crown Hotel last night, and about twenty members were present. Considerable business of importance was transacted, and three new members enrolled.

It was decided to give a concert in the Sons of England Hall on Wednesday, April 27th. Rev. J. C. Davidson has kindly consented to act as chairman. An interesting musical and literary programme will be provided.

It was also decided to issue a challenge to the Quaker Football Club to play a match on May 24th at the Driving Park, the prize to be a new ball. A formal challenge will be issued later.

Practices will be held to-morrow evening and on Saturday afternoon at the Driving Park, and all members are requested to meet at the Crown Hotel at 6 p.m., to-morrow and 2.30 p.m., on Saturday.

FOOTBALL.

A meeting of the Y.M.C.A. Football Club is called for Saturday evening, April 16th, at 7 o'clock. A full attendance is requested. 2d

APRIL WEDDING.

Mr. Wm. Fredenburg Married Yesterday to Miss Mary Griffin.

A quiet but pretty wedding was that which took place yesterday afternoon at 4.30, at the residence of Mr. Charles Griffin, 257 Stewart street, when his eldest daughter, Mary, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. Wm. Fredenburg, of town, by the Rev. J. Bastow.

The bride was given away by her father, while Miss Pallon, cousin of the bride, played the wedding march. The groom was supported by Mr. Jack Hardwick, while Miss Bertha Griffin assisted the bride. After the ceremony the guests repaired to the dining room where a beautiful repast was served. There were about thirty guests present, among whom was Mr. Bernie Griffin, of Detroit, and Mr. E. and Miss Eva Wylie of Sault Ste. Marie. Among the numerous presents was a beautiful silver butter dish from the employees of Mrs. Gemmell, with whom the bride had been associated with for a number of years. The groom also was the recipient of a handsome present from the Baraca Bible Class of which he is a member. The happy couple will take up residence in town.—Com.

TO-MORROW'S CASES AT POLICE COURT

Shold be Interesting Armstrong's Case Comes up.

The Police Court calendar to-morrow should be interesting to say the least. Five boys who have been, so it is charged, firing off a revolver in a lane in the Fifth Ward, were served with summons' this morning by P. C. Adams, and will be arraigned in the morning before the Magistrate.

William Armstrong, alias Bradley, alias Steele, the alleged bogus St. Louis Exposition Employment Agent, will also stand his trial. His eight day remand expires to-day and Detective Parkinson will unfold Armstrong's scheme. The detective told an Examiner reporter to-day that he was confident of getting a conviction against Armstrong this time. D. O'Connell defends the prisoner.

ICE DAMAGES FLOATING BRIDGE.

Pigeon Creek Struction is now Impassible.

A farmer from the Pigeon Creek region who was in town to-day gives the information that the floating bridge at the Creek has taken its usual spring jaunt from its anchorage. The informant states that at one end of the swing, the bridge has drifted 16 feet from its proper position, while at another place there is a gap of 8 feet. The ice there is still 8 to 10 inches thick, and when the full quantity of ice comes down, it is thought that further injury will be wrought. The bridge is 4,400 feet long.

BOY FELL FROM DELIVERY CART.

A Wheel Passed Over his leg but he was not Hurt.

George, the five year old son of Dr. W. H. Blanchard, a veterinary surgeon residing at 213 Charlotte street narrowly escaped serious injury by being run over by a delivery wagon. This morning he jumped on to a grocery wagon for a ride. When opposite the Y.M.C.A. the boy fell off and a wheel of the wagon passed over his leg. The boy was taken into a nearby house, but it was found that he had fortunately not been seriously injured.

THE TRANSCONTINENTAL.

Hon. Mr. Lemieux on the Grand Trunk Pacific Contract.

Ottawa, April 13.—Opposition speakers occupied most of the time yesterday on the protracted debate on the Transcontinental Railway bill. The only Ministerial speech was that of Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, who brilliant young Solicitor-General. The member for Gaspe made a strong defence of the bill, replete with evidences of remarkable magnetism and logic. He put it the proposition as a great national enterprise, and showed the inconsistency of the Opposition in having promised the electors of Quebec in the recent by-elections that the Conservatives, if returned to power, would build the eastern section. The Opposition speakers of the day were Mr. George Taylor, Conservative Whip, Mr. T. C. Casgrain, Dr. Daniel, the new member for St. John, and Mr. E. Seymour Gourley. Mr. Gourley advanced no very serious argument against the bill, but spoke in his usual entertaining style.

The Yukon Concessions.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier promised Mr. R. L. Borden an answer to-day to a question as to when the report of the commissioners who investigated charges respecting Yukon concessions might be expected.

Hon. Wm. Paterson informed Mr. Borden that the consting privileges accorded American vessels from Vancouver and Victoria in the Yukon trade were renewed from year to year by Order-in-Council. The Opposition leader asked that the Order-in-Council and the correspondence be laid on the table.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier promised to take Mr. Monk's representations concerning the floods at Verdun, Jacques Cartier County, which caused damages of $200,000 into consideration.

STURGEON FALLS SCHOOLS.

S. H. Blake As Counsel Is Prepared to Carry Case to Privy Council.

Toronto, April 13.—A writ was issued yesterday morning at the instance of Alvin A. Beach of Sturgeon Falls on behalf of his fellow ratepayers in the School Board case.

The writ asks either for a declaration that the agreement entered into between the Public School Board of Sturgeon Falls and the Separate School Board on the 22nd day of June, 1898, is void as being contrary to the provisions of the statutes, or "for a judgment rescinding and setting aside the said agreement as being unjust, illegal, improvident, contrary to public policy and in derogation of the rights of the ratepayers who are Public School supporters in the said section."

S. H. Blake, K.C. has been retained as counsel, and is prepared to carry the case to the Privy Council.

IS NO LONGER A DEATH SENTENCE

Bright's Disease Again Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Miss Johann Mayor, Given Up by Two Doctors, is Again a Strong Healthy Girl.

Lochiel, Glengarry Co., Ont., April 13—(Special).—That Bright's Disease has come within the reach of Medical Science and is no longer on the list of incurable diseases is again proven in the case of Miss Johann Mayor, of this place. In an interview Miss Mayor says:

"I had Bright's Disease in its worst stages and had to give up a profitable position with a corset firm. Two doctors whom I consulted gave me up, telling me I had let the disease go too far. I spent a fortune with the doctors, besides going to Caledonian Springs each summer, but no good resulted, and I began to think I could not endure life much longer. It was then I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills, and it is owing to them entirely that I am at work to-day, a strong healthy girl. It took eight boxes in all to complete the cure but I did not take the first two boxes regularly as I had no faith in them. You may be sure in future I will never be without Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure Bright's Disease. How sure it is they will cure all the earlier stages of Kidney Disease.

Man Versus Woman.

The old question of the relative status of the sexes is discussed by William K. Hill in The Westminster Review Mr Hill's article opens with the question, "Do the achievements of woman now equal those of man?" In answering the question he considers the leading characteristics of reason, imagination, creative initiative, emotion, courage, moral stability, truth, strength and endurance.

Reason is equally the characteristic of both sexes, but its derivatives, reasonableness and reasoning, are said to be more strongly marked in man than in woman. Man usually thinks before he acts. Woman is inclined to act often before she thinks. In the matter of imagination, as manifested objectively in its works, the only form in which we can estimate it, woman cannot at present set anything against such male achievements as the Iliad, the Divina Commedia, Hamlet, Faust, the Venus of Milo, Tannhauser, or the Choral Symphony, to cite only a few leading examples. In the closely allied quality of initiative the weakness of woman is loudly asserted by man, and it is difficult to cite any considerable number of women who have initiated and shaped with creative touch great works or great movements.

The superiority of woman is conceded in the qualities of courage, moral stability, mental endurance and truth, but the alleged supremacy of the sex in physical strength and endurance is denied.

RAILWAY TAX BILL

Commission to Gather Information—Mr. Pettypiece's Bill.

AID TO THE ALGOMA CENTRAL

Speeches By Mr. Whitney and Attorney-General Gibson—Latter Says the Security Is Ample and That the Wages Will Be Refunded By the Reorganized Company—Lieut.-Governor's Disclaimer.

Toronto, April 13.—The Legislature spent all yesterday afternoon discussing the report of the select committee on Mr. Pettypiece's railway taxation bill, recommending the appointment of a commission to gather information upon the subject. When the report was presented Mr. Clark (Bruce) moved that it be not received, but he referred back to the committee, with instructions to incorporate the whole of Mr Pettypiece's bill. This justified the criticism of the Premier that the Opposition were merely trying to gain a party advantage in connection with the bill. Mr. Pettypiece had proposed the formation of a Provincial Board of Assessors. The Royal Commission on assessment had embodied a similar provision in their recommendations, but the House's special committee had rejected it. Mr. Hoyle and other Conservative members of that committee spoke and voted against the commissioners' proposal, and yet in the House voted in favor of a similar proposal. Mr. Carscallen (Hamilton), however, refused to stultify himself, in spite of the promptings of some of his party friends.

Report of Committee.

"It is evident that the railways of Ontario could bear additional taxation without interfering with their efficiency, and without imposing upon them burdens disproportionate to those imposed under the assessment act on real estate generally or upon other corporations. The committee had observed that under the assessment act now before the House municipal corporations have been authorized to tax certain portions of railway property heretofore exempt. The subcommittee has also noticed that under the bill introduced by the Provincial Treasurer the Provincial tax upon railways has been greatly increased, and, as the committee is advised, will yield a revenue of about $200,000 per annum, as against $35,000 received under the old rate. So far no legislation has been suggested, except in this measure, which would tax, either by municipalities or Province, United States railways with running powers over Ontario railways, or the great railway car-loaning corporations or other corporations owning their own cars, which, the committee believes, use the Ontario railway system for the transportation of freight along Canadian railways east and west.

Tax Foreign Cars.

"The committee is of opinion that legislation should be provided whereby car-loaning corporations aforesaid and other corporations not coming within the province of other legislation should be made to contribute to the Provincial revenue, and to that end, if practicable, legislation might be introduced this session. As to the methods to be adopted in the early future for the purpose of taxing railway corporations the subcommittee is of opinion that, instead of now appointing a commission specially for that purpose, the matter of railway taxation might be entrusted to a Provincial commission that would take into consideration such questions as to bonding powers and capitalization, floating of debts and application by municipalities for legislation and possibly the approval of all bylaws by municipalities purporting to confer monopolistic rights on public utilities; such commission to have the power to advise upon the terms of such bylaws and generally for matters similar to certain State commissioners of the United States or the local Government Board of Enquiry of the Mother Country. It would be the duty of such commission, among other matters, to make all necessary enquiries regarding corporations that were subject to municipal and Provincial taxation, and particularly the basis of the taxation of railways.

Commission Recommended.

"The committee therefore recommends that in the meantime a commission of three persons be appointed to collect information on the various phases of railway legislation in force in the United States, and also statistics as to the value of railway property owned and operated or used in this Province, in order that the Legislature may be informed whether any other basis than that which now prevails in Ontario might not be more equitable, so far as the railways are concerned, and might not yield a more generous revenue to the Province."

No Morning Sessions Yet.

It was decided that instead of a morning session the House would meet at 2 p.m. on Thursday. The session will last well into next next week.

The Premier on Monday evening drew the attention of the House to this paragraph in The News. It is understood that the Lieut.-Governor is of opinion that the best solution of the present political deadlock is to let the people decide. He stated that at the request of the Lieut.-Governor and on his behalf he wished to deny the statement that His Honor had expressed any opinion as to the political situation.

Separate School Law.

Hon R. Harcourt has introduced a bill to make minor amendments in the Separate School act. Public School Boards have power to dissolve sections made up of parts from different municipalities. Separate School Boards have not this power, and the bill proposes to give them the same power to alter and dissolve sections.

The Soo Guarantee.

The debate on the "Soo" guarantee was continued by Mr. Whitney and Hon. Mr. Gibson. Mr. Whitney objected to the principle of assisting industrial concerns. The Attorney-General in the course of an able address pointed out that the security is ample and that when the plan is adopted the amounts of wages advanced the workmen will be repaid to the bank by the Reorganized Company. Mr. Powell of Ottawa, will have the floor this afternoon.

Mr. Whitney Opposes Aid to Soo.

When the House resumed in the evening Mr. Whitney resumed the debate on the second reading of the bill to aid the Algoma Central Railway, moved by the Premier on Friday. He spoke for an hour, and opposed the measure first on the ground that it was not the duty of the Government to become a party to a business enterprise, and, second, because it would be establishing a precedent whereby any struggling enterprise would have a right to come to the Provincial Treasury for aid.

Everyone, he began, was interested in the Soo industries. It had come to his knowledge from many different sources that it was said that there was antagonism on the Opposition side of the House to those industries. Nothing could be farther from the truth. Premier Ross' rosy pictures of the condition of things at the Soo took away his principal argument. He had said there was no possible danger to the Province of loss. If that was so there could not be a stern necessity for aid.

Justifiable Measure.

Attorney-General Gibson followed. The measure was justifiable as a measure that had been the Government policy for the last quarter of a century in the matter of the aid to railways. Not an acre of land, he declared, had been handed over, and would not be until the two million guarantee was wiped out. The Government was only proceeding along the old lines of aiding railways.

To sell the industries under the hammer at bed rock value was to destroy all the interest of shareholders and creditors. Would any business man say it would be advantageous to sell under the hammer?

Mr. Carscallen: No.

Three Millions Now.

Continuing, Mr. Gibson combatted the statement of Mr. Whitney that there was no new money in the enterprise, and read various sums, either paid in or subscribed, amounting to $3,000,000. This was not a small amount of money. The scheme of reorganization had been based upon the idea that the pulp lands would be held by the Government. Some one had written the Attorney-General that the rails and fastenings of the road, if removed, would be worth $1,500,000, and he would give that much for the road.

Steel Rail Industry.

The importance of the steel rail industry was dwelt upon. There was a duty of $7 a ton on steel rails, and if the industry is resuscitated there will be business enough for the industry for the next five years through the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific and other railways under way.

The security was absolutely good. There was no doubt of that.

For Meritorious Conduct.

On March 16 at the Citadel, Quebec, Conductor J. H. Wood of the Ordnance Stores Corps and formerly Regimental Quartermaster Sergeant of the R. C. G. A., was presented with the military medal for meritorious conduct. The presentation was made by Col. J. F. Wilson, commander of the fortress, at a special parade of the R. C. G. A., the Ordnance Corps and the complement of the Canadian fishery fleet now undergoing instruction at the Citadel. Conductor Wood's military career has extended over a period of nearly 24 years, and during that time he has never been brought to "office" for any offence. He formerly lived in Toronto.

Mr. Henry Hedrick, South Woodslee, Ont., says that Doan's Kidney Pills are far ahead of doctor's medicine.

He writes: "I have tried Doan's Kidney Pills and can honestly say that I never used anything better. I was so bad with my kidneys I could hardly raise myself up without help but Doan's Kidney Pills cured me.

"My wife was always complaining of a lame back, and they completely cured her.

"Our son was also troubled with his kidneys and as your pills had done us so much good we got him to try them and they cured him as well. They are far ahead of doctor's medicine, and I advise a trial of Doan's Kidney Pills for all sufferers from kidney trouble."

Damage By the Rideau.

Merrickville, April 13.—Owing to the wash-out of a dam above Smith's Falls, the water and ice is doing a lot of damage in this neighborhood. Already one building has been totally demolished and the stone walls of a five-storey building so undermined as to cause a collapse. The damage to Government work is slight, but there is great danger that the north shore pier under the steel bridge will be carried away. If this goes there is no saying what results may be. The bulkheads are withstanding the terrible strain and have reached the limit of strength and the water is still rising.

Claim the Klondike.

Dawson, April 13.—Postal authorities in Washington, D.C., think they have jurisdiction over postal affairs in Dawson. Postmaster Hartman has just received a letter from the assistant postmaster-general of the United States scoring him for not complying with the regulations concerning American offices. Mr. Hartman would not be surprised if he should receive a letter from the same source telling him he is "retired" and that another good man will be here in short order to take his place.

Your System Demands Help.

Just Such Help as Can Best be Supplied by the Use of the Great Restorative.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Spring seems to be the time of year when the vitality of the human system is at its lowest ebb.

To most people the winter season is a trying time. Either as a result of colds or the effects of indoor life with poor ventilation or the use of artificial foods, the system gets run down and exhausted, the blood becomes thin and watery and the nerves play out.

Headache, sleeplessness, stomach troubles, loss of energy and ambition, feelings of discouragement and despondency, are among the symptoms which cause distress.

It doesn't do to neglect these warning notes. Your system needs help, and you cannot do better than call to your aid Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

If you have been reading the cases reported in the newspapers from day to day in which this great medicine has been instrumental in restoring health and strength to weak and suffering people you are no doubt already convinced as to its extraordinary medicinal properties.

Then why not make a test in your own case? You cannot possibly use preparation which is so certain to prove of lasting benefit.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box. 4

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Gradually the noise in the streets died away, the tread of feet, the rumbling of wheels, and the tinkle of car bells ceased, and not a sound was heard, save as the distant fire bells pealed forth their warning voices, or some watchman went hurrying by. The great city was asleep, and to Morris the silence brooding over the countless throng was deeper, more solemn, than the silence of the country, where nature gives her own mysterious notes and lullabies for her sleeping children.

Before his marriage, a jealous thought of Morris Grant had found a lodgment in Wilford's breast; but he had tried to drive it out, and fancied that he had succeeded, experiencing a sudden shock when he felt it lifting its green head, and poisoning his mind against the man who was doing for Katy only what a brother might do. He forgot that it was his own entreaties which kept Morris there away from his Silverton patients, who were missing him so much, and complaining of his absence. Jealous men never reason clearly, and in this case, Wilford did not reason at all, but jumped readily at his conclusion, calling to his aid as proof all that he had ever seen pass between Katy and her cousin. That Morris Grant loved Katy was, after a few moments' reflection, as fixed a fact in his mind, as that she lay there between them, moaning feebly as if about to speak. Years before, jealousy had made Wilford almost a mad-man, and it now held him again in its powerful grasp, whispering suggestions he would have spurned in a calmer frame of mind. There was a clenching of his hands, a knitting of his brows, and a gathering blackness in his eyes, as he listened while Katy, rousing partially from her lethargy, talked of the days when she was a little girl, and Morris had built the play-house for her by the brook, where the thorn-apples grew and the waters fell over the smooth white rocks.

"Take me back there," she said, "and let me lie on the grass, again. It is so long since I was there, and I've suffered so much since then. Wilford meant to be kind, but he did not understand or know how I loved the country with its birds and flowers, and the grass by the well, where the shadows come and go. I used to wonder where they were going, and one day when I watched them, I was waiting for Wilford and wondering if he would ever come again. Would it have been better if he never had?"

Wilford's body shook as he bent forward to listen, while Katy continued:

"Were there no Genevra, I should not think so, but there is, and yet Morris said that made no difference when I telegraphed for him to come and take me away."

"Do you think her dying?" Wilford asked, and Morris replied: "The look about the mouth and nose is like the look which so often precedes death."

And that was all they said until another hour went by when Morris's hand was laid upon the forehead and moved up under the golden hair where there were drops of perspiration.

"She is saved! thank God, Katy is saved!" was his joyful exclamation, and burying his face in his hands, he wept for a moment like a child.

On Wilford's face there was no trace of tears. On the contrary, he seemed hardened into stone, and in his heart fierce passions were contending for the mastery. What did Katy mean by sending for Morris to take her away? Did she send for him, and was that the cause of his being there? If so, there was something between the cousins more than mere friendship. The thought was a maddening tone. And, rising slowly at last, Wilford came round to Morris's side, and grasping his shoulder, said:

"Morris Grant, you love Katy Cameron."

Like the peal of a bell on the frosty air the words rang through the room, starting Morris from his bowed attitude, and for an instant curdling the blood in his veins, for he understood now the meaning of the look which had so puzzled him. In Morris's heart there was a moment's hesitancy to know just what to say—an ejaculatory prayer for guidance — and then lifting up his head his calm blue eyes met the eyes of black unflinchingly as he replied:

"I have loved her always."

A blaze like sheet lightning shot from beneath Wilford's eyelashes, and a taunting sneer curled his lip as he said:

"You, a saint, confess to this?"

"Should my being what you call a saint prevent my confessing what I did?"

"No, not the confession, but the fact," Wilford answered, savagely. "How do you reconcile your acknowledged love for Katy with the injunctions of the Bible whose doctrines you indorse?"

"A man cannot always control his feelings, but he can strive to overcome them and put them aside. One does not sin in being tempted, but in listening to the temptation."

"Then according to your reasoning you have sinned, for you not only have been tempted, but have yielded to temptation." Wilford retorted, with a sinister look of exultation in his black eyes.

For a moment Morris was silent while a struggle of some kind seemed going on in his mind, and then he said:

"I never thought to lay open to you a secret which, after myself, is, I believe, known only to one living being."

"And that one—is—is Katy?" Wilford exclaimed, his voice hoarse with passion, and his eyes flashing with fire.

"No, not Katy. She has no suspicion of the pain which, since I saw her made another's, has eaten into my heart, making me grow old so fast, and blighting my early manhood."

Something in Morris's tone and manner made Wilford relax his grasp upon the arm, and sent him back to his chair, while Morris continued:

"Most men would shrink from talking to a husband of the love they bore his wife, and an hour ago I should have shrunk from it too, but you have forced me to it, and now you must listen while I tell you of my love for Katy. It began longer ago than she can remember—began when she was my baby sister, and I hushed her in my arms to sleep, kneeling by her cradle and watching her with a feeling I have never been able to define. She was in all my thoughts, her face upon the printed page of every book I studied, and her voice in every strain of music I heard. Then when she grew older, I used to watch the frolicsome child by the hour, building castles of the future, when she would be a woman, and I a man, with a man's right to win her. I know that she shielded me from many a snare into which young men are apt to fall, for when the temptation was greatest, and I was at its verge, a thought of her was sufficient to lead me back to virtue. I carried her in my heart across the sea, and said when I go back I will ask her to be mine. I went back, but at my first meeting with Katy after her return from Cannington, she told me of you, and I knew then that hope for me was gone. God grant that you may never experience what I experienced on that day which made her your wife, and I saw her go away. It seemed almost as if God had forgotten me as the night after the bridal I sat alone at home, and met that dark hour of sorrow. But God was very merciful and sent me work which took up all my time, and drove me away from my own pain to soothe the pain of others. When Katy came to us last fall, there was an hour of trial when faith in God grew weak, and I was tempted to question the justice of His dealing with me. But that too past, and in my love for your child I forgot the mother in part, looking upon her as a sister rather than the Katy I had loved so well.

Morris paused a moment, while Wilford said: "She spoke of telegraphing for you. Why was that, and when?"

Thus interrogated, Morris told of the message which had brought him to New York, and narrated as cautiously as possible the particulars of the interview which followed.

Morris's manner was that of a man who spoke with perfect sincerity, and it carried conviction to Wilford's heart, disarming him for a time of the fierce anger and resentment he had felt while listening to Morris's story. Acting upon the good impulse of the moment, he arose, and offering his hand to Morris, said:

"Forgive me that I ever doubted you. It was natural that you should come, but foolish in Katy to send or think Genevra is living. I have seen her grave myself. I know that she is dead. Did Katy name any one whom she believe to be Genevra?"

"No one. She merely said she had seen the original of the picture," Morris replied.

"A fancy—a mere whim," Wilford muttered to himself, as, greatly disquieted and terribly humbled, he paced the room moodily, trying not to think hard thoughts either against his wife or Dr. Grant, who, feeling that it would be pleasanter for Wilford if he were gone, suggested returning to Silverton at once, inasmuch as the crisis was past and Katy out of danger. There was a struggle in Wilford's mind as to the answer he should make to this suggestion, but at last he signified his willingness for the doctor to leave when he thought best.

It was broad day when Katy woke, so weak as to be unable to turn her head upon the pillow, but in her eyes the light of reason was shining, and she glanced wonderingly first at Helen, who had come in, and then at Wilford, as if trying to comprehend what had happened.

"Have I been sick?" she asked in a whisper, and Wilford, bending over her, replied: "Yes, very sick for nearly two whole weeks—ever since I left home that morning, you know?"

"Yes," and Katy shivered a little.

"Yes, I know. But where is Morris. He was here the last I can remember."

Wilford's face grew dark at once, and stepping back as Morris came in, he said: "She asks for you." Then with a rising feeling of resentment he watched them, while Morris spoke to Katy, telling her she must not allow herself in any way to be excited.

"Have I been crazy? Have I talked much?" she asked; and when Morris replied in the affirmative, she said: "Of whom have I talked most?"

"Of Genevra," was the answer, and Katy continued: "Did I mention any one else?"

Morris guessed of whom she was thinking, and answered indifferently: "You spoke of Miss Hazelton in connection with the baby, but that was all."

Katy was satisfied, and closing her eyes fell away to sleep again, while Morris made his preparations for leaving. It hardly seemed right for him to go just then, but the only one who could have kept him maintained a frigid silence with regard to a longer stay, and so the first train which left New York for Springfield carried Dr. Grant, and Katy was without a physician.

Wilford had hoped that Mrs. Lennox, too, would see the propriety of accompanying Morris, but she would not leave Katy, and Wilford was fain to submit to what he could not help. No explanation whatever had he given to Mrs. Lennox or Helen with regard to Genevra. He was too proud for that, but his mother had deemed it wise to smooth the matter over as much as possible, and enjoin upon them both the necessity of secrecy.

"When I tell you that neither my husband nor daughters know it, you will understand that I am greatly in earnest in wishing it kept," she said. "It was a most unfortunate affair, and though the divorce is, of course, to be lamented, it is better that she died. We never could have received her as our equal."

"Was anything the matter except that she was poor?" Mrs Lennox asked, with as much dignity as was in her nature to assume.

"Well, no. She had a good education, I believe, and was very pretty; but it makes trouble always where there is a great inequality between a husband's family and that of his wife."

Poor Mrs. Lennox understood this perfectly, but she was too much afraid of the great lady to venture a reply, and a tear rolled down her cheek as she wet the napkin for Katy's head, and wished she had back again the daughter whose family the Camerons despised. Of course Wilford chafed and fretted at what he could not help, making himself so generally disagreeable that Helen at last suggested returning home. There was a faint remonstrance on his part, but Helen did not waver in her decision, and the next day was fixed upon for her departure.

"You don't know how I dread your going, or how wretched I shall be without you," Katy said, when for a few moments they were alone. "Everything which once made me happy has been removed or changed. Baby is dead, and Wilford, oh! Helen I sometimes wish I had not heard of Genevra, for I am afraid it can never be with us as it was once; I have not the same trust in him, and he seems so changed."

As well as she could, Helen comforted her sister, and commending her to One who would care for her far more than earthly friends could do, she bade her good-bye, and with her mother went back to Silverton.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

Wilford was in a most unhappy frame of mind. He had been humbled to the very dust, and it was Katy who had done it—Katy, towards whom his heart kept hardening as he thought over all the past. What right had she to go to his mother's after having once declined; or, being there, what right had she to listen and thus learn the secret he would almost have died to keep; or, having learned it, why need she have been so much excited, and sent for Dr. Grant to tell her if she were really a wife, and if not to take her away? That was the point which hurt him most, for added to it was the galling fact that Morris Grant loved his wife, and was undoubtedly more worthy of her than himself.

"She had no right to complain of me," he thought, forgetting the time when he had been guilty of a similar offence in a more aggravated form. He could not reason upon anything naturally, and matters grew daily worse, while Katy's face grew whiter and her voice sadder in its tone.

When the Lenten days came on, oh how Katy longed to be in Silverton—to kneel again in its quiet church, and offer up her penitential prayers with the loved ones at home. At last she ventured to ask Wilford if she might go, her spirits rising when he did not refuse her request at once, but asked:

"Whom do you wish to see the most?"

His black eyes seemed reading her through, and something in their expression brought to her face the blush he construed according to his jealousy, and when she answered: "I wish to see them all," he retorted:

"Say, rather, you wish to see that doctor, who has loved you so long, and who but for me would have asked you to be his wife!"

"What doctor, Wilford? whom do you mean?" she asked, and Wilford replied:

"Dr. Grant, of course. Did you never suspect it?"

"Never," and Katy's face grew very white, while Wilford continued: "I had it from his own lips: he sitting on one side of you and I upon the other. I so forgot myself as to charge him with loving you, and he did not deny it, but confessed as pretty a piece of romance as I ever read, except that according to his story, it was a one-sided affair confined wholly to himself. You never dreamed of it, he said."

"Never, no never," Katy said, panting for her breath, and remembering suddenly many things which confirmed what she had heard.

"Poor Morris, how my thoughtlessness must have wounded him," she murmured, and then all the pent up passion in Wilford's heart burst out in an impetuous storm.

He did not charge his wife directly with returning Morris's love; but he said she was sorry she had not known it earlier, asking her pointedly if it were not so, and pressing her for an answer, until the bewildered creature cried out:

"Oh, I don't know. I never thought of it before."

"But you can think of it now," Wilford continued, his cold, icy tone making Katy shiver as, more to herself than to him, she whispered:

"A life at Linwood with him would be perfect rest, compared with this."

Wilford had goaded her on to say that which roused him to a pitch of frenzy.

"You can go to your rest at Linwood as soon as you like, and I will go my way," he whispered hoarsely, and believing himself the most injured man in existence, he left the house, and Katy heard his step, as it went furiously down the steps. For a time she sat, stunned with what she had heard, and then there came stealing into her heart a glad feeling that Morris deemed her worthy of his love when she had so often feared the contrary.

"Poor Morris," she kept repeating, while little throbs of pleasure went dancing through her veins, and the world was not half so dreary for knowing he had loved her. Towards Wilford, too, her heart went out in a fresh gush of tenderness, for she knew how one of his jealous nature must have suffered.

(To be Continued.)

Brain Weights.

Professor Marchand of Marburg has accumulated the largest number of brain weights ever published. He gives a thorough analysis of 1,169 cases. He says he finds the average weight of the brain at birth of a male child is 360 grams and of a female child 353 grams. The maximum brain weight is usually attained about the twentieth year, when the male's average is about 1,100 grams. The female maximum is usually reached about the seventeenth year, when the average is 1,275 grams.

The Modern Dandy.

Lord Arthur Hill, says a London cable, is anxious to relieve the ordinary sombreness of the masculine grab. He appeared at a public function the other day wearing light check trousers and a cutaway black coat of original style. In the waistcoat bright crimson was the predominating hue, while across its wide expanse he wore a large watch chain. A black and white tie of ample proportions was adorned by a turquoise and diamond pin.

Tortured with Pain.

Too Weak to Work.

ULCERS, BOILS AND PIMPLES ALL OVER HER BODY

Such was the condition of Mrs. Samuel Deitz, Zurich, Ont.

She happily found relief from her terrible suffering by using

Burdock Blood Bitters.

A remedy without a rival for the cure of all diseases and troubles arising from bad blood. A record extending over a quarter of a century and thousands of testimonials will prove this. Mrs. Deitz writes: "Too weak to work, tortured with the pain of ulcers, boils and pimples all over my body, especially on my face. I had almost made up my mind to give up trying to have them cured. I was ashamed to have any person come to see me, my face was in such a terrible state. I tried everything I could think of but got worse and worse. I was then led to try Burdock Blood Bitters and was surprised at the wonderful change the first bottle made. Altogether I took seven bottles and am now completely cured and am in perfect health again. I feel that B.B.B. saved my life."

Thousands of women who have suffered from backache, headache, and other consequences of womanly disease, have been made well women by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It establishes regularity, dries unhealthy drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.

"I cannot say enough in praise of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription as it has done me so much good," writes Miss Henry Harrell, of Tarboro, N. C., Box 15. "I was swollen so I could hardly walk when I began taking the 'Favorite Prescription.' I also had uterine trouble. I could neither eat nor sleep only as I was under the influence of opium. Tried four different doctors and they all failed to do me any good, so one of my friends recommended your 'Favorite Prescription' to me and I took only three bottles and am now well and hearty. GOOD BLOOD IS NO GOOD UNLESS CIRCULATED

A Sick Man mistakes his illness, or his Doctor does

He shows symptoms of consumption, or dyspepsia, or what not, because improper blood nourishment of lungs or liver has brought them on. In such cases look to the heart; unless it pumps rich red blood through the system, your specific doesn't reach the spot.

Dr. Agnew's Heart Cure sends the blood coursing through the veins as nature intended. It heals the heart and thus helps the health of every organ.

REV. L. W. SHOWERS, of Eldertown, Pa., writes:— "For many years I suffered with organic heart disease. I have tried many physicians and taken numberless remedies. I purchased a bottle of Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart and received almost instant relief. The choking, beating, thumping and palpitation have now almost entirely disappeared. The remedy is wonderful."

SINFUL HABITS IN YOUTH

MAKE NERVOUS, WEAK, DISEASED MEN.

THE RESULT of ignorance and folly in youth, overexertion of mind and body induced by lust and exposure are constantly wrecking the lives and future happiness of thousands of promising young men. Some fade and wither at an early age, at the blossom of manhood, while others are forced to drag out a weary, fruitless and melancholy existence. Others reach matrimony but find no solace or comfort there. The victims are found in all stations of life—the farm, the office, the workshop, the pulpit, the trades and the professions. Nervous Debility and Seminal Weakness are guaranteed cured by our New Method Treatment or No Pay. You run no risk. 25 years in Detroit. Bank security.

CURED WHEN ALL ELSE FAILED. No names used without written consent.

"I am 33 years of age and married. When young I led a gay life. Early indiscretions and later excesses made trouble for me. I became weak and nervous. My kidneys became affected and I feared Bright's Disease. Married Life was unsatisfactory and my home unhappy. I tried everything—all failed till I took treatment from Drs. Kennedy & Kergan. Their New Method built me up mentally, physically and sexually. I feel and act like a man in every respect. They treated me six years ago. They are honest, skilful and responsible financially, so why patronize Quacks and Fakirs when you can be cured by reliable doctors."—W. A. Belton.

Britain's Unchallenged Position.

It was in the eighteenth century that the naval power of Britain was revived in the victories of admirals like Rooke, Hawke, and Howe. Even then it was not quite so assured, for during the war of American Independence the fleets of France and Spain for some weeks rode unopposed in the English Channel, while the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorkton was undoubtedly due to the insufficiency of the fleet. But since the days of Rodney, Jervis, Duncan, and Nelson, Great Britain's naval supremacy has never been challenged, even in the second war with America, and has been conspicuous in the Crimean war, when it enabled us to send our transports unopposed to the Black Sea, and notably in the recent war in South Africa, in which without difficulty we sent to the distant scene of war the largest British army that has ever been mustered. No doubt this naval superiority is mainly due to the insular position of Britain, which has been described by Shakespeare as giving her in the sea at once a wall and a moat. The experience of centuries have proved that the defence of such a wall by a strong navy is the best national policy, and in following the British example, Japan, which is also a group of islands, has taken a course which present events seem amply to justify.

PETERBORO' GOODS IN THE OLD LAND

Cereal Company's Products on Sale in Every Store.

MR. WILLIAM BATES' TRIP.

Former Peterboro' Man Just Returned from a Visit to Cornwall Some Interesting Items Learned from Him.

Mr. William Bates of Hampton, was in town yesterday, paying a visit to his sons, Messrs. Bates Bros., the bakers. Mr. Bates has just returned from a two months visit to his old home in Cornwall England, and remained over in town a day to visit his sons, who conduct the business owned by their father. The elder Mr. Bates, who is an old resident of Peterborough, having come here in 1867, Confederation year, from England, and having lived in this vicinity ever since, went a short time ago to pay a visit to his old home in Cornwall.

Mr. Bates said that he had enjoyed a very pleasant visit to the old sod. He found that his 37 years 'absence had wrought many changes, particularly in the inhabitants of the old land, but the places visited presented much the same appearance as they did when he left them, nearly 40 years ago. His trip has evidently agreed with him as he looks well, and talks most interestingly of the visit just concluded.

Mr. Bates arrived in Halifax on Friday by the steamer Canada, which brought over about 1100 passengers, about half of whom were Englishmen coming to Canada to make their homes. All of these, as far as Mr. Bates could learn, were well-to-do, and would, he should judge, make excellent citizens. The places visited by Mr. Bates were Bodmin, county town of Cornwall, Touro, Falmouth, St. Columb, Newton Abbott, Padston, Wadebridge, New Quay and Torquay, the latter two towns being noted watering places. He also passed through and spent some time in London and Liverpool, and from the latter point he sailed for home.

In connection with his visit to St Columb he tells of an interesting incident. An ancient custom in that town is celebrated each year, a day known as St. Columb or Hurling Day. On this day a game known as Hurling is played, participated in by almost the entire male population, and although the game is dangerous both to life and property, the custom is so ancient that the police do not interfere with the sport. A large round silver ball is the implement with which the game is played. The ball is thrown by the players of the contesting sides into goals representing both sides, and in throwing the ball little or no attention is given to whether it is in danger of inflicting injury to life or property. At the conclusion of the game the both parties repair to a hotel where a large tub of beer is purchased, and the silver ball immersed in the beer, after which the liquid, then known as "silver beer," is drank. Mr. Bates considered himself fortunate in being there to see this game, of which he had read frequently.

He found a lamentable lack of knowledge among the average Cornishmen, about Canada. They seem to have a difficulty in differentiating between the United States and Canada. Both are America to them, and they seem to find great difficulty in believing that Canada is really a part of the British Empire. Mr. Bates conducted a campaign of education among the numerous friends that he visited while on his trip, and as a result, those to whom he talked have a much clearer idea of Canada than they had previous to his visit.

He saw great quantities of foreign goods displayed, which was in some cases rather surprising. For instance American hardware and cutlery was largely sold, notwithstanding England's long reported supremacy in that line.

It was pleasing to Mr. Bates to see that Canadian butter took a high place in the English market, and was quoted at the same price as the Danish product. Canadian apples are in high favour in England, and were sold at from three pence to six pence a pound, while Canadian cheese, which is sold here at wholesale at from 10 to 11 cents a pound is quoted in England at six pence, or 12 cents. A Peterborough industry, the Cereal Works, was well represented there. In every shop he saw the well known Quaker Oats for sale, and there was apparently a great demand for the goods. It was sold at the same price in that country as is asked for it here.

Mr. Bates left for his home in Hampton yesterday afternoon.

Health and Success.

Weakness and disease cause discouragement, failure and unhappiness, but with the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food there comes new life and vigour and energy, new hopes and new confidence, stronger determination to succeed, and the ability to apply one's self mentally and physically. Health and success go hand in hand. By restoring good health Dr. Chase's Nerve Food helps to success and happiness.

Church Creches.

In London and several other cities and towns in England the idea of creches in connection with churches has been adopted with splendid results. It is found that parents go to church together more frequently than would otherwise be the case, and that there is increased interest in the general work of the church. One of the class-rooms of the churches is used as a creche, and those in charge are the younger women of the congregations, who undertake the work in order to relieve the mothers.

People of This Place.

There are people in every town and village of this country who have been cured of itching, protruding and bleeding piles by the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Ask your friends about this great preparation; they can tell you of its great soothing, healing and antiseptic powers. More reputable people have endorsed Dr. Chase's Ointment than any preparation you can name.

LIEUTENANT AT A LEVEE.

Young Military Debutantee's First Bow to the King—Might Have Saved His Trepidation.

Just as a young debutante looks forward to her first drawing-room with feelings as much of nervous trepidation as of delight, so a young officer or lawyer fights more shy of his first levee than of facing an enemy in the field or conducting his first case in court, although naturally he feels proud of the prospect of coming individually under the eyes of his King.

I am not ashamed to confess that when some time ago, in all the glory of the full-dress uniform of a lieutenant of Yeomanry, I made my way on foot to St. James's Palace to be presented to His Majesty as one of his gallant soldiers, it was with a little internal quaking and an external trembling of the knees, which rather belied my brave appearance. I was just in time, as I neared the Palace, to see the King's equipage, with its escort of Life Guardsmen making a gallant show with their glistening helmets and nodding plumes, dash up through a roar of welcoming shouts from the crowds of curious sightseers, and to feel proudly that I, too, was a part, however insignificant, of the "show."

Ran Gauntlet of Crowds.

My own reception by the crowd, however, was not quite so cordial as that of the King, although one critic did exclaim, 'I say, Bill, don't 'e think 'e's a torf!' which, after all, was rather a dubious kind of a compliment. But a soldier of the King can afford to be criticised, I thought as, with the air of a field marshal, I run the gauntlet of the crowds and at last found myself safely landed within the palace walls.

And what a startling transformation it was from the dinginess of the world outside to the blaze of color and life and animation in which I found myself within the palace. Here were hundreds of men stretching away in a long vista as far as the eye could see, a river of moving colors as variegated as those of Joseph's coat and probably far more picturesque. They were men of all types and ages—a few generals, erect and still imposing in scarlet tunics, cocked hats, and plumes—men apparently old enough to have fought at Balaclava and Inkerman, and still ready if need be to take the field again; and rubbing shoulders with these grizzled veterans were dapper young subalterns of Guards as gaily attired as so many popinjays, and no doubt full of dreams of the day when they too, should wear a general's badge. Here are aides-de-camp in their richly embroidered tunics, gold aigrettes, plumed hats and gold sashes; Highland officers in tartan trews and feather bonnets; trim naval commanders in their more sober but most becoming blue and gold; officers of engineers and artillery, of cavalry and infantry of the line, Yeomen and volunteers—an epitome, in fact, of the British Army and all sporting their bravest colors.

A Brilliant Scene.

Dotted here and there in this gorgeous stream of color, slowly moving onward to the Throne Room, are the white wigs and black robes of lawyers fresh from the courts and their briefs, and come to pay homage to the King; men in the modest splendor of black velvet court suits, steel-looped cocked hats, and swords and buckles of steel; stray ministers of the Crown in gold-laced uniforms; scarlet-clad dignitaries of the Church; county lieutenants in silk-lined embroidered tunics, silver-laced trousers, and crimson and gold sashes; Chinamen, gorgeous in robes of silk and gold; picturesque Japanese; and turbaned Turks.

In my uniform of dark green I felt quite eclipsed by the blaze of color around and in front of me, as moving with the stream I found myself passing through room after room scanned by keen-eyed officials, on the lookout for anything irregular in dress, and the entrance to each room guarded by two gentlemen-at-arms ready to bar the entrance with a cord of silk if the pressure should become too great.

At last, after what seems hours of slow progression, I catch a distant glimpse of the Throne Room, voices which until now have been incessant become hushed, I clutch my ticket of presentation to make sure that I have still got it, and summon up my evaporating courage for the ordeal which is now near.

Catches Sight of the King.

A little later I find myself at the entrance to the Throne Room and catch sight of the King, in field marshal's uniform, standing on a raised platform with a brilliant group behind, to the right, and in front of him—Royal Princes and household officials in gorgeous uniforms. My name is announced in a clear, cultured voice—that of the Lord Chamberlain—and with a dazed feeling and a shakiness in the legs I walk forward, make a clumsy obeisance to the King, receive a gracious smile and a bow in turn, and somehow, before I realize that it can possibly be over, I have emerged from the room and find myself in a corridor outside.

After all, I thought, it was not very formidable, and I might just as well have saved myself all my trepidation. For a few moments I waited in the corridor, watching the steady flow from the Throne Room—the Army, the Navy, the Church, and the Law, Ministers and Attaches—and I could not help fancying that they all seemed as pleased as myself at having done homage to our gracious King, and that the ordeal was over.

Drawing Wire.

The art of drawing wire was not practiced until the fourteenth century, or introduced into England until the seventeenth century, all wire made previously having been made by hammering into rounded lengths narrow strips of metal cut from plates previously beaten out.

Misery in London.

Two slum officers of the Salvation Army in London recently found a girl cooking a cabbage stalk which she had picked up in the street as a meal for her father and mother, an infant and herself.

REASONS FOR THE SHUT-DOWN.

Woollen Mills Did Not Cater to the Canadian Trade.

Montreal Clothing Man Says Canada Woollen Mills Did Not Manufacture What the Trade Wanted.

Some additional information as to the reasons which led up to the closing down or selling of the mills of the Canada Woollen Company, is furnished in the special despatch from Montreal to the Toronto Star, which follows:—

"Montreal, April 13.—The manager of the Campbell Clothing Company, who were large buyers from the Canada Woollen Mills Company, when seen to-day, stated that the British preference had nothing to do with the closing down of the different mills of the company. It would not have made any difference if the company had the benefit of protection of 100 per cent. as they would have been obliged to close down anyway. They were not manufacturing what the trade wanted, and could not compete against the companies in Sheffield, Eng."

How to Ward Off an Attack of Rheumatism.

"For years when springtime came on and I went into gardening I was sure to have an attack of rheumatism and every attack was more severe than the preceding one," says Josie McDonald, of Man, Logan Co., West Va. "I tried everything with no relief whatever, until I procured a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, and the first application gave me ease and before the first bottle was used I felt like a newp erson. Now I feel that I am cured, but I always keep a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm in the house and when I feel any symptoms of a return I soon drive it away with one or two applications of this liniment. ANOTHER RUSSIAN DESTROYER SUNK.

Russian Disasters Continue—A Battleship Damaged.

FATE OF THE BESTRASHNI.

Battleship Pobleda of Russian Fleet Struck on a Mine, But was Able to Reach Port Arthur Without Loss of Life—Forty-Five Officers and Men Went Down with the Bestrashni.

St. Petersburg, April 15.—The official bulletin yesterday afternoon, conveying the intelligence of the loss of another torpedo boat destroyer and the accidental crippling of another battleship, was almost as severe a blow as the loss of the Petropavlovsk yesterday.

The Russian word in the text of the official despatch describing the accident to the Pobieda means either "mine" or "torpedo," but the qualifying verb indicate something moving towards the ship. This despatch puts an end to the idea prevailing here that there had been an engagement following the disaster to the Petropavlovsk.

Petropavlovsk Was Torpedoed.

London, April 15.—A news agency despatch from Port Arthur by way of St. Petersburg, says that after a fierce fight between torpedo boats on the night of April 12, the squadron went out in the morning in the roads and took up combat with fourteen large Japanese vessels. At 10.20 in the morning, as the result of an explosion, the battleship Petropavlovsk sank with her crew.

The Daily Mail's Che Foo correspondent declares that advices from both Russian and Japanese sources indicate that the battleship Petropavlovsk was torpedoed. Admiral Makaroff, the correspondent says, was enticed outside and the Japanese torpedo boat crept behind him, dealing the blow as he was nearing the harbor on the return.

More Russian Disasters.

St. Petersburg, April 15.—Rear-Admiral Prince Ouktomsky wired from Port Arthur yesterday, at 10 a.m., that the Bestrashni, one of the Russian torpedo boat destroyers sent out during the night to reconnoitre, became separated from the rest of the fleet, owing to the bad weather prevailing, was surrounded by Japanese torpedo boat destroyers and was sunk in the fight. Five men were saved. Forty-five officers and men perished.

Admiral Ouktomsky adds: "I have taken command provisionally of the fleet since the disaster to the Petropavlovsk. During some manoeuvring of the battleship squadron, the Pobieda struck against a mine amidships on the starboard side. She was able to regain port by herself. None on board of her was killed or wounded.

He also says the Petropavlovsk sank "in consequence of the explosion of a mine which she was manoeuvring in the Port Arthur roadstead in sight of the enemy's fleet."

Brief Japanese Report.

Tokio, April 15.—A brief report from Rear-Admiral Uriu of Wednesday's fighting off Port Arthur reached the Navy Department yesterday afternoon. It says Vice-Admiral Togo's fleet attacked Port Arthur in the morning and succeeded in sinking a battleship of the Petropavlovsk class and one torpedo boat destroyer. The Japanese sustained no losses. One Japanese was wounded.

Japanese Laid the Fatal Mine.

Che Foo, April 15.—It has been learned from Japanese sources here that the attack on the Russian Port Arthur fleet of Wednesday morning was planned and put into effect in the following manner: At daylight the Japanese torpedo boats made a demonstration before the port and at the same time laid mines across the outer entrance to the harbor. They then retired and joined the main squadron. The squadron then advanced, and as it drew near the Russian ships were seen coming out. The battleship Petropavlovsk struck one of the mines laid by the Japanese torpedo boats and was destroyed.

Accepted As An Accident.

Paris, April 15.—President Loubet yesterday morning telegraphed to Emperor Nicholas his profound condolences on the disaster to the Petropavlovsk and the death of Vice-Admiral Makaroff. This despatch, together with those of Emperor William and the King of Italy, sent yesterday, is regarded here as significant of the acceptance of the European Government that the sinking of the Petropavlovsk was due to an accident, and did not occur during a battle with the Japanese ships.

Requiem Mass For Makaroff.

St. Petersburg, April 15.—A requiem mass for the repose of the souls of Vice-Admiral Makaroff and the other officers and the men of the Petropavlovsk was celebrated at noon yesterday in the Admiralty church here. The Emperor entered last and alone. The grief felt by His Majesty was written on his face. Twenty thousand people were present.

Skrydloff Will Command.

St. Petersburg, April 15.—It has been definitely decided that Vice-Admiral Skrydloff, commander of the Black Sea fleet, will succeed the late Vice-Admiral Makaroff as commander-in-chief of the Russian naval forces in the Far East. Orders have been sent to Vice-Admiral Skrydloff to come to St. Petersburg for the purpose of receiving instructions after which he will leave immediately for the Far East.

Saved By a Buoy.

It is confirmed that Grand Duke Cyril's injuries consist of burns on the neck and legs. A private despatch to his father reports that the wounded officer is recovering. A life buoy was thrown to the Grand Duke by which he sustained himself in the water until picked up by one of the boats.

Artist and Journalist Drown.

St. Petersburg, April 15.—Vassili Verestchagin, the Russian painter, was Vice-Admiral Makaroff's guest on the Petropavlovsk. It is reported that he was lost with the ship.

Nicholas T. Kravtchenko, the well known Russian literary man, who was acting as correspondent for the Associated Press at Port Arthur, it is believed, went down with the Petropavlovsk. Telegrams to him remain unanswered.

The exact number of Vice-Admiral Makaroff's staff on board the Petropavlovsk when she sank is unknown. The Petropavlovsk had a complement of about 650, of which 52 were saved at last accounts.

Wirenius Turns Up.

Nyborg, Finland, April 15.—The Russian squadron, commanded by Admiral Wirenius, consisting of the battleship Oslibia, the protected cruiser Aurora, and the torpedo boat destroyers accompanying them, arrived here yesterday and anchored in the roads.

Another Fight On.

St. Petersburg, April 15.—(5.52 a.m.)—Rumors are current here that Vice-Admiral Togo sent in a number of steamers on the night of March 31 and succeeded in sinking several of them and in blockading the channel of Port Arthur. The rumors cannot be confirmed at this hour.

The date referred to by the correspondent in the above, March 31, is probably according to the old style, by which the event would have taken place on April 13, according to the new style calendar.

A German to Germans.

Berlin, April 15.—In the Reichstag yesterday Herr Bebel, the Socialist leader, declared that Germany's neutrality in the war in the Far East was not above doubt.

Immigrant Killed.

Ottawa, April 15.—By falling off a westbound train at Cobden yesterday morning a Scotch immigrant, supposedly Ernest H. J. Ballantyne, was instantly killed. The accident happened at 4 o'clock, and it is believed that the man was standing on one of the platforms and got jolted off. The train carried several hundred immigrants, of whom the deceased was one. He was not missed, however, by them.

DID MAKAROFF COMMIT SUICIDE?

A Despatch From Rome to this Effect Received To-Day.

A Conflicting Statement Concerning the Disaster—Russians Declare There was No Battle.

Special C. N. W. Despatch to the Examiner.

NO NAVAL ENGAGEMENT.

St. Petersburg, April 15. — The Naval Staff has received information concerning last night's rumour that the Japs had succeeded in blocking the entrance of the harbour of Port Arthur. At the Vladimir Palace this morning a reassuring telegram was received from Lisoyang, where the Grand Duke Cyril, has arrived with his brother Boris, that the Admirality authorizes the denial that Vice-Admiral Togo's claim that the Japs sunk the Petrosylovsk in a fight off Port Arthur. The officials declare positively that there was no naval engagement, excepting the torpedo boat destroyer fight.

A SENSATIONAL REPORT.

Rome, April 15. — The following cable despatch from Cheefoo has been received by the Agenzia Libera:—"The Russian and Japanese and Japanese fleets met on the morning of April 13th, eighteen miles off the harbour of Port Arthur. Admiral Makaroff, despite the advice of his captains in council, sought battle with the enemy. The Japanese completely surrounded the Russians, and the latter retreated. In the disorder consequent on entering the choked harbour, two Russian warships collided. The Petropavolsk was hit repeatedly by Japanese shells. Admiral Makaroff discovering the impossibility of saving his flagship, committed suicide by shooting himself with a revolver."

FIRING AT PORT ARTHUR.

Chefoo, April 15th. — Commodore Tsah, in command of the Chinese cruisers squadron, reports that he heard intermittent firing all yesterday in the direction of Port Arthur. It is the opinion here that the Japanese again bombarded the Russian Gibraltar.

ARCHBISHOP BOND, PRIMATE OF CANADA.

Was Appointed to That Position by House of Bishops To day.

(Special to the Examiner.)

Kingston, Ont., April 15. — Archbishop Bond, of Montreal, has been appointed acting Primate of all Canada by the House of Bishops, of the Church of England in Canada, now meeting here, pending final action in October next. The position became vacant through the death of Archbishop MacHray, of Rupert's Land. The new Primate is 89 years of age.

Marx Says He Shot.

Chicago, April 15.—A dramatic turn was given yesterday to the trial of Roeski, the car barn bandit. Another of the bandits, Gustav Marx, who is under sentence to be hanged next week, took the witness stand and swore that he, not Roeski, fired the fatal shot in the murder for which Roeski is on trial. The story of Marx was made more remarkable by the assertion that he was at the time of the murder trying to kill Roeski. The reason given by Marx for attempting thus to murder his confederate was that he was suspicious that Roeski would betray the other bandits to the police.

Miss M. Cartledge gives some helpful advice to young girls. Her letter is but one of thousands which prove that nothing is so helpful to young girls who are just arriving at the period of womanhood as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkam's Vegetable Compound too highly, for it is the only medicine I ever tried which cured me. I suffered much from my first menstrual period, I felt so weak and dizzy at times I could not pursue my studies with the usual interest. My thoughts became sluggish, I had headaches, backaches and sinking spells, also pains in the back and lower limbs. In fact, I was sick all over.

"Finally, after many other remedies had been tried, we were advised to get Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I am pleased to say that after taking it only two weeks, a wonderful change for the better took place, and in a short time I was in perfect health. I felt buoyant, full of life, and found all work a pastime. I am indeed glad to tell my experience with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for it made a different girl of me. Yours very truly, MISS M. CARTLEDGE, 633 Whitehall St., Atlanta, Ga."

At such a time, the grandest aid to nature is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It prepares the young system for the necessary changes, and is the surest and most reliable cure for woman's ills of every nature. Mrs. Pinkham invites all young women who are ill to write her for free advice. Address, Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

Mrs. Estes, of New York City, says:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I write to you because I believe all young girls ought to know how much good your medicine will do them. I did dress making for years before I was married, and if it had not been for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I do not believe I could have stood the strain. There is no other work that is such a strain on the system. Oh how my back used to ache from the bending over! I would feel as though I would have to scream out from the pain, and the sitting still made me so terribly tired and weak, and my head throbbed like an engine. I never could eat after work. I was so worn out. Then I was irregular, and had such frightful cramps every month they would simply double me up with pain and I would have to give up working and lie down. But Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound changed me into a strong well woman. Yours very truly, MRS. MARTHA ESTES, 513 West 127th St., N. Y. City."

THE TRENT VALLEY CANAL.

One encouraging feature of the Trent Valley Waterway project is the increasing attention it is receiving and the increased recognition of its importance as a link in our chain of transportation facilities between the wheat lands of the North-west and the seaboard. In its issue of Tuesday the Toronto Star editorially discusses the subject in the following article:

It must soon be decided whether the Trent Valley Canal will make its connection with Lake Ontario via Port Hope or vicinity (Cobourg) or by the Trent waters at Trenton on the Bay of Quinte. The question has hitherto been treated largely as a local one, or solely with reference to transportation of grain to Montreal and development of water power along the Trenton route, but it is, as we pointed out in an article a little time ago, a larger question. It should be dealt with by the Government on broad national grounds, and such route to Lake Ontario adopted as will best serve the whole country.

At present the back country in the Peterborough, Lindsay, and Hastings districts must depend wholly upon railways for the transportation of freight. The consequence is that this great section of country is greatly handicapped compared with more fortunate districts which have the benefit of water competition. The great manufacturing industries at Peterborough import for their purposes great quantities of coal and freights of all kinds Peterborough is also a great central distributing point for manufactured goods at present imported into that country by rail. Let the Trent Valley Canal route be from Peterborough via Rice Lake to Port Hope or vicinity (Cobourg), and you at once furnish to the at present land-locked district a direct water route to Lake Ontario, by which traffic may proceed to the west or to the east, or across the Lake to Rochester. Furthermore, by this route the back country can be served during the period of navigation in the carriage to the interior of coal and the thousand and one imports that at present are shipped to the Peterborough district by rail from Toronto, Hamilton, and other western points. It seems to The Star that the interests of the Peterborough district, and of all western Ontario are that the lake connection of the Trent Canal system should be in the vicinity of Port Hope. Thus, during the period of navigation, the people all along the line of the Trent Valley Canal will receive the benefit of lower freight rates because of the water competition. The same advantage of cheap transportation would accrue in respect of exports from that district to Western Ontario, and it seems to us to be due to the great centres of trade of Western Ontario that their interests should also be regarded in the consideration of this question.

Nor can it be shown that the adoption of this route would in the slightest degree injure any interest except it be some owners of water powers upon the line of the Trent waters, but this canal has been undertaken by the country, not for the purpose of promoting the private interests of owners of water powers, but purely for the purpose of transportation, and this the only reason justifying the construction of the canal, must determine its route, unless the public money is to diverted towards the promotion of private interests.

Up to the present time we have heard practically nothing except arguments manufactured by those in favour of the route by the Trent waters, and we trust that the Transportation Commission Commission will disregard these private considerations, and study the question in its broad national aspect. There has not been a fair examination of the Port Hope route by any disinterested experts enjoying public confidence. We consider it the duty of the Government to have a thoroughly independent examination of all available routes made by able experts, having comprehensive views as to Canada's resources, and let the report of all such persons, with all the evidence, be given frankly to the public before any conclusion is reached by those in authority. By such means a serious mistake may be avoided, and the public interest best promoted.

The Star's comments as to the advantages which the completion and operation of the Trent Waterway would bring to Peterborough and vicinity, are all right up to a certain point, and that point is where it says that "the interests of Peterborough district . . . are that the lake connection of the Trent Canal system should be at the vicinity of Port Hope." The Star will perhaps allow the Peterborough District to be the judge of its own interests. And Peterborough District joins issue with the journal and pronounces in favour of the Trenton terminus, and for the very reason which the Star urges as the justification of Port Hope being made the southern terminus of the Waterway. The Star very properly urges that the question of terminus should be studied "in its broad national aspect." That is the very point desired. It is only in relation to its broad national aspect that the entire project should be considered. There has been perhaps too much insistence upon the local benefits the canal will produce. Though these benefits are important and mean a great deal to the district through which this waterway passes in the way of development and general stimulus to industrial and commercial activity, yet the national aspect of the undertaking is paramount. Though to a certain extent the expenditure of public money is warranted in the promotion of the prosperity or the convenience of localities, yet it is hardly probable that the idea of expending so large a sum of money as is necessary for the completion of the canal, for promoting local purposes only, would find acceptance. The canal must be considered from the point of view as a national highway, as a grain carrying route. The local benefits will come incidentally and as a matter of course. As a grain carrying route the canal must be primarily considered and this cannot be too much insisted upon, for it is that consideration almost solely that warrants its completion—it is the only consideration that commends it as a national work of Dominion importance. This consideration also justifies the Trenton terminus. The canal is especially adapted to barge navigation, and all who have studied the subject agree that for barges the Port Hope terminus, with its thirty or forty miles of wind-swept open lake, between that port and still waters, is impossible, or, at least, impracticable. The Trenton terminus represents a land-locked route from Midland to Montreal, perfectly safe for barges in all condition of wind and weather.

In the matter of convenience and benefit to Peterborough, and vicinity, it, perhaps, makes little difference which southern terminus is adopted, but the waterway itself is an important consideration, and the terminus which will make it most effective as a national waterway, is the one to be preferred. If it can be shown that the canal via Trenton will better serve this end, then let Trenton be chosen; if the Port Hope end can be shown to be the better from this point of view, then that is the place for the southern terminus of the canal. We want the canal built as a great transportation route. Once this is done, all the individual and local advantages are necessarily created. In the advocacy of the merits of canal completion these should not be made prominent—the Trent Waterway as a grain-carrying route should be insisted upon, and—"all these things shall be added."

The spirit of the Star's comments upon the canal seem to indicate that it has been "loaded up" by some interest in connection with the Port Hope terminus. This is quite within the rights of the Port Hope people, and their energy in pushing their end of the proposition teaches a lesson in activity to other places interested in the canal.

SHORT SIGHTED WELLAND.

Hamilton City, by Reasonably Liberal Dealing, Secures New Industry.

The Frost Manufacturing Company of the town of Welland, has arranged for removal to Hamilton. This city gives the new industry advantages which apparently Welland was unwilling to extend, to hold the departing industry. The Frost Company has a capital of half a million and is regarded as a live progressive corporation. It employs from 50 to 75 hands in the manufacture of wire fencing, etc. The inducements which Hamilton offered were a gift of three acres of land and a fixed assessment for fifteen years of $5,000 on which taxes are to be levied. Hamilton has gained an important industry by the exercise of a little liberality, while Welland, which can ill afford to lose it, has done so apparently through the short-sighted policy of the town council.

THEY KNOW IT.

Thousands of people throughout the country know that the ordinary remedies for piles—ointments, suppositories and appliances — will not cure.

The best of them only bring passing relief.

Dr. Leonhardt's Hem-Roid is a tablet taken internally that removes the cause of Piles, hence, the cure is permanent. Every package sold carries a guarantee with it.

It is perfectly harmless to the most delicate constitution. A month's treatment in each package. Sold at $1.00.

St. Lawrence Choked Up.

Montreal, April 15.—The cold weather has apparently stopped all operations as regarding ice shoves and other disturbances which tend to make matters uncertain on the river front for the past forty-eight hours. All movement has ceased, the ice remaining practically in the same position from the Boucherville Islands up to Victoria Bridge. The water remains at its high level of 39 feet and a fraction, this having been the figure since Sunday last.

People of This Place.

There are people in every town and village of this country who have been cured of itching, protruding and bleeding piles by the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Ask your friends about this great preparation; they can tell you of its great soothing, healing and antiseptic powers. More reputable people have endorsed Dr. Chase's Ointment than any preparation you can name.

ANNUAL MEETING

The Henderson Roller Bearing Manufacturing Co.

LIMITED.

A Successful and Profitable Industry Dividends Declared.

The Annual Meeting of the Shareholders of The Henderson Roller Bearing Manufacturing Company, Limited, was held in Temple Building on Thursday, April 7th, 1904.

An unusually large number of Shareholders had gathered from various parts of the country.

The Report of Directors for the past year showed very satisfactory results of the year's operations. The success of the Company was such that the Directors were able to recommend to the Shareholders the payment out of the year's profits of a dividend of 10 per cent. on the amount paid up on stock.

The Shareholders were enthusiastic in their expressions of appreciation of the development of the Company, and a resolution was unanimously adopted expressing confidence in the Board, and thanks for their past services.

The rapid development of this new industry is well illustrated by the fact that the factory, although only nine months in operation, had at the close of the year all the departments fully equipped and employing about fifty men.

The Company find it necessary greatly to increase their capacity, and have had several very liberal propositions made to them, offering locations and concessions for the new factory site which the Company expect to be compelled to provide to meet the rapidly-increasing demands of the business.

The concluding paragraph of the Directors' Report embodies very accurately the sentiment of the Meeting, when it says:

"The members of the Board lay the result of the year before you for your favourable and careful consideration, conscious that they have used and employed all their energies for the welfare of the Shareholders and success of the Company, and believing that they have had the honour and responsibility of laying the foundation of a business, the effect of which will extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and be a revelation to the manufacturing, mechanical and transportation portion of the community, and that will afford great satisfaction to those who are fortunate enough to be holders of stock in the Company."

The election of Directors resulted as follows: Albert Ogden, Toronto; W. Vanduzen, Toronto Junction; H. Waddell, Peterborough; John L. Gibb, St. Catharines; A. D. Watson, A. E. Henderson, John J. Mann, John C. Eaton, R. L. Henderson, John Ferguson, Toronto; Senator S. Merner, Berlin; P. H. McKenzie, Lucknow.

At a Board Meeting, immediately following the Shareholders' Meeting the following officers were elected: President, Albert Ogden; Vice-President, A. D. Watson; Secretary-Treasurer, A. E. Henderson; Manager, R. L. Henderson.

DOWN AT CAPE TOWN

Cape Assembly Sat For Twenty-Five Hours.

THE PROGRESSIVES WON OUT

Cause of the Long Session Was the Additional Representation Bill—House Gave Dr. Jameson a Majority of Eight—Premier Cool Under Bond Members Cries of "Blackguardly Scandal," Etc.

Cape Town, April 15.—After a sitting of twenty-five hours the House of Assembly passed the additional representation bill by a majority of eight.

When the Premier, Dr. Jameson, declared that he would not accept an adjournment until a vote had been taken, the Opposition immediately began stubborn obstruction tactics.

Repeated motions for the adjournment were made and defeated until the Speaker sternly refused to accept further adjournment motions.

After this five Bond members spoke for three hours each, while the benches were strewn with the prostrate figures of legislators seeking slumber.

Not a single Ministerialist spoke throughout the night, and beyond violent personal attacks on Dr. Jameson few unusual incidents occurred.

De Waal, Bond leader, declared at 7 o'clock in the morning that the Opposition were prepared to sit indefinitely, candidly admitting that their deliberate policy was to obstruct, as they claimed a mandate from the electors to prevent the passage of the bill, which gives the Progressives nine and the Bond three additional seats to equalize the crying electoral anomalies.

The debate dragged on till noon yesterday, when Dr. Jameson offered to adjourn on condition that the second reading should be taken at the next sitting. The Opposition refused, and this determined the Speaker to put his foot down.

At half-past two he declared that, although there was no precedent in the Cape House of Assembly for the intervention of the Speaker, an exact parallel existed in the debate in the House of Common on the coercion bill on Feb. 2, 1881. Accordingly he put the question of the second reading.

The Opposition stormily protested, but without avail. The announcement of the figures was received with prolonged Ministerial cheers, and the Bond members burst out into vehement and furious cries of "Blackguardly scandal" and "Base tyranny." But Dr. Jameson remained cool, and moved the adjournment of the House for the Easter recess.

Progressives throughout the country are jubilant, declaring that this is the final termination of Bond dominion in South Africa.

BERT HATCH'S DEATH.

Paris, Ont., Fireman Killed By a Falling Smoke Stack.

Paris, April 15.—At a fire which destroyed the Alabastine Works here yesterday afternoon, a fireman, Bert Hatch, was instantly killed; Allan Fraser and Isaac Stewart were seriously injured and Hector Henderson met with lesser though painful injuries. The immediate cause of the fatality and the injuries was the unexpected falling of a huge iron smokestack. The Alabastine Works are situated on a tail race of the Grand River. It was a fairly large plant, about thirty hands being employed.

Husband to Stand Trial.

Montreal, April 15.—"We, the members of the jury, after having heard the evidence, declare that Agnes Hogue died at Montreal on April 12, 1904, as the result of injuries inflicted on the throat with a sharp implement. The evidence makes it necessary for us to demand that Magliore Hogue, the husband of the deceased, shall be taken before the criminal courts to answer for the death of his wife." The above is the verdict rendered by the jury at the inquest into the death of Mrs. Hogue, who was murdered on Tuesday night at her home, 207 Montcalm street. Hogue appeared and pleaded not guilty.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

McPherson & McGregor

(Successors to the F. R. J. McPherson Co.)

Take this opportunity of thanking the public for the very liberal patronage accorded the late firm. Trade has been so satisfactory that Mr McGregor decided to increase his interest in the business and, as a consequence, the firm will be know hereafter as McPHERSON & McGREGOR.

Our specialties are:—

Sanitary Plumbing
Sanitary Ventilating
Steam and Hot Water Heating
Electrical Wiring and Supplies

We wish to draw the attention of the public to a few of the many complimentary testimonials received by Mr. McGregor for the high quality of the work he has installed in Plumbing and Heating:—

From the Firm of Bennet & Wright, Plumbing, Heating and Electrical Contractors, Toronto.

This is to certify that Duncan McGregor has been in our employment steady for about fifteen years and during that time we have found him to be steady, honest and trustworthy. He has given every satisfaction as a practical mechanic in each of the following branches: Plumbing, steam and gas fitting, also electrical and conduit work, and for some time has had charge of some of our largest contracts with satisfactory results.

From Illsley & Horn, General Contractors, Toronto.

The bearer, Mr. Duncan McGregor, had charge of the electric wiring at the King Edward Hotel Building. The job was a large and complicated one and by the way Mr. McGregor handled the work he proved himself a mechanic of more than ordinary ability. We unhesitatingly recommend him as a first class mechanic to anyone needing his services.

From Mr. J. Ross Robertson, of the Evening Telegram.

Mr. Duncan McGregor, who has been connected with the Bennet & Wright Co. for some years, and who has superintended the work of plumbing and heating for the Bennet & Wright Co., is not only in my opinion, but also that of my architect, a fully competent mechanic. His work, my architect informs me, has been most satisfactory. Any thing that has come under my own supervision has been likewise satisfactory.

An Extract Taken from the June Number of Domestic Engineering.

During the recent convention of the Canadian Electrical Association held in the King Edward Hotel, a thorough examination was made of all the electrical work in the hotel, and it was pronounced second to none on the continent. Therefore, great credit is due Mr. Duncan MacGregor, who superintended the entire conduit, electrical and power system for the firm of Bennet & Wright, of this city, who were the contractors for all the different branches of the electrical work in the new hotel.

C. P. R. OPPOSITION

Mr. M. K. Cowan, K.C., Supports the Grand Trunk Pacific.

MR. BORDEN'S PLAN RIDDLED

Mr. Cowan Attributed Some Opposition to the Government's Scheme to C.P.R., and Severely Criticized Course of Mr. E. B. Osler—Scheme to Unload "Loss" Portion of C.P.R. on the Country.

Ottawa, April 15.—Yesterday witnessed a marked revival of interest in the Grand Trunk Pacific debate. Mr. M. K. Cowan, K.C., who has the reputation of being one of the most vigorous and skillful debaters on the Government benches, made perhaps one of the most effective criticisms of the alternative scheme proposed by the leader of the Opposition and able defence of the Government project that has yet been heard. He was especially apt in the contrast of the agreement now under consideration and the bargain made by the Conservative Government for the construction of the C.P.R. He attributed some of the Opposition now offered to the Government's project to the C.P.R. By analysis of the alternative scheme of Mr. Borden he demonstrated that the purchase money to be paid for the "loan" section between Sudbury and Fort William would be sufficient to construct the necessary links to connect the Sault Ste. Marie branch of the C.P.R. with Winnipeg through United States territory, and give the company a surplus of $3,500,000 cash besides. The running arrangement between the C.P.R. and the Canadian Northern would result in all the freight of those companies going over these American lines, and the Government would be left with the north shore lines on its hands, with the Grand Trunk Pacific, and possibly the Intercolonial, its only customers. He severely criticized Mr. E. B. Osler for having characterized the leading officials of the G.T.R. as "fakirs," and suggested that Mr. Wainwright's record with regard to railway construction at least compared favorably with that of Mr. Osler. Mr. E. Gus Porter was the only other speaker in the debate yesterday.

Use of Ice Breakers.

Hon. Raymond Prefontaine, replying to Dr. Sproule, said the Government had under consideration the use of an ice-breaker to test the winter navigability of Lake Superior and the Georgian Bay. No effort would be made this spring to break the ice in those northern harbors to facilitate navigation, as the Government had no vessel available.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier informed Dr. Sproule that the Government had not yet appointed the commission to build the eastern division of the Transcontinental Railway, but they would be appointed probably at some early date when the question now before the House had been disposed of. As to who will be the commissioner I cannot enlighten my hon. friend, concluded the Premier.

Conservative Leader's Protest.

Before the orders of the day were called R. L. Borden moved the adjournment of the House to record his opposition to the Speaker's ruling on the point of order raised yesterday at the opening of the House. He explained that the motion to adjourn having been withdrawn, it had no more effect than if never made, so far as the rule was concerned. He also protested against the Government's reply to the question respecting the appointments of members of the House of Commons to places of emolument under the Crown. He maintained that the answer, that the names would be found in the public documents, was not sufficient, and could be made to 50 per cent. of the question put by members.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier upheld the Speaker's ruling on the point of order as a reasonable interpretation. As to the latter point, he had assumed that the leader of the Opposition was sufficiently in touch with public affairs to know the facts, but if he was mistaken he apologized. (Applause.)

Appointment of Members.

Mr. Casgrain, who had asked the latter question gave a list of 27 members whom he believed had been appointed to office. He quoted a speech by Sir William Mulock, when the Liberals were in Opposition, in introducing a bill to defend the independence of Parliament, against the appointment of members to offices.

"What became of that bill?" asked Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. Casgrain would not discuss the question, but maintained there were Liberal members now in the House who had been promised offices so that they might vote right on questions before the House.

Sir William Mulock.

Sir William Mulock said he was not aware that the Liberal party were to be held responsible for the views of one member. (Opposition "Oh!") While the Liberals were in Opposition he had been impressed by the spectacle of many discontented Conservatives being appointed to office.

"Where's Blair?" asked Mr. Cochrane, amid Opposition cheers.

"I am sure he is where my hon. friend from East Northumberland would like to be," replied Sir William, while the Liberals cheered. He recalled that in 1895 great numbers of Conservatives were appointed to office. The independence of Parliament in Canada in 1895 was destroyed, he said, and it was under those circumstances he introduced the bill. The measure received no support from the Conservatives and he withdrew it. He endorsed the views as to the impropriety of members sitting in Parliament after any understanding had been made that they would receive appointments. His views as embodied in the bill had not been endorsed by the Liberal party nor by the country. Should the Liberal party ever become as bad as the Conservatives were in 1895, then they could not too soon get such legislation. The Liberal appointees had all been capable men, and not one of them had had the promise of office while yet a member. The Liberals had principles which had been embalmed upon the statute books. (Opposition laughter.) The Liberal party had not attained the stage where the opinions of one man dominated the party, but he expected to see the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) swallow the Government ownership plan of the Opposition leader, although he had emphatically declared his opposition to that principle.

The Speaker's Ruling.

Hon. Mr. Brodeur pointed out that Mr. Casgrain knew well enough that, having put his question once this session and received an answer, he was clearly violating the rules by renewing it. The Speaker then ruled that a second motion to adjourn could not be made after one had already been disposed of. The motion was, therefore, negatived.

Domville For the Orphans.

Ottawa, April 15.—Senator Domville in the Upper House yesterday, introduced a bill to make the King's shilling a legal tender. He pointed out that some 5,000 or 6,000 immigrants a week were arriving in New Brunswick and the first thing that they found was, after being brought here, that their money was not worth face value.

Senator Domville referred to his action of last session in regard to the workings of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada. He was acting in the interests of the widows and orphans. If the committee were granted him he would prove his case.

Get My Book, if Sick

Don't Send a Penny.

Don't send a penny.

Just wait till you see what I can do. Let me take the risk. Let me prove up first what Dr. Shoop's Restorative can do. The Restorative will gain your friendship, your endorsement, if you test it. And for a whole month you can use it without the slightest risk.

I will tell you of a druggist near you who will furnish six bottles of Dr. Shoop's Restorative a month on trial.

I will absolutely stand all the cost if it fails. If you say, "It did not help me," that ends it as far as cost to you is concerned. Do you understand me? I am telling it as plainly, as clearly as I can. I want you to know absolutely and without doubt that this offer is made on honour. I have the prescription that cures. My only problem is to convince you that Dr. Shoop's Restorative will cure—is an uncommon remedy. A common remedy could not stand a test like this. It would bankrupt the physician making the offer. And I am succeeding everywhere, and here is the secret of my success. I found invariably that where there was a weakness the inside nerves were weak. Where there was a lack of vitality, the vital nerves lacked power. Where weak organs were found, I always found weak nerves. Not the nerves commonly thought of but the vital organs' nerves. The inside—the invisible nerves.

This was a revelation. Then my real success began. Then I combined ingredients that would strengthen, that would vitalize these nerves. That prescription I called a restorative. It is known the world over now as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Thousands are accepting my offer and only one in each forty writes me that my remedy failed. Just think of it. 39 out of 40 get well and these are difficult cases too. And the fortieth has nothing to pay. That is a record I am proud of. It is wrong to stay sick when a chance like this is open. If well, you should tell others who are sick, of my offer. Don't let a sick friend stay sick because he knows not of my offer. Tell him. Get my book for him. Do your duty. You may be sick yourself, sometime. Sick people need help. They appreciate sympathy and aid. Tell me of some sick friend. Let me cure him. Then he will show to both of us his gratitude. Your reward will be his gratitude. Send for the book now. Do not delay.

THE "SOO" DEBATE.

U.S. Steel Trust Showed Its Head and Blocked "Soo" Finances—Debate Will Run Into Next Week.

Toronto, April 15.—The debate on the bill to aid the Algoma Central Railway and the associated industries at the "Soo" by guaranteeing a $2,000,000 loan occupied nearly the whole of the time of the Legislature yesterday, and it will probably run into next week. The feature of the discussion was the evidence brought forward that the gigantic United States steel trust had on several occasions interfered in the development of northern Ontario, and particularly had blocked the Consolidated Lake Superior Company in its efforts to raise further capital at a critical period either in London or America. The reason assigned was that this United States monopoly did not want to see a competitor started in Canada. The speakers of the day were Messrs. Hanna, Connee, Hendrie, Hoyle, Hon. E. J. Davis, Duff, Murphy and Russell.

Hon. Mr. Stratton introduced a bill to amend the charity aid act.

Hon. Mr. Gibson introduced a bill to amend the Ontario insurance act by incorporating therein a number of amendments relating to guarantee insurance, which had been added to the statute law amendment act.

Third Readings.

In the Legislature yesterday the following bills were read a third time: Respecting the town of Peterboro (Stratton); respecting the Toronto Suburban Railway Co. (St. John).

Macoun Defends His Report.

Ottawa, April 15.—The agricultural committee was the scene of a more than ordinarily lively row yesterday morning when James M. Macoun was examined with respect to his report on the Peace River country. Mr. Macoun's report, recently published was wholly unfavorable to those portions over which he travelled last year, known broadly as the Upper Peace River country, that is, the region adjacent to the Rocky Mountains. Mr. Macoun yesterday repeated his contentions and said that, with the exception of a few small areas, the region was unfitted for either grazing or wheat-growing. He said the land was too high, too cold, and the soil was shallow, and it is too far north at that altitude for agricultural purposes. He had found a clay subsoil which was impervious to water, which greatly restricted the progress of vegetation, and this was only covered by from two to four inches of loam. He defied the members of the committee to give any reputable authority which would disprove his contention.

Wind Caused Explosion.

Pensacola, Fla., April 15.—Two more seamen injured in the explosion on the battleship Missouri Wednesday are dead. There is also one man of the turret crew missing. Expert turret officers say the explosion was the result of a blow-back, the wind blowing the flames back from the muzzle of the gun, and through the open breach, thus igniting the powder charge.

BOYCOTTED BARMAIDS.

How Trades Unionists Chased English Rebes Out of Hamilton.

A Hamilton correspondent of The Toronto News says: The movement for the abolition of the historic barmaid in England has caused the Industrial Committee of the National Union of Women Workers to urge the magistrates of the licensing sessions in London to consider the advisability of discontinuing the employment of women in public bars after five years, and that meanwhile no new employes should be engaged. The committee believe that the conditions of the work are not suitable for women and girls, and are incapable of any radical reform. It is quite customary for the hours to run from 15½ to 18½ hours a day, and Sunday, with the exception perhaps of once a month, usually entails a day of from seven to nine hours work. In England the only legal regulation affecting employment in public houses limits the hours of both sexes under eighteen years of age to seventy-four hours per week. Under the London County Council inspectors have practically stopped the employment of young persons in such places, a proof that the hours of work are beyond the limit. The number of women employed in serving intoxicating liquors in the United Kingdom runs into the thousands. In London alone, according to the 1901 census, there are 7,832 barmaids, while the County of Lancaster has 2,747. The committee consider it essential that any action taken should be gradual, as those engaged in the work find difficulty in settling into other occupations, and it would obviously be a hardship to turn those in any given locality out of work without long notice.

The ruddy-faced barmaid with a dainty display of dimpled arms as she hands a goblet of foaming ale across the shining counter, is not unknown to Hamilton. Some three or four years ago the Crystal Hotel imported two from the Old Country. They were buxom-looking girls, and their black and white costums suited the pink and white complexions to a nicety. Their appearance behind the bar "caught on" like a comic opera, and the hotel did a rushing business. One of the girls after a time left for other work, and the proprietor, to keep up the attraction, imported two more. He had now three behind the bar, and they made the corner business livelier than before. The first exclamation of many visitors to the town was, "Let's go up and see the barmaids." The proprietor, not to be outdone, married one of them himself. After a time the barmaid novelty began to slacken, but the hotel still did a big business, and the women ale-servers would doubtless be here yet but for the action of the city unions. The girls were not only working for $2.50 or $3.00 a week, but were keeping out the male bartender. The union, moreover, held that a barmaid was against the sentiment of the country, and they started a boycott. Placards were posted up on the street and elsewhere denouncing the employment of the barmaids, and notices were served on all the wholesale houses of the city. It ended in the hotel letting the women go to save the house from ruin. The girls went finally to Windsor to work in some hotel, partly in the capacity of barmaids and partly that of servants.

FRIDAY, APRIL 15, 1904.

A VERY PRETTY CHURCH WEDDING.

Miss Crowe Married to Mr. Louis Raymond in St. John's.

Last night at St. John's church a very pretty wedding took place, when by the Rev. J. C. Davidson, Miss Crowe, of Peterborough, was united in marriage to Mr Louis Raymond of Fenelon Falls.

The wedding, which took place at 8 o'clock, was a quiet event, only the parties immediately interested, witnessing it. The bride was very tastily attired in a suit of gray ladies' cloth, with white silk trimmings and black picture hat. She carried a beautiful bouquet of white roses. Miss N. Riley, who attended the bride as bridesmaid, was also very becomingly dressed in a similar costume, and carried white carnations. Mr D. Raymond assisted the groom.

The bride was the recipient of a large number of useful and costly presents.

The happy couple left on the nine o'clock train last night for Buffalo, N.Y., and on their return will take up their residence at 398 Aylmer street.

Gents' suits and overcoats beautifully dry cleaned and pressed at Parker's Cleaning and Laundry Works, Charlotte street.

The Doctor's Thanks.

As he is unaware of her name, Dr. W. H. Blanchard has asked the Examiner to thus publicly thank the lady who picked up and tended his young son, after he had been run over on George street yesterday morning.

Announcement.

Fred T. Butters wishes to say to the public that he has secured accommodation with J. T. O'Connell & Co., 136 Hunter street, where he will carry on the business of sanitary plumbing, steam and hot water heating.

MURIEL FOSTER SCORED A SUCCESS

At Concert Given Last Night in George Street Church.

A True Artist who Captivated her Hearers Other Artists on the Programme.

Muriel Foster, the great English contralto, and "great" is not too strong a word to use, appeared last night in the George street church, and her reception was a gratifying one to the organization instrumental in securing Miss Foster's visit to this town.

Peterborough has been visited by many lady vocalists, but it is doubtful if a truer artist than Miss Foster has ever been heard here. The unstinted praise which the continental and American press have given her, is acknowledged by all who had the privilege of hearing her last night to be well merited.

Added to the richness and beauty of her voice, is the charm of her unaffected manner, in which particular it differed pleasingly from many singers who have appeared here in the past. Of Miss Foster's voice, no praise that might be given here, would add to its charm. For richness and depth of tone, Miss Foster's voice is remarkable, and in all her selections last night she proved herself a singer with a truly artistic temperament.

The audience was not as large as the excellence of the programme warranted, but those who attended were of a musical inclination, and the artists met with a sympathetic audience.

Some little delay was caused in the opening of the programme because of the fact that the train upon which Miss Foster was to arrive, met with a mishap near Garden Hill, and was delayed nearly three hours in reaching Peterborough. During the interval of waiting, Emiliano Renaud, the pianist, who accompanies Miss Foster on her tour, rendered a number of his best selections, which was a complete recompense for the delay.

The first number on the programme proper was a moonlight sonata, Adagio Sostenuto, Allegretto, Presto Agitato, by Beethoven, given by Mr. Renaud, and in it, as in the preceding selections given, he was heartily applauded.

Miss Foster's first number was Goring Thomas' "My Heart is Weary," and with the first notes sang came the conviction on the part of her hearers that she was all that had been represented.

A triple number by Mr. Renaud, (a) Minuet, composed by Mr. Renaud; (b) Ave Maria, by Henselt; and (c) Valse Allemande, by Rubenstein, was next given by the pianist, following which Miss Foster, by special request sang "O Rest in the Lord," and "Entreat me not to Leave Thee," to the unbounded pleasure of her hearers. A reverie and a paraphrase, "Kuss Waltzer," were Emiliano Renaud's next contributions and like his the other numbers were highly acceptable to the audience.

Miss Foster closed her portion of the evening's programme by her rendition of "If Heaven I Win," "Because My Love is a Rose," and "Happy Song," in each of which she displayed varying powers of song. Her expression was admirably adapted to the sentiment of the different compositions, and that her singing was appreciated was evidenced by the fact that she was enthusiastically encored after each number.

Mr. Renaud closed the evening with a fantasie on themes from "A Midsummer Night's Dream," by Mendelssohn-Liszt, introducing the wedding march.

Miss Kate Eadie acted as accompanist to Miss Foster in a thorough musicianly manner.

The choir of George street church, under whose auspices the concert was given are to be congratulated on the success of the event, and also upon their good fortune in securing artists of the calibre of those who last night delighted the musical public of Peterborough. Miss Foster, during her stay here was the guest of Mrs. McAllister, and at the conclusion of last night's concert, a number of prominent musicians were invited to Mrs. McAllister's home to meet Miss Foster. This invitation was gladly accepted and at the pleasing reception thus tendered, Miss Foster kindly favoured those present with a number of further selections, which still further pleased those fortunate enough to hear her.

BOARD OF TRADE MEETS TO-NIGHT.

Will Discuss Sugar Company By-laws and Other Matters.

A meeting of this Peterborough Board of Trade will be held to-night in the Council Chamber, when a number of important subjects will be up for discussion. Perhaps the most important of these will be that of the Sugar Company bylaw, to be submitted to the ratepayers on May 5th. The Board very properly has decided to discuss this question from a business standpoint, and it will be interesting especially to the business element of the town. Another question which will receive the attention of the Board will be the advocacy for the abolition of the market tolls. Some discussion on this proposal has been carried on informally, and the matter will now be brought up in the public meeting of the Board.

All members are asked to be present.

CITIZEN'S POPULAR MONDAY NIGHT.

Splendid Programme to be Presented at the Y. M. C. A.

There is no doubt that the attendance on this citizens' popular night, will be large.

DEPUTY SHERIFF TOOK PRISONER.

Nebraska Man Takes off Frank Sheldon

Deputy Sheriff Afflerbick, of York County, Nebraska, arrived in town last night for Frank Sheldon, alias George Vallway, who is wanted in those parts for forgery.

Afflerbick and his prisoner left this morning on the 8.25 train. The Deputy Sheriff said that Sheldon had a long criminal record and if found guilty would be sentenced to a long term. It now transpires that Sheldon's arrest was not unevenful. When Constable Adams went to the back door of his house Sheldon ran through to the front and as he opened the door fell into the arms of the officer. He then subsided and quietly submitted to having the handcuffs clasped on. It was previously reported that Sheldon had been employed at the Canadian General Electric Works, but this was incorrect. During his three months' stay in Peterborough Sheldon has lived an idle life and, according to a creditable report, has not done a hand's turn.

The Event of the Season.

PETERBORO'S PROGRESS IN NINETEEN FOUR

Some of the Causes Contributing to Its Growth—Building Activity Will Be Remarkable.

The year 1904 will see a great growth in Peterborough, the premier town of Canada.

Many causes will contribute to this effect.

In the first place nearly every one of the numerous manufacturing and industrial enterprises will, or has already increased their staff of employees. Last year was a busy one to all the local firms and the end of the season found them with their stocks low, in some cases every single article manufactured having been disposed of. This gave them a good start for the new year, and, during the winter months all hands were kept busy filling the depleted stock rooms with goods preparatory to the new season's trade.

The spring of 1904 is now opening up and the prospects for business in all lines are excellent.

Every manufacturer in the province almost without exception, is anticipating in 1904 the greatest volume of trade in the history of the country.

Needless to say, Peterborough manufacturers, as they have in the past, will participate in this wonderful trade expansion. For this reason staffs will be enlarged, the result of which will be that more men will be brought to town, which, with their families, will form a considerable addition to the growing population of the town.

Perhaps one of the largest single additions to the town will be that resulting from the removal of the Montreal shops of the Canadian General Electric Company to this town. The general superintendent of the company informed the Examiner that this removal would mean the addition to the present staff of the company by 150 to 200 men. Practically all of these will be skilled mechanics and married men, and, assuming the average size of a family to be five persons, which is that usually calculated, this one item alone will bring from seven hundred and fifty to one thousand persons who will be permanent residents, to the town.

The removal and enlargement of the Peterborough Lock Works to the new premises at the confluence of the G. T. R. and C. P. R. tracks will be followed by an increase in the number of employees of at least fifty, bringing the number employed by the company to about 150 men, the great majority of whom are skilled mechanics.

The works of the Geo. Matthews Co. will be almost doubled by the erection of the large addition, the construction of which has already been commenced. With a doubling of the size of the establishment will also come a large increase in the number of employees.

The William Hamilton Manufacturing Company recently finished the construction of a large building devoted to manufacturing purposes, for the manning of which a large number of additinal men have been required.

In addition to all these the Examiner has learned of other large extensions and new enterprises which will, in all probability, be proceeded with this year, but the definite announcement of which it is not in a position to make at the present time.

Enough has been stated above to convince even the most skeptical that the year 1904 will be "Peterborough's growing time."

The number of buildings that have already been planned for the summer of 1904 is of a magnitude sufficient to warrant the statement that this summer will see a building boom in the town. In spite of the high prices at present prevailing for material and labour, there is such a peremptory demand for houses that a great many will be built, and it is a pretty safe assertion to make that all that are built will readily find occupants.

To the person who lives in the centre of the town, and who goes from his house to business every day, and does not take an occasional walk through what may very properly be called the suburbs of the town, such a walk, if taken, would bring some pretty big surprises. On all sides of the town, east, west, north and south, particularly the second and last, a surprising number of new houses are to be seen, all of them of a substantial character, and many built by the occupant, who found it necessary to build because of the difficulty of securing dwelling houses to rent.

In addition to the buildings being erected as residences, the industrial concerns that will be erecting new buildings or additions will form no inconsiderable part of this building boom, and they will not only give work for increased numbers of men for their operation, but also in their construction.

The expenditure of $50,000 for the erection of a new Collegiate Institute, providing the by-law is carried, will also add to the general healthy condition of the building trades.

If the by-law to guarantee the Sugar Company's bonds is carried this will result in $40,000 being spent in building operations at the company's plant, of which Peterborough builders will receive a good share.

Every resident of Peterborough feels a buoyancy in regard to the future prospects and prosperity of the town.

While the advantages at present possessed by the town make it known throughout the country, as a town possessing unsurpassed facilities for manufacturing purposes, the early completion of the Trent Valley Canal, which now seems highly probable, will give still further inducements, for then will the products of mill and factory find easy and cheaply reached markets, and raw materials may be brought in at greatly reduced cost.

One of the first results of the opening of the waterway would be the erecting of a flour mill by the American Cereal Co. interests, of a capacity greater, perhaps, than any mill now in existence in the Dominion.

This, however, would only be one of many similar industries which could come simultaneously with the opening of the great waterway.

In the meantime, though, Peterborough is forging ahead, and, as has been already said, the year of 1904, unless all signs fail, will see this town take rapid strides of advancement.

That there is no better town in Canada for manufacturers to locate is attested to by the fact that every single industry established here in recent years has been a success, and while this may be attributed largely to the prosperous condition of the country generally, no small degree of the success is due to the wisdom of their promoters in selecting a town where all the conditions were conducive to the success of the enterprises.

"Watch us grow in 1904," should be the watchword of every loyal citizen of the town, and the aim of everyone should be to co-operate liberally with the public bodies, Board of Trade, Town Council and others, the object of which is to promote the prosperity of this, the best town in Canada.

CLOSE OF A MOST SUCCESSFUL SEASON.

Ladies' Literary Association of St. Peter's T. A. S. Held Last Meeting Last Night.

A Paper on "Father Marquette" by Miss Hattie Cahill Interesting Features of the Programme.

The Ladies Literary Association of St. Peter's T.A.S., closed a very successful literary season last evening, by a delightful programme, which was heartily appreciated by the large audience present. The programme opened with a vocal solo, very pleasingly rendered by Miss A. Devlin. Then followed a recitation, "A Glass of Cold Water," by Miss Caroline White. Miss White's recitation met with such applause that she was obliged to respond to an encore, which she also gave in a most creditable manner, a selection entitled "T.A." The audience were so persistent in their encores that Miss White reappeared no less than five different times.

A pleasing instrumental solo was very ably played by Miss Irene Clancy. Then came the feature of the evening—the reading of an excellent paper on "Father Marquette," by Miss H. M. Cahill. Miss Cahill sketched in choice and beautiful language the early career of the noble explorer, Father Jas. Marquette. The noble qualities of the missionary, the hardships he endured, and the innumerable obstacles with which he had to contend, were all points beautifully brought out in the essay. The description of his long and tedious course of exploration and his reception among the different tribes of Indians, were presented in the most beautiful and picturesque language, and did not fail to make a decidedly pleasing impression on the audience. It was also shown that no earthly fame, or worldly renown, beckoned the brave missionary onward in his self-sacrificing career, but the holy desire to spread the news of a Redeemer among the inhabitants of the unknown wilds of North America. He finally succeeded in bearing the Cross down the waters of the Mississippi, to the mouth of the Arkansas, established a mission among the Illinois Indians, and laid his weary frame to rest on the shores of Lake Michigan. Reference was also made to the statues of the great explorer, one being in the town of Marquette, Mich., and the other in Washington.

Rev. Father Galvin, who was present, also gave a very interesting address, and congratulated Miss Cahill on the excellent essay, which she had prepared for the evening. He also congratulated the Association on the work that had been done during the season, and urged them to still continue a course of good reading.

The reading of the season's report by Miss Casey brought a very interesting literary evening to a close.

STRICTLY ENFORCED LICENSE LAWS.

Temperence People of Rawdon Township Rejoiced over the Enforcement.

The Stirling News-Argus is informed that as a result of the recent liquor prosecutions of parties in Rawdon there is not a drop of liquor to be had at any place in Spring Brook or elsewhere in the township. The closing up of all these places where liquor has been illegally sold is a great gain to the temperance cause in the township.

WM. E. ARMSTRONG AGAIN REMANDED.

Crown not Ready to Continue—Boys Charged with Firing at Game.

Evidently William E. Armstrong, alias Bradley, alias Stanley Steele the ex-convict and alleged bogus St. Louis Exposition employment agent, has made a pronounced impression while in Peterborough, for the police court was well crowded this morning. Armstrong's previous eight days' remand expired yesterday and he was consequently in the prisoner's dock this morning. But the crowd was again for the third time doomed to disappointment, for all the witnesses on the Crown side had not arrived, and the prisoner was again remanded. This time it was for a week, and he will appear again on Friday morning, April 27th.

William Maxwell David Smith, Bernard Revoy, Vincent Hourrigan and Robert Brotherson, boys whose ages range from 12 to 16 years, were arraigned on a charge of shooting within the town limits. All pleaded not guilty. The evidence went to show that a crowd of fifth ward boys congregate in a half built house on Euclid avenue every evening. The offense charged was committed on the evenings of April 12th and 13th, and it was apparent that all had a hand in the shooting, although only one charge reached home. Robert Brotherson was fined $5, to be paid within ten days, or imprisonment for that period. In giving sentence the Magistrate emphasized the danger of indiscriminate shooting and sternly reprimanded the defendants on their conduct. He warned them that if any further complaints were made the matter would be looked at in a much more serious light, and dealt with so much the more harshly.

WITH HIBERNIANS WEDNESDAY NIGHT.

Pleasant Evening Spent in Hall on Hunter Street.

A most enjoyable "At Home" was given by Division No. 1, Ancient Order of Hibernians, in their hall, Hunter street, on Wednesday evening. A large number of persons were present and the evening was spent pleasantly with cards. Later on a little dancing was indulged in. This was the second "At Home" given since the Society's organization and was a most successful one.

"ONE GOOD TURN DESERVES ANOTHER."

Is Mr. Richard Dawson's Life Maxim.

Mrs Swanston's Kindness to Him when a Boy Returned an Hundredfold Now that He is a Man.

Some twenty-five years ago, a little boy, ill-clad and bare-footed, used to visit Mrs. Wm. Swanston's bake-shop in Ashburnham. He was only a little "newsy," but for all that his cheerful manner, in spite of all ill-luck, won him a warm place in the kind heart of the woman who used to give him buns. Such luxuries he seldom got at home, and his visits to the bakeshop were daily. The boy's name was Richard Dawson. One day he left Peterborough, and for years nothing was heard of him. The scene changes. A period of 20 years has elapsed. Far away in Alaska, at the gold fields of Nome, the boy, grown to manhood, searched and found treasure. He became very wealthy. Now he has returned to renew the acquaintances of his youth. On Tuesday afternoon he called around in a cab for his benefactor, Mrs. Swanston, and took her for a drive. The old lady's heart was full of joy at his homecoming, and at his marked success. And while they were away enjoying the pleasures to be derived from a drive men came to the little white-washed house, and taking up the time-worn rugs and old furniture, re-furnished it. This was then the surprise which Mr. Dawson had made for his old friend. The luxuries which money had brought him had not drowned the remembrance of the buns he got in the little bakeshop. What a contrast to the New York millionaire, who one day when he met a little girl sobbing bitterly, because she had lost a nickel with which she was to have bought a loaf of bread, taking a lucifer from his vest pocket, said, "Never mind; stop crying; here's a match to look for it!"

Now Mrs. Swanston in her old age is happy. The gifts of buns were made from the bottom of her heart, with no expectation whatever of any return. But Mr. Dawson's motto is "One good turn deserves another," and he found himself in a position to remember it an hundred fold.

The women all say that the "Happy Thought Range" is the most economical and satisfactory stove in use.

REPORT SHOWED PLEASING RESULT.

Work of St. Peters T. A. S. Ladies Literary Association.

Reported on at Last Meeting for the Season Excellent Work of the Association.

At the meeting of the Ladies' Literary Association of St. Peter's T.A.S. held last night, Miss M Casey presented a report of the season's work of the Association for the year ending April 14th. Miss Casey's report follows:—

ORGANIZATION AND WORK OF THE COMMITTEE.

On Monday evening, Sept. 28th, 1903, an open meeting of the Ladies' Literary Association was held in the society's hall for the purpose of appointing a Ladies' Committee, and re-organizing the work for the season. The meeting resulted in the appointment of a committee of fifteen ladies, and to them was entrusted the management of the affairs in connection with the Association. The members of the newly-appointed committee then met and the election of the following officers took place:

President—Miss Cahill.
Secretary—Miss O'Connell.
Treasurer—Miss O'Brien.
Reporter—Miss Casey.

The first committee meeting was held on Friday evening, October 2nd, when three hundred ladies' library tickets were distributed among the members of the committee. A committee meeting was held every Friday evening, at which returns from the sale of tickets were made. These meetings were from the outset, well attended, and returns were promptly made to the secretary and treasurer. Within the short space of eight days, from October 2 to October 10, the treasurer had received the sum of $46.50. Various sums were received at the different meetings, the final returns being made Feb. 11, when 292 names were entered on the list as members of the Association. Since then give tickets have been purchased from the Librarian, so that the membership at the present time numbers 297, an increase of 53 members over that of last year. The receipts of the treasurer show that her final payment was made to the financial secretary of the Total Abstinence Society on 23rd March, and that the total sum paid over to the Society, as proceeds from sale of ladies' tickets, was one hundred and forty-eight dollars and fifty cents.

On Monday, April 4th, the Ladies Literary Committee held an "At Home" for the benefit of the Hockey Club, which proved very successful also. The sum of fifty-six dollars and eighty cents was realized and paid over to the treasurer of the Hockey Executive. Therefore from Oct. 10, to April 4, the Total Abstinence Society had received from the Ladies' Committee, the sum of two hundred and eight dollars and thirty cents; being just twenty dollars and eighty cents more than the sum received last year.

LITERARY WORK.

The aim of the Literary Association, has been to stimulate and cultivate a taste for good reading—leading of a high and elevated standard; to advance and encourage them along various lines, while at the same time, devoting at least a small portion of the winter evenings to a source of interest and instruction. The system of conducting the work, has been somewhat similar to that of the past two years; a paper being read every two weeks in connection with a short musical programme.

The first Literary meeting of the season was held Friday Oct. 16, when an address on "Books and Reading," was given by Rev. Dr. O'Brien. The first essay was read:—

Oct. 30, on "Daniel O'Connell," by Miss O'Connell.
Nov. 13—"Introduction of Christianity into Europe," Miss Casey.
Dec. 11—"Catacombs," Miss O'Heron.
Jan. 7—"Early Martyrs," Miss Holmes.
Jan. 28—"Roman Colosseum," Miss McGrath.
Feb. 11—"Pope Leo XIII," Miss Coleman.
Feb. 25—"Peace Restored to the Church," Miss Kelly.
March 10—"Father Matthew," Miss Casey.
March 24—"Ireland," Miss Devlin.
April 14—"Father Marquette," Miss Cahill.

Even from this brief summary of the work, some idea may be had of the amount of work accomplished during the past six months, and the results of the season's undertakings, must be gratifying not only to those entrusted with the charge of the work, but also to the members of the whole Association. The interest felt by the members in these literary evenings was amply evidenced in the average large attendance at the various meetings.

In closing this very successful season, then, the Ladies of the Committee desire to thank all those who in any way, rendered any assistance, either by preparing essays, or taking part in the various programmes that have been presented throughout the year.

In conclusion, also, we take this opportunity of expressing our sincere gratitude to Rev. Dr. O'Brien for the valuable assistance and encouragement he has so cheerfully given us at all times, for his regular attendance at our meetings, and for the deep interest he has manifested in our Association since its first organization.

LINDSAY.

Whatever else can be said of the Lindsay water in the winter, it is certainly iced water; and this selfsame ice is a source of some anxiety on the approach of spring. As is only natural, the surface of the water in the standpipe freezes to a considerable depth in the cold weather. The varying heights of the water result in this ice mass becoming very large in a severe winter. While it is solid and adheres to the sides of the tank no trouble results, but as spring approaches and this mass loosens up it becomes a proposition, and until it has been disposed of, Supt. Begbie is as restless as a woman with the house-cleaning fever.

Here is an iceberg on the top of a mountain—worse than that; it is an iceberg at the top of a slender tube of 1-2 inch boiler plate, 120 feet high. Tons of ice lie up there in a big chunk that sways and totters as the water rises and falls under the thrust and retreat of the pump strokes down at the river. Suppose while the tons-weight mass is lodged in the standpipe, the water for any reason gets low and leaves the iceberg perched 20, 30 or 40 feet above it. Then the melting mass suddenly loses its hold and falls that height to the water below. Result: a shattered pipe—and after that, the deluge; for the "water hammer" formed by that plunge, no common steel plate could resist.—Watchman-Warder.

* * *

Lindsay citizens made great "to-do" over the fact that at last the slow old town had adopted the modern method of thawing out water pipes by electricity, months and in some cases years, after other modern towns such as Peterborough, had been using the same process, and now when the bill for it all comes in this is the way the Watchman-Warder describes the feelings of the city fathers:—

"Feelings akin to consternation were roused in the commissioners by the bill of the Light, Heat & Power Company for $84 for thawing out water pipes. Was that all for town work? Yes. Where the freezing was inside the building the owner paid.

For the benefit of those Lindsay folks it may be stated that in some instances the local company secured $25 in one day for thawing out service pipes.

PORT HOPE.

A stout and somewhat short man who says he is a railway man, and who wears overalls, a peaked cap, with a red handkerchief around his neck, has caused some commotion in town this week.

On one occasion he opened the front door of a house near John street, walked into the kitchen, picked up some money that was lying on the window sill, and walked out again without uttering a word. The lady of the house, who happened to be upstairs at the time, heard the noise of footsteps, and looked over the banisters in time to see the stranger let himself out of the front door and walk away. She was naturally somewhat startled and on investigation discovered the loss of the money which had been in the kitchen.—Times.

* * *

One day this week, one of our townsmen was in search of a hen to set on some duck eggs, and while on his hunt he wandered into the Port Hope Brewery, and told the engineer of the cause of his visit, says the Port Hope Times. The engineer told him that he had a hen that would set anywhere he put her, and told him to go to the house, which was some distance from the brewery, to get the hen. The man started off with a smile on his face, and counting his chickens before they were hatched. When he arrived at the house he enquired as to where the hen was, and the little boy spoke up saying that the dog had brought a hen there last week, which was now in the yard dead. The man is still hunting for a hen.

NORWOOD.

What might have been a fatal accident occurred on Friday last in this village. Stanley, the youngest son of Mr. E. J. Laing, with several other boys, was running over the piles of logs in Messrs. Buck and McLean's yard, adjoining The Register office, when the little Laing boy missed his footing and fell between two huge elm logs. As he fell the logs rolled together, catching him about the middle of the body, and holding him firmly, so that he was unable to release himself. Fortunately the snow and ice underneath kept the logs from pressing too tightly, otherwise his little body would have been squeezed to a pulp.

WAS RELATED TO LOCAL RESIDENTS.

The late Robert Gilholm, of Galt, was Uncle of Ald. Scott and Mr. W. J. Scott.

The following despatch from Galt tells of the death of Mr. Robert Gilholm, uncle of Ald. W. Scott, of the Fifth Ward, and Mr. W. J. Scott, of Water street:—

"Robert Gilholm, one of the oldest and most prominent residents of Galt, died at 2.30 o'clock Monday afternoon, aged 71 years. He was born in North Dumfries. Thirty-five years ago he moved into town and purchased the sawmilling business of Andrew Dryden, which, with George Hogg, he conducted for sixteen years. A few years ago he retired. He was the largest owner of residential property in Galt, and had amassed a considerable fortune. He was married in 1855 to Jane Scott, daughter of the late Wm. Scott of South Dumfries, who with four daughters and one son survive. The daughters are Mrs. J. D. Allen, Mrs. W. N. Todd, Miss Gilholm, of Galt, and Mrs. Ray Shurly of Toronto. The son is Robert, of Los Angeles, Cal. The deceased had a long and honourable municipal career. He was Mayor of the town in 1893 and 1894, and was a Councillor for ten years. He was also a County Councillor for eight years, being Warden in 1892. He was also connected with the Public School Board. He was first elected trustee in 1880. Since 1893 he had been continuously on the board, being Chairman during the last seven years. He had been a member of the hospital trust since the establishment of that institution thirteen years ago. In politics he was a staunch Liberal, and in religion a Presbyterian. He was for many years Chairman of the Board of Managers of the Central Presbyterian Church."

IRISH TONGUE REVIVED

REDEMPTION OF CUSTOMS AND LANGUAGE BY THE GAELIC LEAGUE.

Has Already Permeated Into Many Quarters of Ireland and Is Producing Results—Revival of Irish Industries, of Irish Customs and Music Is Following in Its Wake—Putting a New Soul Into the Nation.

Less than ten years ago the Gaelic League was founded in Ireland, its principal objects being to preserve the Irish language as a spoken tongue and to cultivate a modern literature in Irish. For the first few years of its existence comparatively little progress was made beyond the teaching of Irish in a few classes in Dublin and in the country and the publication and distribution of some propagandist pamphlets.

At the advent of the Gaelic League the Irish language was fast disappearing, and with it a vast treasure of traditional lore in the form of poems and stories handed down for generations. In scarcely any of the schools was Irish taught, and in the national schools of the west and south, in districts where Irish is still the vernacular, English was taught to pupils who could speak only Irish by teachers who knew no Irish. Even to-day this anomaly in education is not wholly removed.

The Gaelic League, however, set to work in attacking the school system, and has succeeded to such an extent that Irish has been introduced into about 2,000 of these schools. In the meantime the Gaelic League, as a national organization, had been rapidly growing in strength and influence—not a little of its success being due to a series of powerful lectures delivered by the Rev. P. F. Yorke, of San Francisco, in Dublin and in the country, during the year 1899. Since that year the progress of the league, for a body which enjoins the learning of a language on its members, was almost phenomenal. Branches rapidly sprang up all over the country until at present over 600 teaching and organizing centres exist.

Each year in Dublin the Oireachtas, the great national festival of the league, is held. It lasts for a week, and consists of competitions for original essays, poems and short stories in Irish, collections of folklore, vocal and musical competitions, in which the pipes, the harp and the fiddle receive special attention; competitions in oratory, recitation, the drama and in dancing, each day being brought to a close by a great concert and drama in the largest halls in the city. Similar festivals on a smaller scale have been gradually started all over the country until there is now scarcely a corner of the country into which the league has entered that has not its yearly Feis, the largest of these being those held in Cork and Galway.

The Gaelic League does its own publishing, and, what has astonished Dublin publishers, the books have met with a rapid sale. Apart from these works of a literary character enormous numbers of elementary books for students are sold, chiefly of the series compiled by the Rev. Father O'Growney—one of the league's earliest and most untiring workers. Dublin has scarcely seen anything more imposing than the funeral of this simple priest through its streets last August on the return of his remains from Los Angeles.

The league maintains two official papers—one "Da Claidheamh Soluis" (The Sword of Light), a weekly bilingual newspaper, the other a monthly magazine wholly in Irish. Rev. Father Dineen is at present engaged on the new Irish Dictionary.

Another man who has left his mark strongly on the league is Mr. John MacNeil, the second vice-president. He is a fine grammarian and one of the league's most accurate scholars. He was one of the original founders of the organization and one of its most earnest workers. Some of your readers may have a closer acquaintance with Rev. Dr. Henebry, late professor of Irish in Washington University. Dr Henebry is at present in Ireland giving a helping hand with the work of the league. He recently published a dissertation on Irish music which has raised considerable discussion here.

The Gaelic League has permeated into many quarters in Ireland, and is producing many results apart from those with which it was immediately concerned. The revival of Irish industries, of Irish customs and music is following in its wake. Along with this it is raising the morals of the people and putting a new soul into the nation. The Ireland of to-day is very different in many respects from the Ireland of twenty years ago.

"Esperer—I Remember."

The following story first published in T. P. O'Connor's Mainly About People, is going the rounds. Among the many teachers of French that the King had as a young man is numbered a French Count, who is still living. This gentleman was really employed to put the finishing touches to the King's knowledge of French, which, as most readers know, is well nigh perfect. One day he referred to the use of the indicative after the verb esperer. This verb, as students will remember, is an exception to the rule that the subjunctive is employed in French after verbs expressing the feelings. The Prince—as he then was—at once exclaimed, "Yes I must remember. That is a mistake I always make." Many years after, another trait of the King's was brought out by an accidental meeting with the Count. I refer to his well-known good memory. The Count had heard that the King was to land at Marseilles, where he then happened to be. So he went down to the quay. Even amongst the crowd that had assembled the King picked out his old teacher and called out to him: "Esperer, I remember!"

Nervous Author.

Burns—So your new play was performed last night? Was there a call for the author?

Plotter—There was no general demand for his appearance, but I heard one or two men say they'd like to see the man who wrote it. I didn't like the way they said it and got out of the house as soon as I could.—Boston Transcript.

Cut glass and bric-a-brac should always be washed with Sunlight Soap. Shave enough Sunlight Soap into a pan, one-quarter full of lukewarm water and whisk into a lather. Wash the articles thoroughly and dry with a soft cloth. This insures that brilliancy and sparkle so much admired in cut glass articles. Sunlight Soap can be used to clean and brighten all through the household. It is the purest and best soap made.

AUNT ELIZABETH, MATCHMAKER

By T. BLAIR EATON

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

The orchestra leader waved his baton energetically, as if summoning his drooping charges to spurt in the last quarter; then, with a final roar, in which drums and cymbals strove to outdo each other, the waltz came to an end, while the perspiring musicians mopped their faces and cursed in guttural German these Wednesday night hops.

Mr. William Fosdeck stepped through the low window on to the veranda with a sigh of relief and a sense of duty done. He had danced with each one of the three giggling Maxson girls and now felt assured he richly merited a cigarette and a few moments' quiet on the broad, moonlit veranda, where the tinkle of the surf on the rocks below was a grateful contrast to the noise and whirl of the palm bowered, stifling room he had just left.

As he turned the corner to claim his favorite nook some one called, "Oh, good evening, Mr. Fosdeck!"

He turned and beheld Gertrude Martin and her aunt in the shadow of the ivy vine. It was Aunt Elizabeth who had hailed him.

"Ah, not dancing, I see," said Fosdeck, throwing away the newly lighted cigarette—with what inward thoughts may be imagined—and taking the vacant chair by Miss Martin.

"No," said the girl; "it's so delightful here."

"A trifle chilly, though, Gertrude, dear," her aunt said. "If you'll both excuse me for a moment I think I'll get a wrap."

"Shan't I get it for you, Mrs. Curtis?" said Fosdeck.

"Oh, thank you, no," Aunt Elizabeth returned. "I really don't know where mine is, and I anticipate quite a hunt before I finally run it to earth."

As Aunt Elizabeth disappeared around the corner the girl sighed resignedly.

"Oh, dear," she said, "it's too absurd. She invariably stampedes within three minutes after you appear, and her motive is so horribly obvious."

Fosdeck laughed. "Her methods are a trifle open," he observed.

"But I feel very different now we understand each other," the girl went on. "It was awfully embarrassing at first, especially that time she managed to miss the coach down from the village and left us to ride back together."

HE SAW SOME ONE FLUTTERING A HANDKERCHIEF FROM THE PIER.

"Yes," Fosdeck laughed; "you were a perfect little fury sitting there opposite me. Really you made me feel it was I, not Aunt Elizabeth, who had engineered the whole affair."

"I wanted you to hate me," she said.

"Last winter," he said slowly, "when your Aunt Elizabeth was preaching you to me all the time, I decided if I ever met you to dislike you very much."

"I'm glad, after all, it hasn't made us enemies," she said.

"So am I," he asserted, with a fervor that made her glance up at him quickly. "Poor Aunt Elizabeth!" he went on. "I fancy she doesn't dream her plans have merely succeeded in setting us conspiring to defeat her schemes. I'm almost sorry for her."

"She's so terribly in earnest about it," said the girl. "Every time she makes those idiotic excuses and leaves us I think I'll speak my mind plainly to her. Then I go upstairs simply boiling, and she meets me with such bless-you-my-child-didn't-I-fix-it-beautifully sort of air that I haven't the heart to say a word. Now," she said, rising, "I shall leave you, for you want to be alone and finish your smoke."

"Really, Miss Martin"— he began.

"Now, don't spoil it all by saying things which are generally expected at such a time," she said. "I like you best when you're perfectly frank."

"I wish you wouldn't go," he persisted.

"I want a promise from you before I leave," she said. "Don't go down in your catboat tomorrow to the picnic on Poplar island with the fleet, will you?"

"Why?" he asked.

"It's high time we were taking the field against Aunt Elizabeth. She counted on our sailing down with you. I told her you weren't going."

"And you're going back day after tomorrow," he said, almost reproachfully.

"You must back my word," she said "If it amounts to that, I won't go," he answered.

"Thanks. Good night," she called, and was gone.

Fosdeck strode down the walk toward the water. He was thinking of the girl as she stood there on the veranda, the moonlight on her copper colored hair and her dark eyes looking frankly into his own. Halfway down to the water he stopped suddenly and dug his toe viciously into the gravel.

"Oh, hang Aunt Elizabeth!" he growled.

Fosdeck watched the fleet depart for the island next morning, with them Miss Martin and her aunt. He spent a miserable day wandering about the woods behind the hotel. Late in the afternoon he took the catboat and sailed down past the island, where he saw the fleet anchored, and caught a glimpse of the merry picnic party on the shore. Then he sailed southward, and not until he saw the fleet start for home did he turn about to come back.

As he neared Poplar island he saw some one fluttering a handkerchief from the pier. He ran ashore to find Aunt Elizabeth and Miss Martin on the pierhead.

"This is rare good fortune," Aunt Elizabeth said ingenuously as they came aboard. Presently she found an excuse to go below.

"Oh, what made you sail down past here?" said the girl when they were alone. "Aunt Elizabeth recognized the boat by the queer pennant you fly. Of course then she contrived to have us left behind when the fleet sailed back and signaled you when you came along."

"Poor soul, I wanted to give her one more chance!" he returned.

"Let's go outside going back," she suggested. "It'll be rough out there in this wind."

"Your aunt"— he began doubtfully.

"It's what she deserves," she said grimly.

They went outside the chain of islands into a strong breeze and rough water. Salt spray flew over the bow in bucketfuls as they sped along. Miss Martin sat on the edge of the cockpit, her hair in fine disarray in the wind and her eyes shining.

"Isn't this glorious?" she said. "I'm almost grateful to Aunt Elizabeth for once."

One little hand grasped the rail near the wheel. Fosdeck watched it hungrily and suddenly decided the wheel needed but one of his own brown hands. The other closed over the little hand on the rail. She looked up in surprise, but made no attempt to withdraw it.

"If Aunt Elizabeth hadn't preached you to me on all conceivable occasions I'd propose," he said, his voice husky with emotion.

"If Aunt Elizabeth hadn't thrown me at your head I'd accept you," she returned.

"Let's call Aunt Elizabeth nil," he cried.

"Let's," she replied very softly.

His free arm drew her gently from the rail and close beside him, and at that moment some one came up through the companionway. Aunt Elizabeth stood before them clutching the little brass rail, very white and shaky, but even in that moment of physical anguish she beamed upon them triumphantly, as one who has fought a good fight.

"Ah, I knew it from the very first."

A FEAT OF STRENGTH.

After Hearing Explanation Insurance Companies Settle Claim.

It was a most peculiar case, so the insurance men said, with wags of the head that meant much more than they might easily be induced to say with a little more provocation.

The building had been destroyed by fire, and its occupant, one Theodore Titewad, testified that he had held the office safe suspended from a window until the firemen had come to his relief.

The attorney for the insurance companies who were contesting the claim on the building looked scornfully at Theodore, and the following cross examination took place:

"Mr. Titewad, will you kindly tell the jury what your approximate weight is?"

"About 110 pounds."

"Have you ever been known as an athlete?"

"No, sir."

"Have you ever before performed any noteworthy feats of strength?"

"No, sir."

"Very well, sir. Now, what is the weight of the safe you claim to have held suspended from the second story window for five minutes with one hand and unassisted?"

"One ton."

"That will do. The witness may step aside, and Fireman O'Rourke will take the stand. Ah, Mr. O'Rourke, will you tell the jury whether Mr. Titewad performed this feat of strength he has just sworn to?"

"Sure, sor, it weren't in his fate, but in his hands thot th' shtrength were, sor."

"I mean did he hold this safe as he says he did?"

"Yis, sor."

"What!"

"Yis, sor. Yez see, sor, yez don't know Misther Titewad loike th' rist av us does or yez wuddent be surprised. Yez see, th' sa-afe had money in it, an' Titewad was niver knowed t' lit go av annything thot had money in it, sor."

Seeing that they were defeated by overwhelming evidence, the insurance company at once arranged for the payment of the claim in full.—Baltimore American.

Your System Demands Help.

Just Such Help as Can Best be Supplied by the Use of the Great Restorative.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Spring seems to be the time of year when the vitality of the human system is at its lowest ebb.

To most people the winter season is a trying time. Either as a result of colds or the effects of indoor life with poor ventilation or the use of artificial foods, the system gets run down and exhausted, the blood becomes thin and watery and the nerves play out.

Headache, sleeplessness, stomach troubles, loss of energy and ambition, feelings of discouragement and despondency, are among the symptoms which cause distress.

It doesn't do to neglect these warning notes. Your system needs help, and you cannot do better than call to your aid Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

If you have been reading the cases reported in the newspapers from day to day in which this great medicine has been instrumental in restoring health and strength to weak and suffering people you are no doubt already convinced as to its extraordinary medicinal properties.

Then why not make a test in your own case? You cannot possibly use preparation which is so certain to prove of lasting benefit.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box. 4

Purified by Suffering

BY MARY J. HOLMES.

And all that day she was thinking of him, and how pleasantly she would meet him when he came home at night, and how she would try to win him from the dark, silent mood now so habitual to him. More than usual pains she took with her toilet, arranging her bright hair in the long glossy curls, which she knew he used to admire, and making sundry little changes in her black dress. Excitement had brought a faint flush to her cheeks, and she was conscious of a feeling of gratification that for the first time in months she was looking like her former self. Slowly the minutes crept on, and the silver-toned clock in the dining room said it was time for Wilford to come, then the night shadows gathered in the rooms, and the gas was lighted in the hall and in the parlor, where Katy's face was pressed against the window pane, and Katy's eyes peered anxiously out into the darkening streets, but saw no one alighting at their door. Wilford did not come. Neither six, nor seven, nor eight brought him home, and Katy sat down alone to her dinner, which, save the soup and coffee, was removed untasted. She could not eat with the terrible dread at her heart that this protracted absence portended something more than common. Ten, eleven, and twelve struck from a distant tower. He had staid out as late as that frequently, but rarely later, and Katy listened again for him, until the clock struck one, and she grew sick with fear and apprehension. It was a long, long wretched night, but morning came at last, and at an early hour Katy drove down to Wilford's office, finding no one there besides Tom Tubbs and Mills, the other clerk. Katy could not conceal her agitation, and her face was very white as she asked what time Mr. Cameron left the office the previous day.

If Katy had one subject more loyal than another it was young Tom Tubbs, whose boyish blood had often boiled with rage at the cool manner with which Wilford treated his wife, when, as she sometimes did, she came into the office. Tom worshiped Katy Cameron, who in his whispered confidences to Mattie, was an angel, while Wilford was accused of being an overbearing tyrant, whom Tom would like to thrash. He saw at once that something unusual was troubling her, and hastening to bring her a chair, told her that Mr. Cameron left the office about four o'clock; that he had spent the most of the day in his private office writing and looking over papers; that he had given his clerks so many directions with regard to certain matters, that Mills had remarked upon it, saying: "It would seem as if he did not expect to be here to see to it himself," and this was all Katy could learn, but it was enough to increase the growing terror at her heart, and dropping her veil, she went out to her carriage, followed by Tom, who adjusted the gay robe across her lap, and then looked wistfully after her as she drove up Broadway.

"To father Cameron's," she said to the driver, who turned his horses towards Fifth Avenue, where, just coming down the steps of his own house, they met the elder Cameron.

Katy would rather see him first alone, and motioning him to her side she whispered: "Oh, father is Wilford here?"

"Wilford be ——;" the old man did not say what, for the expression of Katy's face startled him.

That there was something wrong, and father Cameron knew it, was Katy's conviction, and she gasped out:

"Tell me the worst. Is Wilford dead?"

Father Cameron was in the carriage by this time, and riding towards Madison Square, for he did not care to introduce Katy into his household which, just at present, presented a scene of dire confusion and dismay, occasioned by a note received from Wilford to the intent that he had left New York, and did not know when he should return.

"Katy can tell you why I go," he added, and father Cameron was going to Katy when she met him at his door.

To Katy's repeated question: "Is he dead?" he answered: "Worse than that, I fear. He has left the city, and no one knows for what, unless you do. From something he wrote, my wife is led to suppose there was trouble between you two. Was there?" and father Cameron's gray eyes rested earnestly on the white, frightened face which looked up so quickly as Katy gasped:

"There has been trouble—that is, he has not appeared quite the same since——"

She was interrupted by the carriage stopping before her door, but when they were in the parlor, father Cameron said:

"Go on now. Wilford has not been the same since when?"

Thus importuned, Katy continued:

"Since baby died. I think he blamed me as the cause of its death."

"Don't babies die every day?" father Cameron growled, while Katy, without considering that he had never heard of Genevra, continued:

"And then it was worse after I found out about Genevra, his first wife."

"Genevra! Genevra, Wilford's first wife! Thunder and lightning! what are you talking about?" and father Cameron bent down to look into Katy's face, thinking she was going mad.

But Katy was not mad, and knowing it was now too late to retract, she told the story of Genevra Lambert to the old man, who, utterly confounded, stalked up and down the room, kicking away chairs and footstools, and whatever came in his way and swearing promiscuously at his wife and Wilford, whom he pronounced a precious pair of fools, with a dreadful adjective appended to the fools, and an emphasis in his voice which showed he meant what he said.

"It's all accounted for now," he said; "the piles of money that boy had abroad, his privacy with his mother, and all the other tomfoolery I could not understand. Katy," and pausing in his walk, Mr. Cameron came close to his daughter-in-law, who was lying with her face upon the sofa, "Katy, be glad your baby died. Had it lived it might have proved a curse, just as mine have done—not all, for Bell, though fiery as a pepperpod has some heart, some sense—and there was Jack, my oldest boy, a little fast, it's true, but when he died over the sea, I forgave all that, and forgot the chair he broke over a tutor's head, and the scrapes for which I paid as high as a thousand at one time. He sowed his wild oats, and died before he could reap them—died a good man, I believe, and went to Heaven. Juno you know, and you can judge whether she is such as would delight a parent's heart, while Wilford, my only boy, to deceive me so; I knew he was a fool in some things, but I did trust Wilford."

The old man's voice shook now, and Katy felt his tears dropping on her hair as he stooped over her. Checking them, however, he said:

"And he was cross because you found him out. Was there no other reason?"

Katy thought of Dr. Morris, but she could not tell of that, and so she answered:

"There was—but please don't ask me now. I can't tell, only I was not to blame. Believe me, father, I was not to blame."

"I'll swear to that," was the reply, and father Cameron commenced his walking again, just as Esther came to the door with the morning letters.

There was one from Wilford for Katy, who nervously tore off the envelope and read as follows:

"Will you be sorry when you read this and find that I am gone, that you are free from the husband you do not love,—whom, perhaps, you never loved, though I thought you did. I trusted you once, and now I do not blame you as much as I ought, for you are young and easily influenced. You are very susceptible to flattery, as was proven by your career at Saratoga and Newport. I had no suspicion of you then, but now that I know you better, I see that it was not all childish simplicity which made you smile so graciously upon those who sought your favor. You are a coquette, Katy, and the greater one because of that semblance of artlessness which is the perfection of art. This, however, I might forgive, if I had not learned that another man loved you first and wished to make you his wife, while you, in your secret heart, wish you had known it sooner. Don't deny it, Katy, I saw it in your face when I first told you of Dr. Grant's confession, and I heard it in your voice as well as in your word, when you said 'A life at Linwood would be perfect rest compared with this.' That hurt me cruelly, Katy. I did not deserve it from one for whom I have done and borne so much, and it was the final cause of my leaving you, for I am going to Washington to enroll myself in the service of my country. You will be happier without me for a while, and perhaps when I return, Linwood will not look quite the little paradise it does now.

"I might reproach you with having telegraphed to Dr. Grant about that miserable Genevra affair which you had not discretion enough to keep to yourself. Few men would care to have their wives send for a former lover in their absence and ask that lover to take them away. Your saintly cousin, good as he is, cannot wonder at my vexation, or blame me greatly for going away. Perhaps he will offer you comfort, both religious and otherwise, but if you ever wish me to return, avoid him as you would shun a deadly poison. Until I countermand the order, I wish you to remain in the house which I bought for you. Helen and your mother both may live with you, while father will have a general oversight of your affairs. I shall send him a line to that effect.

"Your Disappointed Husband."

This was the letter, and there was perfect silence while Katy read it through. Mr. Cameron never taking his eyes from her face, which turned first white, then red, then spotted, and finally took a leaden hue as Katy ran over the lines, comprehending the truth as she read, and when the letter was finished, lifting her dry, tearless eyes to Father Cameron, and whispering to herself:

"Deserted!"

She let him read the letter, and when he had finished, explained the parts he did not understand, telling him now what Morris had confessed—telling him too that in her first sorrow, when life and sense seemed reeling, she had sent for Dr. Grant, knowing she could trust him and be right in doing whatever he advised.

"Why did you say you sent for him—that is, what was the special reason?" Mr. Cameron asked, and Katy told him her belief that Genevra was living—that it was she who made the bridal trousseau for Wilford's second wife, she who nursed his child until it died, giving to it her own name, arraying it for the grave, and then leaving before the father came.

"I never told Wilford," Katy said. "I felt as if I would rather he should not know it yet. Perhaps I was wrong, but if so, I have been terribly punished."

Mr. Cameron could not look upon the woman who stood before him, so helpless and stricken in her desolation, and believe her wrong in anything. The guilt lay in another direction, and when, as the terrible reality that she was indeed a deserted wife came rushing over Katy, she tottered toward him for help, he stretched his arms out for her, and taking the sinking figure in them, laid it upon the sofa as gently, as kindly, as Wilford had ever touched it in his most loving days.

Katy did not faint nor weep. She was past all that; but her face was like a piece of marble, and her eyes were like those of the hunted fawn when the chase is at its height, and escape impossible.

"Wilford will come back, of course," the father said, "but that does not help us now. What the plague—who is ringing that bell enough to break the wire?" he added, as a sharp, rapid ring echoed through the house, and was answered by Esther. "It's my wife," he continued, as he caught the sound of her voice in the hall.

"You stay here while I meet her first alone. I'll give it to her for cheating me so long, and raising thunder generally!"

Katy tried to protest, but he was half way down the stairs, and in a moment more was with his wife, who, impatient at his long delay, had come herself, armed and equipped, to censure Katy as the cause of Wilford's disappearance, and to demand of her what she had done. But the lady who came in so haughty and indignant was a very different personage from the lady who, after listening for fifteen minutes to a fearful storm of oaths and reproaches, mingling with startling truths and bitter denunciations against herself and her boy, sank into a chair, pale and trembling, and overwhelmed with the harvest she was reaping.

But her husband was not through with her yet. He had reserved the bitterest drop for the last, and coming close to her he said:

"And who think you the woman is—this Genevra, Wilford's and your divorced wife? You were too proud to acknowledge an apothecary's daughter! See if you like better a dressmaker, a nurse to Katy's baby, Marian Hazelton!"

He whispered the last name, and with a shriek the lady fainted. Mr. Cameron would not summon a servant; and as there was no water in the room, he walked to the window, and lifting the sash scraped from the sill a handful of the light spring snow which had been falling since morning. With this he brought his wife back to consciousness, and then marked out her future course.

"I know what is in your mind," he said; "people will talk about Wilford's going off suddenly, and you would like to have all the blame rest on Katy; but, madam, hear me. Just so sure as through your means one breath of suspicion falls on her, I'll blazon out the whole story of Genevra. Then see who is censured. On the other hand, if you hold your tongue, and make Juno hold hers, and stick to Katy through thick and thin, acting as if you would like to swallow her whole, I'll say nothing of this Genevra. Is it a bargain?"

"Yes," came faintly from the sofa cushions, where Mrs. Cameron had buried her face, sobbing in a confused, frightened way, and after a few moments asking to see Katy, whom she kissed and caressed with unwonted tenderness, telling her Wilford would come back, and adding, that in any event no one could or should blame her. "Wilford was wrong to deceive you about Genevra. I was wrong to let him; but we will have no more concealments. You think she is living still—that she is Marian Hazelton?" and Mrs. Cameron smoothed Katy's hair as she talked, trying to be motherly and kind, while her heart beat more painfully at thoughts of a Genevra living, than it ever had at thoughts of a Genevra dead.

Wilford's leaving home so suddenly to join the army, could not fail, even in New York, to cause some excitement, especially in his own immediate circle of acquaintance, and for several days the matter was discussed in all its phases, and every possible opinion and conjecture offered, as to the cause of his strange freak. They could not believe in domestic troubles when they saw how his family clung to and defended Katy from the least approach of censure. Juno taking up her abode with her "afflicted sister," Mrs. Cameron driving round each day to see her, Bell always speaking of her with genuine affection, while the father clung to her like a hero, the quartette forming a barrier across which the shafts of scandal could not reach.

The Demand For Whips.

To one who is not acquainted with the extent of the business it seems a mystery where all the whips go to. One local concern is able to turn out about 20,000 whips in a single day under favorable conditions, and it is only one of many companies. Westfield is of course the center of the whipmaking industry of the world, and there are many horses in that world. Some of the local whip men have studied the automobile question to quite an extent, endeavoring to find out the possible effect upon the whip business. Some thought a few years ago that the bicycle was responsible in a measure for the dull times in the whip business, and it may have had some effect. One would suppose the rapid construction of electric roads all over the country would tend to injure the whip trade, but in spite of automobiles and electric cars the output of whips continues year after year. One of the local whip men said recently that he had no fear of bicycles, automobiles or electric cars ruining the whip business.—Springfield Republican.

Robinson Crusoe's Gun.

Staid, conservative persons who are not endowed with any imagination may smile incredulously when they are told that the gun of the immortal Robinson Crusoe has long been the property of an English collector of curiosities, for they will say to themselves that Crusoe was a myth, and consequently that it would be as impossible to find any of his personal property as to discover a lineal descendant of his man Friday.

Crusoe, however, was not by any means an imaginary character in the sense that Don Quixote and Gil Blas were, for De Foe, in portraying him, had in mind the seaman Alexander Selkirk, who was put ashore by his captain on Juan Fernandez, an uninhabited island, in September, 1704. Now, Selkirk had with him on the island a few books, nautical instruments, a knife, a boiler, an ax and a gun, with powder and ball, and it is this gun which is owned by the English collector, and it is known far and wide as "Robinson Crusoe's gun."

The recent marriage of a couple of cripples, each having only half the proper complement of arms and legs, was noted by the press as a "connubial curiosity." But who notes the marriages which occur daily in which both parties are cripples in health.

Crippled health means, as a rule, insufficient nutrition, and lack of nutrition points to disease of the stomach and digestive and nutritive tract. Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enables the perfect nourishment of the body, and so builds it up in sound health and strength.

"I had been a great sufferer from indigestion for the last nine years," writes Mrs Margaret Single, of Owings Mills, Baltimore Co., Md. "I was such a wreck it seemed death was near, but to-day can say I feel like another woman. I have received much and lasting good from Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Favorite Prescription. I have taken twenty five bottles in all, and followed the advice of Dr R. V. Pierce, and am happy to say that life is worth living now. A thousand thanks for your treatment."

FOOTBALL.

Bowmanville may enter two teams in the Midland League this year. The town team has already signified its intention of entering, and the High School team will probably go into the series also.

(Special to the Examiner.)

A meeting of the Keene Football Club was held in the Kennafey House on Wednesday evening April 13th, to organize for the coming season and was well attended.

The following officers were duly elected:—

Hon. President—Dr. V. H. McWilliams.
President—S. McIntyre.
Vice-President—Wm. Pue.
Secretary-Treasurer—F. A. Eson.
Captain—E. V. McCarthy.
Committee—F. Walsh, Jas. Quinn, Jas. Dickson, Wm. McIntyre.
Delegate to League—J. R. McIntyre.

The Club purpose entering a team in the Midland League.

BASKET-BALL.

The Junior Arrows again defeated the Beavers at the Y.M.C.A. yesterday evening by a score of 36 to 8, thereby winning the intermediate championship of the city. The following was the personnel of the teams:—

Junior Arrows—H. Staunton, J. Ross, G. Miller, D. Loomis, N. Darling.

Beavers—E. Weller, H. Cressman, G. Thornton, Arthur Mann, Roy Thornton.

Referee—N. Miller.
Umpire—A. Fitzpatrick.

The score on the round is 59—17, the Arrows winning the first game by 23—9.

SPRINTING

The postponed five mile road-race between Dave Belland and A. J. Burns, which was to have taken place last Saturday afternoon will be pulled off to-morrow at 2.30 p.m., the course to be two miles and a half on the Lakefield road and return, finishing at the Oak Hall corner.

The event is creating considerable interest and speculation is keen as to the probable winner. The close finish in the last race between these two men makes the result uncertain, although Burns' backers are confident that he will prove a winner, and are said to be offering odds of 2 to 1 on their favourite.

Liptor's Teas.

Among the many interesting exhibits at the World's Fair at St. Louis, Mo., will be the display of Lipton's teas, which will include a very fine collection of photographs of the different estates owned by the Lipton Company in sunny Ceylon. The various processes through which the tea passes after it is picked until it is ready for the table will be included in this photographic display, so that the thousands of visitors to the Fair may see for themselves the scientific methods that are employed. Not the least interesting part of the exhibit will be the collection of gold medals awarded to Lipton's "finest teas" at expositions in different parts of the world during the past twenty years. As medals are awarded for greatest merit the collection proves that the phrase applied to Lipton's teas "finest the world produces" is no misnomer. dlwl

A Series of Continental Ills.

Canadians who are worrying about the possibility of annexation to the United States may soothe themselves with the following ingenious chain of reasonings by Charles M. Harvey in The National Magazine:

"If at a certain critical juncture Presidents Madison or Monroe had shown a little less timidity or a little more historical imagination, the Alaskan boundary controversy recently settled would never have taken place, and all of the present British North America would probably be United States territory today. All this would have come about if either of these Presidents had given to John Jacob Astor the slight measure of recognition which he requested for his fur-trading post at Astoria, near the mouth of the Columbia River, and which he had good reason to assume ought to be furnished.

"To sum up the follies of the Washington Government and their consequence, had Madison in 1812 granted to Astor the permission to arm a vessel in his defence, the post at Astoria would undoubtedly have maintained itself throughout the war. Failing in this, had Madison in 1816 given to Astor the protection of the flag and a squad of soldiers, the Astoria post would have been re-established. Had Monroe done this when the appeal was made in 1817, the same thing would have taken place. In either case, the long wrangle with England about the title to the Oregon country, which lasted till 1846, when she withdrew from the region south of the forty-ninth parallel, would have been averted, and our claim would never have been seriously disputed. Another consequence would have been that Astor would have extended his posts up to the line held by his ally, the Russian Fur Company, up in the territory of Alaska, all of the present Provinces of British Columbia and Yukon west of the continental divide, with an area of 400,000 square miles, would have been United States territory, and England would have been shut out from access to the Pacific."

Travels of Whales.

Addressing the Academy of Science of Christiania, Professor Goldlob said recently that the whales that swim about the islands which lie off the coast of Norway and Finland in March and April travel immense distances. In May they turn up at the Azores or even at the Bermudas, and sometimes pay a visit to the West Indies. They swim fast, for in June they are back again off Norway. Some of these whales have been known to bring back evidences of where they have been, for harpoons of the peculiar kind used off the coast of South America have been found stuck in them.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

Confederation With Canada Becoming a Live Question—Why the Colony Has Held Aloof From Dominion.

Confederation is again becoming a live question in Newfoundland. This year a general election will divide the people upon the issue. Many look to Canada as the true haven of the island colony. They point out that its manifest destiny is membership in the great Canadian Confederation, that a time of prosperity like the present is the best time for making advantageous terms, and, finally, that the settlement of the French shore question removes the last bar to the happy union of all the British possessions in North America.

It is now forty years since the union of the Canadas and Newfoundland was first discussed. From our former failures in this connection we have something to learn. In 1864, when the idea of the union of the British colonies on this continent was put forward, Newfoundland, along with the other provinces and colonies, was invited to take part in the negotiations. It was represented by Sir Ambrose Shea and Mr. F. B. T. Carter, who framed what the delegates hoped would prove an acceptable basis of union. But the idea was not popular in Newfoundland. On their return the delegates were ridiculed and reviled, and represented as selling the independence of the colony to Canada. The proposals were overwhelmingly defeated at the polls.

Soon afterwards, in June, 1869, the Newfoundland Government promulgated the terms on which the colony would enter Confederation. These terms would not be considered moderate. They proposed that Newfoundland should have a debt allowance equal to $25 per head of population, $35,000 a year for legislative expenses, a subsidy of 80 cents per head, and $150,000 in lieu of Crown lands. Canada was quite willing to accept the terms, but the Newfoundland Legislature suddenly changed its mind, defeated the Government that proposed them, and declared for separate existence.

This settled the issue for nearly twenty years. In 1888 Sir Charles Tupper paid a visit to St. John's. On his return the Governor-General of Canada sent a message to the Governor of Newfoundland, stating that the Canadian Government considered the time convenient for the discussion of union, and was confident that no difficulty would be experienced in arranging the terms. It was suggested that the Newfoundland Legislature should send a deputation to negotiate, and also that the delegates should represent both the Ministerialists and Oppositionists. To this the Governor of Newfoundland replied: "The question is now being discussed among the parties, and your correspondent has no doubt but that a deputation will be sent." No deputation was sent, however.

Then arose the dispute over the Bond-Blaine Treaty, in which Canada objected to Newfoundland making a fisheries arrangement at Washington independently of this country. Newfoundland, taking umbrage at this, refused bait to Canadians. Finally, however, a conference restored harmony. At the conference Sir John Thompson proposed Confederation as a solution of all the difficulties, but the Newfoundland delegates replied they were not authorized to discuss it.

Dark days financially overtook Newfoundland in the succeeding years. Driven to the verge of bankruptcy the colony sent delegates to Ottawa to discuss Confederation. Then were proposed the terms which Sir Mackenzie Bowell and his colleagues considered excessive. Canada made counter-proposals, which Newfoundland rejected. And thus the conference proved fruitless. Canada's proposals were based on the terms accorded to the existing members of the Confederation. Our Government offered, first of all, to assume a debt of $8,350,000, and to pay interest on $2,000,000 in addition. Thus the total obligation to be assumed was limited to $10,350,000, or fifty dollars per head of population. The colony was offered on annual subsidy of $165,000, which was made up as follows: $50,000 allowance for legislation, $165,000 per capita subsidy, at 80 cents per head of population, $150,000 allowance for Crown lands, timber and mines, and $100,000, being five per cent. on the excess debt.

Between the offer of Canada and the request of Newfoundland there was a difference of about $351,000 a year. The first point of divergence was with regard to the assumption of the debt. Newfoundland asked Canada to assume nearly $16,000,000 of debt. Of this about $6,000,000 had been incurred on account of the island railway, which Canada was asked to complete to Port Aux Basques. It has since been completed. Newfoundland asked also for $250,000 a year, in lieu of its Crown lands, $100,000 more than Canada's offer; and $150,000 a year in bounties to fishermen. To the latter proposal Canada replied that the Newfoundland fishermen would be paid the same bounties as were accorded at any time to the Canadian fishermen.

The great obstacle to agreement had been the amount of public debt the Dominion should assume. The theory of Confederation is that the provinces enter it on equal terms financially. Hence, whatever debt allowance is made to one province all the other provinces claim a proportionate allowance. By conceding to Newfoundland $6,000,000 more than its proportionate share, or an excess of 60 per cent., the Dominion would invite claims from the different provinces for compensation. The Dominion has assumed, or allowed, provincial debts to the aggregate of $109,430,118. If we were to increase this by 60 per cent., as Newfoundland practically proposed, we would incur an obligation of more than $65,000,000, exclusive of the debt of Newfoundland. This prospect caused Canada to pause and count the cost. It certainly justified caution.

French-Canadians Go West.

Montreal, April 15.—Seventy French-Canadians left yesterday en route to Edmonton, where they intend to settle. Only ten of the new colonists were from the Province of Quebec. The others came from the big manufacturing centres in the Eastern States, such as Lowell, Lynn, Fall River, Waterbury, Central Falls, Adams and other places.

WRECKED BY A GULL.

Peculiar Defence of Captain Baker, of the Wrecked H.M.S. Flora.

"As for the charge of default, it is self-evident that the lamentable occurrence was entirely caused by the mistaking of one beacon for another. This result was due to the distortion of the fog, and the gull being perched on the top of the beacon. The circumstances were so peculiar that my experienced eyes were deceived, as well as those of Lieut. Grant and two seamen."

This is part of the evidence given by Captain Caspar J. Baker, commander of His Britannic Majesty's ship Flora, before the court-martial held in Esquimault, B.C. In threading the intricate passage between Vancouver Island and the mainland, H.M.S. Flora was stranded and nearly wrecked. The vessel was pulled off after being completely stripped and dismantled.

After towing the hulk of the cruiser to safe anchorage, the helping war-vessels proceeded to Esquimault, and Captain Baker, commander of H.M.S. Flora, and Navigating Lieutenant Harold Grant, surrendered their swords to a court-martial and were placed on trial.

Captain Baker, speaking in his own defence, said: "I do not suppose that there is any position for an officer of any rank or standing in His Majesty's Navy, which is so trying as being put upon trial, after an unbroken and honorable career, for neglect of duties and hazarding and stranding the ship which he has the honor to command. I would submit that in this case there were many unlucky circumstances. A safe course was shaped with a good departure; signalmen were on the lookout and leadsmen in the chains heaving the lead. The weather justified me in proceeding. I saw the black beacon about one point on the starboard bow, which I took to be the Base Flats beacon. It was looming up in the fog with a gull perched on it, giving the beacon all the appearance of having a white cage on top."

Lieut. Grant, the navigating officer, spoke similarly in his defence. He, too, attributed the disaster solely to the gull. When the "prisoners," after a long wait, were called back to hear the verdict of the court, the disposition of their swords upon the table silently told the tale before the official words were spoken. The points lay toward the prisoners, and with this gentle warning the officers waited for the word "Guilty" was the verdict of the court. "The gull had wrecked a fine Canadian cruiser and two careers."

Proof Positive.

His mother was giving an afternoon tea, and for the occasion David was dressed in his brand new sailor suit. During the afternoon one of the guests asked of David:

"How old are you?"

"Five years old," he said proudly.

"Oh, dear! I should hardly think you were that old!" she exclaimed in mock surprise.

"Really I am," protested David. And he took out of his pocket a paper tag and handed it to the guest. "What does that say?" he asked confidently.

She glanced at the bit of paper. It was one of those tickets that come on ready made clothing, and it read:

"Blank Bros., Clothiers, Age 5."—New York Press.

PORT ARTHUR AGAIN SHELLED YESTERDAY

But Alexieff Says Japs Did Not Damage Port Arthur.

WERE THE JAPS REPULSED?

Twelve Thousand Japanese Troops Escorted to Landing West of the Yalu by Admiral Togo's Fleet, but According to Russian Report Only to be Driven Back to Their Ships with Heavy Losses.

St. Petersburg, April 16.—A telegram from Admiral Alexieff from Port Arthur to the Emperor says that from 9.15 o'clock yesterday morning to midday the Japanese fleet of 14 vessels in two divisions bombarded the fortress and the town alternately from the Liaoshan promontory, firing 185 projectiles. The Russian squadron, including the battleship Pobieda, replied from the anchorage by a plunging fire. The batteries also participated. The losses were 7 Chinese killed and 5 soldiers and 3 Chinese wounded. The Russian warships sustained no damage, and there was no loss of life on them.

Without Results.

Port Arthur, April 16.—A bombardment by the Japanese commenced at 6 o'clock yesterday morning and continued at intervals until 1 o'clock in the afternoon. It was without results.

Antung Centre of the Line.

St. Petersburg, April 16.—A despatch from Liaoyang says that the Russian entrenchments on the Yalu River have been completed. The centre of the line of fortified positions is Antung. The right flank rests on Tatungkau and the left flank on Kiulienchong.

Japs Driven Back.

London, April 16.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Standard sends a rumor to the effect that Vice-Admiral Togo's fleet escorted a Japanese landing of troops to the westward of Yalu River. When 12,000 men had been landed the Russian troops, which were lying concealed, suddenly attacked them, driving them back to the ships with heavy losses in men and guns.

The Times this morning prints a despatch from the correspondent at sea off the coast of Corea. The despatch is dated yesterday, and in it the correspondent says he believes the entrance to Port Arthur is now sealed.

Torpedoes From Submarines.

Paris, April 16.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Echo de Paris, under yesterday morning's date, sends the following: "I learn that a firm opinion prevails in naval circles, based on telegrams from the surviving officers, that the loss of the Petropavlovsk and the injuries to the Pobieda were caused by torpedoes and launched by the Japanese and by submarine vessels. Hitherto it had not been believed that the Japanese had any submarine boats, but it is now admitted that such boats might have been received with the cruisers bought from Argentina and brought out from Genoa by British crews. It is difficult to verify this. But the Admiralty is of the opinion that the cruisers brought out two submarine vessels."

Most Profound Event.

Newchwang, April 16.—The sinking of the Russian battleship Petropavlovsk and the attendant great loss of life at Port Arthur is regarded here as the most profound event of the present war. Communication with Port Arthur, as well as with other centres, is substantially closed.

Only Two Left.

St. Petersburg, April 16.—There are now only two undamaged battleships—the Persviet and the Sebastopol, in the harbor at Port Arthur, but some of the damaged vessels have been repaired.

Is the Grand Duke Dead?

Paris, April 16.—The Temps correspondent at St. Petersburg, repeating the unconfirmed rumor that Grand Duke Cyril is dead, adds that the Grand Duke was about to leave the Petropavlovsk, with Vice-Admiral Makaroff, with orders to the commander of the shore batteries, when the explosion which destroyed the battleship occurred.

The Determined Japs.

London, April 16.—The Times correspondent, at sea off the coast of Corea, under yesterday's date gives the following story of recent skirmishes on the Yalu River: "On April 3 a Japanese cruiser, sent to reconnoitre the mouth of the Yalu River, found the enemy holding both banks of the river. Last Sunday Lieut. Kyagushi with five men disguised as Corean fishermen in a native junk surprised a Russian post at a village on the left bank. The Russians retired without resistance.

"A quarter of an hour later two squadrons of Japanese cavalry from Chenju arrived and destroyed the Russian post. Lieut. Kyagushi then determined to reconnoitre the right bank of the river toward Antung, and met in mid-stream a junk engaged in a similar manner for the Russians. The junk drew off and stranded on a sandbank. One of the Russians was killed and the rest took to the water and escaped. The Japanese are still busy at Chenampo landing a quantity of bridging material and other necessaries for a determined advance through a difficult country."

Fire at Seoul.

London, April 16.—The Japanese Legation has received news that fire destroyed the Imperial Palace at Seoul Thursday night. The fire broke out at 10 o'clock on the evening of April 14. With the exception of the Kiuseiken building, which is in the European style, all the other palace buildings were consumed. The Emperor took refuge in the library of the Kousecken building.

"On a Long Journey."

Ottawa, April 16.—Capt. Knapp, a British officer, who served under Lord Dundonald in South Africa and latterly worked for the Canadian Militia Department, was found dead in bed in the Russell House yesterday morning. The claim is made that death was due to natural causes, but a waiter says that Thursday night Knapp bade him good-bye, saying he was going on a long journey. His health was badly shattered in South Africa.

Pembroke Injustice.

Ottawa, April 16.—The Minister of Justice has ordered the release of an 8-year-old boy who was sentenced to 60 days' imprisonment at Pembroke by two Renfrew magistrates for taking a watch from the pocket of a man. The boy lived with his mother, and cried bitterly all the time he was in jail. The action of the magistrates is severely criticized here.

Lost Finger, Then Hand

Belleville, April 16.—A queer accident happened to a Trenton boy named Furnia Thursday. He was playing round a wood splitting machine and had a finger taken off. Reaching in for his lost finger his hand was taken off at the wrist. A doctor dressed the wounds and the lad is doing well.

Personation Cases.

Toronto, April 16.—The civic winowing mill yielded a little more grain from the chaff yesterday than the day before. Two clear cases of personation were established in subdivision 1 of Ward 5 and Mr. Riddell in his summary of the morning's work seemed to think the result very satisfactory.

Died At Vancouver.

Vancouver, B.C., April 16.—Leslie Lawson, city clerk of Moncton, N. B., died here yesterday afternoon in the private hospital of an abcess in the brain. Some few days ago he arrived here on a trip in company with Mayor McGee of Moncton, for the benefit of his health.

Ex-Senator Sentenced to 8 Years.

New Milford, Conn., April 16.—Ex-State Senator Burton Matton, formerly treasurer of the Watertown Savings Bank, was yesterday sentenced to eight years in State Prison on charges of making false entries in the books of the savings bank.

HIGH EXPLOSIVES IN THEIR TENTS.

Two Japanese Officers Acting as Spies Arrested by Russians.

The Conflicting Despatches from the East—Russian Forces are Concentrating.

Special G. N. W. Despatch to the Examiner.

Conflicting despatches are received to-day. A report from London, which is discredited in St. Petersburg, says that the battleship Sevastopol, and another Russian vessel, have been blown up at Port Arthur. This is followed by a telegram which states that Viceroy Alexieff has raised his flag on board the Sevastopol.

London, April 16. — A despatch from St. Petersburg just received here, reports that the battleship Sevastopol and another Russian vessel have been blown up at Port Arthur.

St. Petersburg, April 16. — Viceroy Alexieff took over the command of the Russian fleet at Port Arthur this afternoon and raised his flag on board of the battleship Sevastopol.

Harbin, Manchuria, April 16.—Two Japanese officers of the General Staff, have arrived here under strict escort, having been arrested by the railway guard eighteen miles from this place. They were dressed as Thibetan lammas. In their tents were found some sixty pounds of high explosive, a fuse, a string of keys to unscrew railway nuts, etc. They evidently intended to blow up the bridge over the Noni River near Fullardi. The prisoners displayed great coolness, confessing that it was their intention to destroy the railway.

London, April 16. — A despatch to the Central News from St. Petersburg, says the report that the battleship Sevastopol has been sung, is denied in the Russian capital.

St. Petersburg, April 16. — A telegram from Port Arthur states that three Japanese war vessels were damaged in the bombardment of that place yesterday.

Tokio, April 16.—Noon.—Private advices from Corea confirm the reported massing of twenty thousand Russian troops on the right bank bank of the Yalu River with the object of opposing the Japanese invasion of Manchuria.

PRESENTED WITH A FOUNTAIN PEN

Lady Macabees Show Appreciation of Services of an Officer.

The Lady Maccabees of the local Hive held a special meeting last night when a very pleasant evening was spent, an enjoyable feature of which was a presentation made to Lady Pratt, who for some time has filled the office of Record Keeper of the Hive in a most efficient manner. The presentation was in the form of a valuable fountain pen, accompanying which was the following address:—

Peterborough, April 15th, 1904

The ladies of Queen of Canada Hive, No. 336, desire to express to you the pleasure they have derived through your unselfish, untiring efforts put forth as our record keeper. In appreciation of such we ask you to accept this fountain pen in this tangible form as a slight token of our most hearty co-operation and esteem of the ladies of this Hive. With kindest regards to you and your family,

Signed on behalf of the Hive,

The recipient made a brief response in which she expressed her appreciation of the gift of her friends.

MONTH'S MIND MASS FOR LATE MRS. KELLY.

Mother of Former Peterborough Priest Passed Away.

The Catholic Record, writing on the Month's Mind Mass for the late Mrs. Kelly, mother of Rev. Father Kelly, of Trout Creek, says: The grave little village of Trout Creek, hidden amidst the hills of Northern Ontario, was rendered all the more solemn by the funeral service held in Sacred Heart Church on Tuesday, March 22nd. The presence of strange priests, the profuse decorations of purple, yellow and black, and the celebration of a solemn Requiem Mass in their midst for the first time, tended to increase the devotion of the parishioners as they paid their tribute of respect to their beloved pastor by attending the Month's Mind Mass for his mother's, Mrs. Catherine Kelly's soul. Rev. A. F. Kelly celebrated the Mass, being assisted by Rev. D. J. Scollard of North Bay as deacon, and Rev. P. J Kelly, curate of Trout Creek as sub deacon. Rev. T. F Collins, of Bracebridge, made an efficient master of ceremonies.

The sermon for the occasion was delivered by Father T. F. Collins. In a clear and stirring oration the reverend speaker exposed the fear and the desire which should ever accompany the thought of death—the fear lest its issue be unhappy, the desire of uniting ourselves to God through the portals of death. His eulogy of the Christian mother educating the mind and religiously influencing the will of her son towards the altar was indeed able. He showed how the influence of the mother was felt in the work of the son and urged upon the people the duty of uniting their applications to those of their pastor in order to secure the eternal happiness of her whose son was guiding them to heaven. The solemnities of the day were brought to a suitable close by a sermon on a true conversion of heart by Rev. D. J. Scollard and by Solemn Benediction, sung by Rev. T. F. Collins.

The Market.

On the market this morning, eggs and butter were unusually plentiful, but there was not much else for sale. Eggs were 14 cents per dozen, and butter went at 19 and 20 cents per pound.

Are you feeding your body and neglecting your brain power?

A dull brain is the result of an improperly fed stomach. Your brain wastes away with use the same as your body does. It must be built up and sustained with brain-nourishing food the same as your muscles, bones and tissues. The food element that makes brain is found in the outer coatings of wheat. This is the very portion of the wheat that the white-flour miller discards and with it the greatest portion of the muscle-forming elements. He leaves little else than the heat and fat-producing basic principles of the grain. In

SHREDDED WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT AND TRISCUIT

The Natural Foods

you get the whole of the wheat, which contains every element that the human body requires and in exactly the correct proportions.

Eating Shredded Whole Wheat Biscuit and Triscuit means living according to Nature's laws—feeding each element in the body with the exact food in the exact quantity Nature has prescribed for each element in the body. The result is sound teeth, strong bones, elastic muscles, firm flesh, good, steady nerves, a quick, receptive brain, and the requisite heat and energy for the body.

Triscuit, the ideal toast, is made of the whole of the wheat—it tastes better than white bread toast and is infinitely better for you—try it toasted for breakfast to-morrow morning.

INDISCREET ZEAL.

Mr. A. Odell, Public School Inspector of Northumberland, has got himself into a little trouble, and it seems he pretty well deserves it. The Port Hope Guide drew attention to a circular addressed by the Inspector to the teachers under his charge, recommending them to subscribe to the Toronto News, on the ground that it is an "independent" journal—about as independent as the Toronto Mail and Empire, or the Peterborough Review. The circular was strengthened by a letter, embodying the same advice. As to the "independence" of the Toronto News, there is not printed in the province of Ontario a more persistently bitter and partizan enemy of the Ross Government, and it ill accords with Mr. Odell's duty as a public servant that he should in his official position become the champion of any newspaper, partizan or otherwise, and that he should use the influence of his official prestige to gain subscribers to a newspaper of any kind. His course in this regard, as attributed to him, is not only contrary to the regulations of the Education Department, but contrary to the ethical code that should govern the conduct of a public servant.

Apples Went Bad.

London, April 16.—A cargo of Nova Scotian apples, which, owing to a breakdown of the engines of the steamer have been six weeks at sea, was sold yesterday at the Covent Garden market. As a result of the long voyage a great portion of the fruit had gone bad, and the rest had to be sold at once.

Looking to the U. S.

Berlin, April 16.—In the Reichstag yesterday, Count Von Kanitz, the Agrarian leader, referring to commercial treaty negotiations, said: "We must at least try to conclude a reciprocity agreement mutually advantageous with the United States."

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Daniel Roland, a Pelham Township farmer, died suddenly Friday, aged 65 years.

John Bennett, a negro, aged 25, was electrocuted in the Columbus, O., Penitentiary Friday for wife murder.

One man was killed and ten people burned by an explosion of naptha in a dye works at Brooklyn Friday.

Cap. Baird Wheeler and Corpl. Howlt of the 22nd United States Infantry were fatally stabbed while reconnoitring against the Moros.

Cars Jumped Over Locomotives.

Scranton, Pa., April 16.—Three lives were lost in a disastrous railroad wreck on the Wyoming Valley division of the Erie Railroad at Rock Junction, four miles east of here yesterday. A section of a coal train, consisting of fifteen loaded cars, broke loose on the steep grade at Wimmers and ran back eleven miles, colliding with two locomotives which were drawing another coal train. Four of the cars jumped over both locomotives and landed on the coal cars behind. At Elmhurst the runaway section struck and killed two section men who were working on the track. The runaway section had attained a speed of 100 miles an hour when it collided with the locomotives.

How to Ward Off an Attack of Rheumatism.

"For years when springtime came on and I went into gardening I was sure to have an attack of rheumatism and every attack was more severe than the preceding one," says Josie McDonald, of Man, Logan Co., West Va. "I tried everything with no relief whatever, until I procured a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, and the first application gave me ease and before the first bottle was used I felt like a newp erson. Now I feel that I am cured, but I always keep a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm in the house and when I feel any symptoms of a return I soon drive it away with one or two applications of this liniment. For sale by all druggists.

Kicked by the Devil.

The most curious spire in England is at Chesterfield, the leaning tower of Pisa not being more interesting to sightseers than the queer kink in a respectable church which, tradition says, was caused by the devil kicking out as he passed the spire. The devil had just had his hoofs shod by a local blacksmith, and his pain was so intense the edifice was shaken out of shape.

BOARD OF TRADE ENDORSES PROPOSITION.

would pay anywhere. The shipping facilities were excellent. He thought the company had made a mistake in going ahead before the experience of the other companies had been learned. And the question now was, what was the best course to pursue? The history of the industry in the United States was that the farmers were convinced that it paid to grow beets. He thought the industry should be encouraged and if the security were ample he expressed his opinion that it should be aided. He found it hard to believe that a factory costing $3,0,000 would not be worth $109,000 in 3 or 5 years.

NO MISTAKE MADE IN HELPING INDUSTRIES.

He was not in favour of the municipality becoming mixed up in commercial enterprises, but it had been done in the past, and the town so far had made no mistake.

Speaking of the management of the Company, Mr. Dumble said that he believed if Mr. Gordon put $100,000 into the concern he would see that the management would be efficient. He had no idea that the factory would fail with a practical man at the head of it. If the United States could build and successfully operate 56 factories, surely the industry here should be successful. All things considered, he thought the town should support the proposition. He intended to vote for bylaw, and he thought that the Board of Trade should pass a resolution endorsing the proposition. He was very glad to hear Mr. Garvin's statement, as it had helped him to a decision. The Board of Trade should be careful in its recommendations.

Mr. Garvin, answering questions from the president, said that he believed that the buildings could be utilized for other purposes in case the sugar factory should not be successful.

MR. MOORE DEFENDS HIS POSITION.

Mr. Moore was next heard in support of his position, and in opening he said that on general principles he thought that it was ill-advised for a municipality to engage in commercial enterprises. In the past the town had been fortunately lucky in this respect.

In dealing with the C. G. E. Company, to which a grant of $38,000 had been made, it was with a company which had a record of past success, which was an entirely different matter to that of guaranteeing the bonds of the Sugar Company, which was a concern with no past record of success.

He reiterated his statement that the town would become liable for the amount guaranteed, and he believed that the town's security was not ample. It became a question whether it would be advisable to give this guarantee and practically exhaust the town's borrowing powers. The town's business is to conduct the affairs of the town, and it should not enter into commercial enterprises.

He did not know about the sugar factories in Michigan but he did know that the Canadian factories had not been able to pay a dividend.

He had written the communication to the paper in good faith, and because he was vitally interested in the town's affairs.

Mr. Moore made the statement that by the bylaw the town would have to pay $50,000 before it gets a mortgage, and he expressed his opinion that the company could not be compelled to instal the machinery. He thought the people expected that the town would not give any guarantee until the machinery was installed. Mr. Moore reiterated his statement that his position was taken because he wished the town's credit to remain unimpaired.

MR. TOKER SUPPORTS THE BYLAW.

Mr. Toker, who was the next speaker, said that he was in favour of the bylaw. He took the position that the town would be fully secured. No one outside of the lunatic asylum would think of allowing the machinery to remain uninstalled and thus forfeiting the entire expenditure of $200,000 to the town for $50,000.

Speaking of the limit of the town's borrowing power, he said that the limit had been placed at the town's own request, and could be extended if it was thought advisable, and it must be remembered that at the end of three years half of the amount would again be paid back.

The principle of guaranteeing bonds was the new way of assisting industries and both Governments were at the present time discussing similar propositions to this.

He should be very sorry to learn that Mr. Gordon would pay a dividend on the Wallaceburg factory in its second year's operation. He said it could not be expected that new concerns would pay a dividend in the first few years of their existence.

The industry had proven a success both in Michigan and in Ontario and the cause for failure was where the factory had been erected where it was impossible to grow beets. He believed the town could not lose by supporting the industry.

A RESOLUTION.

Mr. Dumble moved, seconded by Mr. Rogers, "That this Board of Trade, having carefully considered the bylaw now before the public for approval to authorize the council to guarantee the bonds of the Beet Sugar Company to the extent of $100,000 on terms of getting as indemnity a first mortgage on the lands, buildings and plant of the company — the guarantee to be given as $50,000 when the buildings are ready for the instalment of the machinery is on the grounds, and security on the machinery given to the town, and the $50,000 when the factory is completed and has run for ten days, hereby approve of the bylaw, and recommend the approval of the bylaw by the ratepayers."

Mr. Nugent in supporting the motion, said that he was in favour of the bylaw. He could not see why Mr. Gordon would put his money into the concern and allow the machinery to remain uninstalled. He was speaking simply as a citizen, and was heartily in accord with the proposal.

PROPOSAL HAS MR. KENDRY'S SUPPORT.

Mr. James Kendry, M.P., before the motion was voted on, stated that he had been pleased with the remarks of Mr. Dumble and Mr. Garvin, and was in favour of the proposal. He stated that new industries at first usually lost money, and could not be expected to pay dividends for the first few years.

He thought if Mr. Gordon offered to invest $100,000 the town could run no risk, as it was sufficient guarantee that he believed the concern would pay. He believed that the towns which had made the greatest progress were those that had assisted industries.

Hamilton, which was one of the greatest manufacturing cities in Canada, had encouraged industries, and Galt had done the same, and was reaping the benefit.

The town should have security, and he believed the greatest security would be the fact that Mr. Gordon had offered to take stock and accept the presidency of the company.

Mr. Dumble, before the motion was submitted stated that the machinery which it was proposed to buy was a new plant which had only been running six months.

Mr. Charles said the question should be looked at from the standpoint of the benefit to the town. He said that two local industries, the Cereal Works and Matthews Company had proven of great help to the business of the town, the latter having paid out last year $750,000 to the farmers.

Mr. Charles said there was but one weakness in the proposition, and that was if the company had been able to guarantee to the town that they would have an ample supply of beets, there would be no risk at all risk at all, as the only reason for failure of the factory was the fact that the farmers did not grow the beets.

Mr. Garvin stated that Mr. Gordon felt confident that there would be an unlimited supply of beets in the Trent Valley.

The motion on being submitted to the meeting was carried, three members of the Board voting against it.

Mr. Dumble moved that the Mayor be requested to call a public meeting to discuss the sugar beet bylaw, which was carried, and the meeting adjourned.

IT'S THE HOPELESSNESS OF IT.

That Makes Dyspepsia so Terrible—But the Best Hopes are Realized if you use Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets.

The hopelessness of it all is partially responsible for the terrible despondency that is one of the worst features of dyspepsia.

The same tortures day after day, always getting a little worse, doctors unable to afford relief. Is it any wonder that the future looks black to the victims of this terrible disease?

But there is relief, hope, comfort, health for all in Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets. Those who have used them are shouting their praises. Listen to what Henry A. Coles, of St. Mary's, River, Guysboro Co., N. S., says:

"I had stomach trouble for about five years," says Mr. Coles. "It got so bad at last that I had to take to my bed and the doctor was called in. But he did me no good, and I was suffering very badly, not knowing what to do.

"Then my wife said, 'Let us try Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets.' And we gave them a trial, with the result that after taking seven boxes I was completely cured, and have not felt any of the trouble since."

Canada's Chance.

Ottawa, April 16.—A. Cabaret, 3 Rue Aubriot, Paris, France, writes the fruit division at Ottawa that "in years like 1903, when French fruits were very scarce, the amount of business done between France and California was very large, and this might have been done as well with Canada, the sympathy being greater between our countries."

Fell Off a Stage.

Sydney, N.S., April 16.—Wm. Rogers, a native of Carbonnear, Nfld., was instantly killed yesterday at the mills of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company by falling off a swinging stage to the ground, a distance of 17 feet. He was 33 years of age and leaves a widow and family of four small children.

How Iron-ox Tablets Completely Cured Jas. Huston of 20 Years' Serious Trouble.

January 27, 1903.

I cannot express in words the praise that is due to Iron-ox Tablets, which I got as a trial package from our druggist, Mr. McDonald, who told me they were just what I wanted. I took them more for fun, but before I had finished one box I got great relief. I was subject to great misery after meals, with bloating, and would rift up bile of the bitterest taste, and always woke up in the morning in the same way for the last twenty years. Had tried all medicines, but now I am completely cured, and it was by taking Iron-ox Tablets. Words cannot express my gratitude to you.

WABASH TRAIN COLLISION.

Friday's Unseasonable Snowfall Caused Accident at Nixon—Southern Ontario Visited By Storm—Street Railways Tied.

Simcoe, April 16.—A head-on collision occurred at Nixon Station, about five miles west of Simcoe, at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, during the biggest snowstorm of the season. The Wabash passenger train, No. 2, eastbound, and No. 13, westbound, met in a head-on collision one mile east of Nixon, with both trains holding orders to meet at Nixon. The engine and cars of No. 2 were not damaged to any serious extent, but the engine on No. 13 was completely demolished. The passenger cars were not derailed.

Only four people were injured, they being all passengers, one a little girl, who was badly injured with broken glass, and her mother was injured internally. Doctors were summoned from Simcoe.

Delay in Hamilton.

Hamilton, April 16.—The storm played havoc with everything in the shape of a railway in the district last evening. The street railway was almost put out of business about 9 o'clock, and the company was able to move only a few of its cars.

The switches at the "y" just outside of the city would not work on account of the snow, and all the G. T. R. and C.P.R. trains on the line were stalled there. The International Limited, due at the Stuart street station at 5.45, did not get in till 10.15.

10 Inches At St. Thomas.

St. Thomas, April 16.—This city was visited by the biggest blizzard it has experienced this winter yesterday. Snow began to fall about 9.30 yesterday morning, and gradually increased in volume until it had reached the proportions of a blizzard. All the street railway lines are completely blocked, and the service is tied up. The railroads are suffering from snow drifts. At 8 o'clock last night there was about 10 inches of snow on the level.

Blizzard in Toronto.

Toronto, April 16.—It was about noon when the storm reached Toronto, and it increased in severity until by evening it reached the proportions of a blizzard. The snowfall, however, was comparatively light, the estimate of the weather bureau being about three inches. The street car service was seriously interrupted.

A cold wave is coming along behind the snowstorm from Manitoba, where the weather has been severe during the past few days. To-day will be clearing with a good deal of sunshine, but also with a strong northwest wind. It will be considerably milder on Sunday, and more pleasant weather is promised thereafter.

Archbishop Bond Acting Primate.

Kingston, April 16.—Archbishop Bond of Montreal has been chosen Acting Primate of the Anglican House of Bishops until it meets again next October. This temporary appointment was made because the Synod of Rupert's Land had not yet chosen their Metropolitan. Those present in the House of Bishops were: Archbishop Bond of Montreal, and Bishops Sweatman of Toronto, Baldwin of Huron, DuMoulin of Niagara, Mills of Ontario, Carmichael of Montreal, Thornloe of Algoma, Hamilton of Ottawa, and Pinkham of Calgary.

The Hero Fund.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 16.—It was made known here yesterday that Andrew Carnegie has created a fund of $5,000,000 for the benefit of "the dependents of those losing their lives in heroic effort to save their fellow men, or for the heroes themselves if injured only." Provision is also made for medals to be given in commemoration of heroic acts. The field embraced by the fund is the United States and Canada and the waters thereof.

McPherson & McGregor

(Successors to the F. R. J. McPherson Co.)

Take this opportunity of thanking the public for the very liberal patronage accorded the late firm. Trade has been so satisfactory that Mr McGregor decided to increase his interest in the business and, as a consequence, the firm will be known hereafter as McPHERSON & McGREGOR.

Our specialties are:—

Sanitary Plumbing
Sanitary Ventilating
Steam and Hot Water Heating
Electrical Wiring and Supplies

We wish to draw the attention of the public to a few of the many complimentary testimonials received by Mr. McGregor for the high quality of the work he has installed in Plumbing and Heating:—

From the Firm of Bennet & Wright, Plumbing, Heating and Electrical Contractors, Toronto.

This is to certify that Duncan McGregor has been in our employment steady for about fifteen years and during that time we have found him to be steady, honest and trustworthy. He has given every satisfaction as a practical mechanic in each of the following branches: Plumbing, steam and gas fitting, also electrical and conduit work, and for some time has had charge of some of our largest contracts with satisfactory results.

From Illsley & Horn, General Contractors, Toronto.

The bearer, Mr. Duncan McGregor, had charge of the electric wiring at the King Edward Hotel Building. The job was a large and complicated one and by the way Mr. McGregor handled the work he proved himself a mechanic of more than ordinary ability. We unhesitatingly recommend him as a first class mechanic to anyone needing his services.

From Mr. J. Ross Robertson, of the Evening Telegram.

Mr. Duncan McGregor, who has been connected with the Bennet & Wright Co. for some years, and who has superintended the work of plumbing and heating for the Bennet & Wright Co., is not only in my opinion, but also that of my architect, a fully competent mechanic. His work, my architect informs me, has been most satisfactory. Any thing that has come under my own supervision has been likewise satisfactory.

An Extract Taken from the June Number of Domestic Engineering.

During the recent convention of the Canadian Electrical Association held in the King Edward Hotel, a thorough examination was made of all the electrical work in the hotel, and it was pronounced second to none on the continent. Therefore, great credit is due Mr. Duncan MacGregor, who superintended the entire conduit, electrical and power system for the firm of Bennet & Wright, of this city, who were the contractors for all the different branches of the electrical work in the new hotel.

No Canadian Reciprocity.

Boston, Mass., April 16.—Canadian reciprocity and Eugene Foss, its foremost champion in this section of New England, were decisively defeated yesterday in the Republican State convention, called to elect four delegates at large to the Republican national convention at Chicago. Mr. Foss, who, before the convention, had announced his intention of offering a reciprocity resolution and of contesting as a candidate for delegate at large on this issue, carried out his plan. His plan was overwhelmingly voted down and he was rejected as a delegate by a vote of 178 to 161 for his nearest contestant.

Health and Success.

Weakness and disease cause discouragement, failure and unhappiness, but with the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food there comes new life and vigour and energy, new hopes and new confidence, stronger determination to succeed, and the ability to apply one's self mentally and physically. Health and success go hand in hand. By restoring good health Dr. Chase's Nerve Food helps to success and happiness.

FAVORS LAW OF MOB

Mr. Whitney Would Call An Unknown Quantity to His Aid.

ANOTHER DAY ON "SOO" AID

Able and Convincing Address of Mr. A. G. MacKay (North Grey)—Shows That the Billion Dollar Trust Would Get the Steel Works If They Were Sold Under the Hammer—Division Tuesday.

Toronto, April 16.—The Legislature yesterday devoted another day to the discussion of the proposal to aid the completion of the Algoma Central Railway by guaranteeing a loan of $2,000,000 for two years. Three members were heard, Mr. Lucas (Centre Grey), Mr. MacKay (North Grey) and Mr. St. John (West York). At 10.30 Mr. St. John declined to proceed because there was not a quorum present, and the House adjourned. There were in their seats eight Liberals and nine Conservatives. A division will not be reached till Tuesday night at the earliest. Mr. MacKay's speech yesterday was a notable contribution to the discussion. By plain statements of fact and clear and incisive argument he cleared away much of the fog of misstatement and misrepresentation that had gathered about the issue.

Bridgeburg Pool Room.

Mr. Sutherland, when the orders of the day were called, drew the attention of the Attorney-General to the action of the Police Magistrate of Woodstock in holding in private the recent trial of those engaged in a cock-fight, and to a similar occurrence in Ingersoll.

Hon. Mr. Gibson replied that he had casually observed some reference to it, but had not had time to inquire. But under the code a Magistrate may clear the court if he thinks it in the interest of morals. The law also provides that a search of records of conviction may be made afterwards, and this was done, and the names were published.

Mr. Whitney said that he had personally received reliable information that in the township of Bertie, just outside of Bridgeburg, a poolroom was freely operated, and two or three trains of frequenters arrived daily from Buffalo. He realized the difficulties in the way, but it was unpleasant if people had to sit down powerless in face of such an evil. If neither the law nor the procedure would allow the place to be closed up, he would favor a form of mob law to deal with it.

Attorney-General's View.

Hon. Mr. Gibson said that he had already expressed abhorrence of a concern carrying on operations on this side of the line which are forbidden on the other side. The laws in the two countries are not the same; sparring, for example, was not as free there as here, but though it is hard to draw the line between sparring and prize-fights, his instructions to officials were to apply a species of mob law, and not to allow either. He had already explained that last year there had been inserted in a bill criminal code provisions to deal effectively with poolrooms. They were drawn up by the Crown Attorney, and approved by himself and the Deputy Attorney-General, but unfortunately these clauses of the bill were dropped in the Commons. He expected that these clauses would be restored and be adopted at the present session. The House need not be afraid, but that the best attention of the Government would be given to these poolrooms. He had instructed the police to act peremptorily and the matter will be followed up thoroughly.

May Renew Bonds.

London, April 15.—Of Canada's twelve million four per cent. sterling loan, four millions fall due for redemption on May Day. Arrangements, in view therefore, have been made here. It is understood that bondholders may, to the extent of two millions and a half, renew for three years longer at four per cent., with the further option of converting, prior to April 30, 1906, each one hundred pounds of stock, with unmatured coupons attached, into £105 of Dominion three per cent. inscribed stock.

A Mother's Recommendation.

I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for a number of years, and have no hesitancy in saying that it is the best remdy for coughs, colds, and croup that I have ever used in my family. I have not words to express my confidence in this remedy. Mrs. J. A. Moore, North Star, Mich. For sale by all druggists.

Nearly a Year Ago.

Ottawa: April 16.—The fruit division, Ottawa, received on April 11 from C. L. Stephens of Orillia, a basket of very fine Salome apples. They had been stored in a cellar all winter, but are still in perfect condition, although the Salome is generally considered an early winter apple.

Montreal Libel Suit.

Montreal, April 16.—Mr. McMaster yesterday succeeded in getting from Attorney McWhinney the statement that in the Blackley-Backrack-Levy conspiracy proceedings "there would be no settlement of the civil proceedings unless the criminal proceedings were withdrawn."

Exhumed Bones of 1767.

Oswego, N.Y., April 16.—Workmen who are rebuilding Fort Ontario yesterday exhumed the bones and tombstone of Obedi Parlow, an Indian chief who died Oct. 24, 1767, aged 83 years. They will be sent to the Buffalo Historical Society.

The St. Lawrence Open.

Watertown, N. Y., April 16.—The St. Lawrence River is now open to navigation from Ogdensburg to Kingston. This is one month later than last spring.

Now Dig the Canal.

Washington, April 16.—The Senate has passed the Panama Canal Bill.

HEALTHY WOMEN

Praise Pe-ru-na as a Cure for Colds and a Preventive of Catarrh.

MRS. M. J. BRINK

MISS SARA McGAHAN.

FIRST STAGE OF CATARRH.

A Serious Mistake Which Thousands Are Making.

The first stage of catarrh is what is commonly known as "catching cold." It may be in the head, nose, throat or lungs. Its beginning is sometimes so severe as to cause a chill and considerable fever, or it may be so slight as to not hinder a person from his usual business. In perhaps a majority of cases little or no attention is paid to the first stage of catarrh, and hence it is that nearly one-half of the people have chronic catarrh in some form.

To neglect a cold is to invite chronic catarrh. As soon as any one discovers the first symptoms of catching cold he should at once begin the use of Peruna according to directions on the bottle, and the cold is sure to pass away without leaving any bad effects.

Unless this is done the cold is almost sure to end in the second stage of catarrh, which is making so many lives miserable. If Peruna was taken every time one has a cold or cough, chronic catarrh would be practically an unknown disease.

Miss Elizabeth Uber, No. 57 Bassett street, Albany, N. Y., writes:

"I have always dreaded unsettled weather because of my extreme liability to catch cold, when a catarrhal trouble would quickly develop through my entire system, which it would take weeks to drive away. I am thankful to say that since I have taken PERUNA I do not have any reason to dread this anymore. If I have been at all exposed to the damp, wet or cold weather, I take a dose or two of PERUNA, and it throws out any hint of sickness from my system."—Miss Elizabeth Uber.

Mrs. M. J. Brink, No. 820 Michigan avenue, St. Joseph, Mich., writes:

"This past winter during the wet and cold weather I caught a sudden and severe cold, which developed a catarrhal condition through my entire system, and so affected my general health that I was completely broken down, and became nervous and hysterical and unfit to supervise my home. My physician prescribed for me, but somehow his medicine did me no good. Reading of PERUNA I decided to try it. After I had taken but three bottles I found myself in fine health."—Mrs. M. J. Brink.

Sibyl A. Hadley, 23 Main street, Huntington, Ind., writes: "Last winter after getting my feet wet I began to cough, which gradually grew worse until my throat was sore and raw. Ordinary remedies did not help me and cough remedies nauseated me. Reading an advertisement of what PERUNA could do, I decided to try a bottle, and you can imagine how glad I felt when it began to relieve me in a very short time. In less than two weeks I was completely cured."—Sibyl A. Hadley.

Miss Sara McGahan, No. 137 3d street, Albany, N. Y., writes:

"A few months ago I suffered with a severe attack of influenza, which nothing seemed to relieve. My hearing became bad, my eyes became irritated and feverish. Nothing seemed right and nothing I ate tasted good. I took PERUNA and within two weeks I was perfectly well."—Sara McGahan.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be glad to give you his valuable advice gratis.

THE BOARD OF TRADE ENDORSES PROPOSITION

To Guarantee the Bonds of the Peterborough Sugar Company.

WOULD BENEFIT THE TOWN.

Spirited Discussion on the Proposition — Board Declares in Favour by Majority of Seven—Other Business Discussed by the Board.

The Board of Trade at its meeting last night passed a resolution endorsing the Sugar Company bylaw, and recommending the ratepayers to do the same by their votes on May 5th. The meeting was attended by a large number of citizens outside those connected with the Board as members, and the vote on the resolution introduced by Mr. Dumble was voted on by 10 members; 7 being in favour and 3 against it.

Mr. Garvin, the Managing Director of the Company was present at the meeting and made a statement on behalf of the Company, showing for what purposes the money already subscribed had been used. He said in reply to Mr. W. H. Moore's letter in the Examiner, that there had been no large sums of money paid out for salaries, and that he had not drawn a cent of salary for six months, and that he did not intend to draw any until the Company was out of debt. He presented a statement showing the value of the plant when completed, and asserted that the security to the town would be ample.

Mr. W. H. Moore was at the meeting also and defended his position in the matter. He thought the principle of municipalities engaging in commercial enterprises was a bad one, and furthermore contended that in making this guarantee the town was not adequately secured. He thought there was no assurance on the part of Mr. Gibson or his associates that they would ever instal the plant after the machinery had been laid on the ground and the first $50,000 paid on it. In answer to this it was pointed out that it was hardly likely that they would allow the machinery to lie idle after it had been bought and paid for.

Mr. Kendry in a short address declared his intention to support the bylaw. He believed that the industry would be a success, and spoke from a knowledge of the Berlin factory.

Other questions discussed by the Board were, the abolition of the market tolls, and fees for inspection of weiguts and measures. Both of these were declared against.

The Peterborough Board of Trade held a meeting last night in the Council Chamber last night at which a number of the members of the Board and many citizens were present. The President, Mr. D. Hughes-Charles, occupied the chair and the following members of the Board were in attendance: D. W. Dumble, J. W. Garvin, E. J. Toker, B. F. Ackerman, Jas. Kendry, M.P., W. H. Moore, R. Hicks, A. P. Poussette, E. M. Poussett, E. Elliott, John Nugent, K. Eardley-Wilmot, T. E. Bradburn, D. H. Moore, A. H. Stratton, F. W. Doan.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

The following report of the committee appointed at the last annual meeting was submitted:

To the president and members of the Peterborough Board of Trade:

COMMUNICATIONS.

Two communications were read as follows:

Trenton, April 11th, 1904.

D. Hughes-Charles, President Board Trade, Peterborough:

Dear Sir,—We are having printed the Erie Enlarged Canal Arguments, The Trent Waterway Arguments and three maps showing the different routes, distances, area, raw material and British and European moneyed population, and showing the enormous export trade for the past twenty years and more than was by actual record done by the United States, and it is absolutely admitted by all the business men that the cheapest and shortest water transportation route must absolutely control the enormous trade for all time to come.

We will shortly have the printed matter all set up, and while it is in such a shape, we would like you, from your Town or Village Board of Trade, to send us in at once an order for one or two thousand copies to be delivered to you at cost, which will not exceed, say, about $75 to $80 a thousand, for you to circulate, with your best judgment in the interest of your Town, Village or County, and route and general public.

Any further information can be added later on. Trusting to hear from you at once with an order. If your order is in while type is set up, we can procure you these:

The $80.00 would include:—

1,000 Trent Waterway Pamphlets.
1,000 Enlarged Erie Canal Arguments.
1,000 of each of the three maps showing distances, area and population.

Yours truly,

DAVID GILMOUR.

From some business interests in town, asking that the Board adopt the following resolution:—

"The Board of Trade of the Town of Peterborough having considered the matter of the fees and charges imposed on business men for the "Inspection of weights, measures and weighing machines," respectfully asks that the Government will at the coming session of the Dominion Parliament introduce and carry through, a bill to abolish the collection of the same.

"Considering the great increase of the revenue of the Dominion and the surplus over all expenditures, the business men of Canada feel that this measure of justice is due them.

"Last year the vessel owners were relieved of the payment of "Tollage," "Tonage Dues" and "Inspection Fees," on all vessels navigating our waters, thus admitting the reasonableness of lifting a part of the burden of taxation from the wealthiest parties of the mercantile interest warrants, as in asking that the small but unreasonable taxations imposition of inspection fees, for inspecting weights, measures, etc., can readily and without injuring the revenue of the country to any considerable extent be done away with, and relieve a large number of traders, manufacturers and dealers, of an imposition very much disliked and considered by many annoying. The gross amount of revenue from this source being for last year, $64,327.65, and the gross expenditure being $87,507,51, the loss to the country is therefore insignificant."

With reference to the first communication it was not thought advisable to make any recommendation, consequently it was simply received.

The letter dealing with the proposal to abolish the fee for inspection of weights and measures, occasioned some little discussion, but the opinion of the different members seemed to be that the present system was about as fair as any that could be suggested.

It was recognized that some safeguards must be taken to protect the public, and it was known even now, with the measures in force, light weight was frequently given. Mr. Dumble stated that he occasionally found produce for sale on the market which was not fully up to the standard weight.

It was believed that undeniably the present plan worked a hardship to some, an instance of which was quoted by Mr. Ackerman, who stated that in his factory he had three or four set of scales, which were used solely for checking the weight of material purchased, and for determining its cost, he had to pay for their inspection, although they were never used for selling goods.

Mr. Elliott said that very often the farmers were not to blame for selling butter light weight, because it was formed and printed in wooden moulds, which were supposed to contain full weight, but which as a matter of fact, did not always do so, and those making the butter, not knowing this fact, supposed they were giving full weight. It was decided to take no action in the matter.

THE EVENING'S BUSINESS.

The president said the most important subject for discussion was that relating to the proposed assistance to be given to the Sugar Company, although the question of the abolition of Market Tolls should also claim the attention of the Board.

ABOLITION OF MARKET TOLLS.

Mr. D. W. Dumble opened the discussion on the question of a free market, and said that the matter should be looked at from a business standpoint, and said that he was opposed to the abolition of the fees. The market, he said, was a mutual advantage. The present fee is $1000, which is all that stands between that and a free market. The building used for a market was well heated and well equipped for the accommodation of the farmers who came to the town to dispose of their goods, and for those who sell outside products the large square is to be had. All those who use the market have to pay is the small market tolls.

He contended that by the abolition of the tolls, no additional business would be done, because all the farmers in the neighbourhood came to the market in any case. He believed that the buyers would not get their produce any cheaper by the market being free. He thought it was unfair to the town to allow the farmers to come and use the market without having to pay for the privilege, particularly when the townspeople would get no benefit. He believed that no philanthropic measures need be adopted.

What he would do would be to improve the market. It was positively barbarous to make the people go to the market and stand out in all weather. He thought that sheds should be built to provide a shelter for those using the market. He believed that no good end would be served by the abolition of the tolls.

In answer to a question Mr. Dumble said that the tolls at present netted the town about $1000 per year, and those who had held the tolls would not raise the amount bid.

Mr. Dumble moved, seconded by Mr. J. W. Garvin, that the town council be urged to improve the outside market so that those offering goods for sale can be protected from the inclemency of the weather, and would suggest a covering for the outside market as urgently needed. This was unanimously supported.

THE SUGAR BY-LAW.

The next subject up for discussion was that of the proposed guarantee of bonds of the Peterborough Sugar Company, upon which the ratepayers will vote on May 5th.

Mr. Garvin, the Managing Director of the company, opened the subject, upon which subsequently some warm discussion arose. Mr. Garvin said that the object of the Sugar Company was to sweeten and build up Peterborough. He understood that there had been some criticism of the management of the company, and he was very glad to know this because it evidenced an interest in the company's affairs. He had been surprised to learn that there had been some suggestion made that large salaries had been given the solicitors and other officials of the company. In reply to this charge, he said that all the fees paid the solicitor since the incorporation was $205. The managing director said that he had not drawn one dollar of salary for six months, and did not intend to draw a dollar until all the company's debts were paid.

Mr. Garvin then presented the following statement of the company's expenditure to date:

MEMORANDUM OF RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES

There has been paid in to the company on account of stock subscriptions, including $1,000 applied on land	$27676 00
Expenditures
Paid on factory site and approaches, including $1,000 of stock	4100 00
Expended on buildings and railway siding	21300 00
Commissions paid on sales of stock	2000 00
Securing acreage (two seasons)	115 00
Cost of charter, advertising salaries and travelling expenses	6000 00
	$34650 00
Bal. due on land $9500
Loss on Beets 6000
	$15500 00
	$50050 00

He thought that the factory here was being constructed at a cost of only about half that paid by other companies.

He admitted that some mistakes had been made, but it must be remembered that no one in Peterborough had a knowledge of the sugar industry. Some money had been lost in the growing of the beets, and unfortunately $6,000 had been lost, the principal item being that of 130 acree of beets which were frozen. When the directors learned of this fact, they put their hands into their pockets and paid $4,000 of this to the farmers, and the balance would be paid as soon as the by-law is passed.

MR. MOORE'S LETTER.

Mr. Garvin referred to the letter of Mr. W. H. Moore in the Examiner and said that the writer of that letter had evidently done so in a hasty manner, and he stated that the case of "A" endorsing "B s" note was not at all analagous to that of the sugar proposition because the town was given the very best security.

Mr. Garvin said that in case the Company failed to meet its obligations to the town, the latter could take the factory and sell it to recover its $100,000 as the plant would be worth $300,000.

The fact that Mr. Gordon had offered to take $100,000 of stock in the Company is sufficient proof that he considered it a paying proposition. He believed, Mr. Garvin said, that in a few years this factory would be called upon to slice 1,000 tons of beets per day.

Mr. Garvin reviewed the circumstances of the Sugar Company, and said that the first proposition entered into had not been possible to carry out, and he then tried to induce some millionairs of Michigan to come here, at last he had interested Mr. Gordon, the President of the Wallaceburg Sugar Factory. Mr. Gordon was also President of the Sydenham Glass Works, which employs 400 men; President of the Wallaceburg Cooperage, a company which manufactures 5,000,000 barrels per year. He is also interested in a number of other industrial concerns.

THE SECURITY TO THE TOWN

In answering Mr. Moore's question as to the town's security, Mr. Garvin quoted the following statement:—

ESTIMATED EXPENSES TO COMPLETE THE FACTORY.

To finish factory building, including structural steel, roofing, etc.	$35,000 00
Beet sheds, wharves, carriers, etc	15,000 00
	$50000 00
Machinery,—
Price of plant complete in Europe $156,000 00
Dismantling, packing, shipping freight 15,000 00
Re-installing 20,000 00
	$191,000 00
Contingencies	9,000 00
	$250,000 00
To which add already expended	50,000 00
Making total cost of 450-ton factory	$300,000 00

The price of this factory was about half the cost of any on this continent, and it was the necessities of the company which had enabled them to get the cost down to this figure. He stated that a second-hand plant could not be purchased in America for that amount.

He considered the security ample, and Mr. Gordon had thought the suggestion absurd that the town would not be fully secured.

Mr. Hughes-Charles complimented Mr. Garvin on his presentation of the Company's affairs, and asked for further discussion.

TOWN SHOULD ASSIST THE INDUSTRY.

Mr. Dumble agreed that the question was an important one and should be carefully considered. He had taken the position that it would have been wise to have let other companies experiment on this question before erecting a factory here. He thought Peterborough an ideal location for the sugar factory, and the industry should pay here if it

Y. W. C. A. BUILDING; THE SITE SELECTED.

The Stevenson Lot Corner Simcoe and Aylmer Streets Bought for the

The Stevenson lot, 120 feet on Simcoe street, and 140 feet on Aylmer street, has been chosen as the site for the new Young Women's Christian Association building.

During the past few weeks several suggested sites have been given due consideration, and at last the ladies decided upon the above property. They asked Mr. McBain, a member of the Directorate Board, to act as their agent in the matter, and that gentleman closed the bargain with Mr. Stevenson yesterday.

The main reason for the selection of this site was the fact that it was not on, but near, George street, and that the locality was a desirable one.

Building, it is understood, will be begun at once, and it will be so constructed as to have the door to the rooms on Simcoe street, and the boarding house entrance on Aylmer street. It is further understood that the lot will be large enough to permit of a tennis court being marked out at the rear of the building.

AMALGAMATION HAS NOW BEEN EFFECTED.

Peterborough Fuel and Cartage Company will Open Business on Monday.

To-day the Peterborough Fuel and Cartage Company has taken over the plants of the Stevenson Coal Co., the McClellan Coal Co., Wills and Goode, and William Buller, and will on Monday open their new office at 162 Charlotte street, which has been splendidly fitted out.

Cheques were paid the above company's to-day and all the business will now be carried on by the Peterborough Fuel and Cartage Company, Limited.

THE HAT QUESTION.

Striking Feature Seen by Visitors in the British House of Commons. Grand Old Man as an Equilibrist.

A striking feature of the British House of Commons to the unaccustomed eye is the Hat. Nothing, indeed, seems more astonishing and impolite than the inveterate habit of members to wear their hats in the House. It is a very old custom, the origin of which is unknown. Some have ascribed it to the days of Charles I., and made of it a protest against that monarch's attempted invasion of the Privilege of the House. Unfortunately, however, there are older prints extant showing members in the House with covered heads. Others go back to the days when the representative Commoners held their deliberations under an oak under the open canopy of heaven. But whatever the origin the hat plays a large part in the internal economy of the House of Commons. A member reserves his seat by attending prayers and depositing the article on the spot he occupied during his devotions. During the reign of Mr. Speaker, now Lord, Peel some revolutionary genius began to bring down two topper, the more dilapidated of which he placed on the bench while adorned with the more shiny one, he felt at liberty to take his case elsewhere. The momentous matter was referred to Mr. Speaker, who, after due consideration, delivered a solemn opinion that the only headgear permissible for seat reserving purpose was the genuine covering actually in use by the owner. The ingenious scheme was thus ignominiously snuffed out and the House recovered its wonted equanimity.

Sitting on His Head.

With the hat, too, members must salute Mr. Speaker on entering or leaving the House. The lifting of the hat also suffices for the moving or seconding of a motion or a bill where the member desires to reserve his remarks to a subsequent stage of the discussion. Once on his legs the disposal of his Lincoln & Bennett becomes a matter of some concern as there are obvious dangers in the placing of it on the vacant space behind. Indeed, there are dangers in front of him as well as behind him. There have been cases where the hon. member was so carried away by the exuberance of his peroration as to deliver a resounding smack on the topper in front. This is quite enough to rouse the mirth of a House as ready as any pack of schoolboys to explode in uproaring guffaws. But if the forgetful orator only remembers his own headpiece when he feels it collapsing under him, then, indeed, the House is neither to hold nor to bind. In one such extremity a member from the Green Isle rose and thusly delivered himself: "Mr. Speaker, sir, I congratulate the hon. member on his good fortune that when he sat down on his hat his head was not inside." This improvement on the legendary effort of the distressed country's patron saint sent the House into one of its gargantuan roars of laughter in which the Speaker's cry of "Order, order," was totally lost.

A Dexterous Feat.

Although as a general rule, members must address the Speaker with uncovered head, there is one notable exception, which once placed the Grand Old Man in a highly ludicrous light. After the question is put, a member speaking to a point of order must remain seated and have his hat in its proper place. Mr. Gladstone was always in the habit of leaving his hat in his private room. On this occasion the House was about to go to division, when he found it necessary to raise a point of order, but he had no hat. Now, Mr. Gladstone, as all know, possessed a head of unusual dimensions, physically as well as metaphorically, and the hat he borrowed was that of the Attorney-General, whose visible cranium was rather of the Lilliputian order. So the House was immensely tickled at the effort of the G. O. M. to balance the 5½ hat on a head three inches larger—dividing his swift mind between the maintenance of the point of gravity and the presentation of the point of order. It was a feat of dexterity rivalling that of any professional equilibrist including himself, in other lines.

STORY OF GOLD PIONEER

BIT OF HISTORY TOLD BY MR. JAMES MOORE, OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

The Discovery of Placer Gold in the Pacific Province—Large Prospect From the Washing of a Pan of Moss—Later the Discovery of the Richest Bar Ever Discovered on the Fraser River.

At the recent mining convention in British Columbia Mr. James Moore, the pioneer miner of B. C. and a delegate from the Cariboo, told the story of the discovery of gold in the country. He said, in part: When I first entered the Fraser River, with a few associates, all we found in this Province were three Hudson's Bay trading posts and a number of Siwashes. That was the whole population of the part called at that time New Caledonia. I shall speak of this Province in future as British Columbia, as the Province was a Crown colony after we discovered placer mines on the Fraser River. In ascending the river we camped one evening on a bar to cook lunch, when one of my associates noticed particles of gold in the moss which was growing on the rocks on the bar. He washed a pan of this moss and got a large prospect. After our gastronomic needs were satisfied, we all went prospecting and discovered a rich bar; in fact, sir, the richest bar ever discovered in the Fraser River or its tributaries. We named the bar in honor of my associate, who washed the first pan of moss, "Hill's Bar."

I wish it distinctly understood that we do not claim to be the first discoverers of gold—as gold was discovered the year before in small quantities by Indians on the Thompson River—but when we located this mine we laid the foundation-stone of mining in British Columbia. I may go a little further and say that we laid the foundation-stone of British Columbia, and I am proud to have the honor of stating upon the floor of this convention that I helped to lay that foundation-stone. I am the only one left of the party that discovered those first placer mines on "Hill's Bar," as my associates have crossed the "great divide." I trust they have struck it rich, and I hope they have a place for me when I join them.

When I was in Victoria last winter I met a gentleman, a Mr. Ladd, who told me that he now owns Hill's Bar, in the Fraser River, near Yale, as a mining proposition. He estimates the amount of gold already recovered from that bar to be approximately two million dollars. But, sir, in those days, no matter how rich a camp we discovered, we could not remain long in one camp. We had to explore, and I am still of the same disposition, and will not remain long in one camp to-day, but will proceed into the interior. But, sir, before I do so, I would like to say that after we discovered mines and the great rush to the Fraser River commenced the river was then at high water, and as Yale was the head of the steamboat navigation, it was also for small boats during its high stage until such time as the river fell to low water. You must remember in those days there were no railroads, wagon roads, nor pack trails. We had only an Indian trail along the great canyon of the Fraser, and the large chasms were spanned by poles tied with twisted willows, from which we could look down several hundred feet to the mighty Fraser rushing below. We had to cross these bridges with our packs on or turn back; but, I assure you, sir, that we did not know what those words meant. Our motto was, "Upwards and onwards." In the fall and early spring, when the river was at its lowest stage, we were enabled to take up boats laden with provisions from Yale to Lytton, through the canyon of the Fraser. When we got to Lytton some of the party continued up the river in the boats and discovered other large bars. Others of our party, myself included, got the horses and started inland and discovered the Horsefly country and located what was then known as the celebrated "Blue Lead Claim." I paid the Horsefly a visit 40 years after our discovery in 1859, and paid a visit to the old discovery claim, and found the company was still working that claim. The foreman of the company showed me a pan of gravel he recovered a few days before but not yet washed. It looked to me to be almost as much in gold as gravel in the pan. I could not help noticing the contrast between the present mode of working, which is by hydraulic elevators, the camp being now lit up with electricity, and our crude mode of working 40 years before with rockers and our camp lit up by camp fires. But, sir, we were able to declare a dividend every night of about $100 per man. In the next year, 1860, we discovered Duck, Keithley, Goose, Harvey, Snowshoe Creek, and in 1861 we discovered the richest creeks in Cariboo, namely, Williams, Lightning and Lowhee. Grouse and other creeks, and some of the claims were fabulously rich. I will just state one claim, for example, the Diller claim on William's Creek, where two men were working on the face of a drift with picks. They took out by 24 hours' work 204 pounds of gold Avoirdupois, and this figured into Troy ounces at $16 per ounce would be something like $47,000. But shallow placer mines do not last forever, they are soon worked out. There are a few yet that will last for some time, but not enough to make a prosperous mining camp. In speaking of these shallow placers, I do not speak of the Atlin district. We have in the interior of British Columbia a vast area of great alluvial deposits of auriferous gravels which have been lying dormant for centuries. These deposits are not confined to any one district, but we can find them in Yale, Lillooet, Cariboo, Omenica, Cassiar in three different classes.

Thieves and Bibles.

Bibles are said by detectives to be more rarely stolen than any other objects. This is not because Bibles are worthless to a thief, but because few criminals are sufficiently depraved to steal the good book. A detective said recently that in an important case which he had followed up some years ago a thief had entered the house, stolen some valuable jewels and left untouched a Bible bound in white chicken skin and studded with pearls. The detective caught the thief, and the man who had been robbed, a dealer in curios, visited his despoiler in jail, took an interest in him because he had not taken the Bible and eventually reformed him and got him a good job.

"I knew," the thief said, "that if I took that Bible it would do me harm and if I didn't take it it might do me good. I let it alone, and now, thank heaven, I'm an honest and a righteous man."

The detective added that in another case where a thief had stolen a Bible the book had been returned. "Another thing few thieves take," he added, "is a child's savings bank."

The Safety of London Theaters.

There is no gangway through the stalls in an English theater and only two exits, so that in the event of a fire, or, what is worse, of a panic, the rush to these exits and up the steps in the passages that skirt the back of the pit and lead finally to the central lobby would be terrible. One always feels entombed in the stalls of an English theater.

However, feelings are one thing, facts another. And there is no getting away from the fact that London theaters are the safest in the world. Year after year over 300 places of public entertainment are licensed by the London county council, twenty-three of them being theaters and the rest music halls, concert halls, assembly rooms, dancing saloons, and so on, and in not a single one of them has a death been caused by fire for nearly fifty years.—Sydney Brooks in Harper's Weekly.

A New French Rifle.

A new French military invention is on record. This time it is not the machine gun, but the army rifle, and again the inventor steps out from the ranks. Corporal Grissolange of the First colonial infantry has devised a method of greatly increasing the capacity of small arms for rapid firing. Instead of one magazine, holding eight cartridges, as at present, Grissolange provides three magazines, holding altogether eighteen cartridges, which by an easy mechanism worked with great rapidity are brought up in succession to the feeding tube. The army commission on military inventions has just notified Grissolange that the minister of war has placed his invention before the commission, with instructions to examine and report upon it.

A Remarkable Memory.

A remarkable memory for faces is one of the attributes of George Denny, head watchman at the state, war and navy building. It is as head doorkeeper after office hours that Denny's peculiar gift stands him in good stead. Like the other government buildings, no visitors are allowed at the state, war and navy after 2 o'clock. Many of the offices remain open until 5 o'clock, however, and there is a constant stream of officials, messengers and newspaper men pouring in and out beyond the time that the doors are closed. Denny never makes the mistake of holding up the wrong man.—Kansas City Journal.

THE BRITISH ARMY.

Conscription Is Still in Force in England—Nation Buys War Heroes Artificial Legs and Arms—Drummed Out.

At the present day we are looking with eyes of wonder at the gradual transformation of our military from red to drab-colored khaki. Red appears to us to have always been our national color so far as our army is concerned, and the "thin red line" a handy expression to denote military life. But the British soldier has not always worn a red uniform. White was once the prevailing color, and in the time of Queen Bess dark green or russet was universal.

Every British soldier's kit, when on active service, is supplied with a first field antiseptic dressing for two or three wounds. It consists of a thin waterproof mackintosh, 12 inches by 6 inches, a gauze bandage 4½ yards long, folded flat, a similar piece of gauze, safety-pins, and a compressed dressing. Directions for use are printed both on the outside and the inside of the waterproof covers.

Conscription in Force.

It is not generally known that the Government now bears the cost of providing a soldier who has lost either a leg or an arm in the service of his country with an artificial limb. It is only quite recently, however, that the military authorities decided to do this. Previously a disabled soldier had to purchase his own artificial limb, unless some charity provided it for him.

As a nation we pride ourselves on our freedom of action and our exemption from the compulsory service system existing on the continent. It will therefore come as an unpleasant surprise to many to be told that conscription actually does exist in this country, and is merely held in suspense by an annual act of Parliament. The Militia Ballot Act of 1860 compels every man between the ages of eighteen and thirty years to serve in the militia, and it is merely suspended year after year by the provisions of the Army (Annual) Act. If any real necessity arose, such as an invasion, it could be brought into force at once by the authorities.

Record of Horses.

Every horse in the British Army is numbered, and has a little history kept for it all to himself. The number is branded on the animal's hind feet—the thousands on the near hind foot and the units, tens and hundreds on the off hind foot. These horses are trained in such a manner as not to step on a fallen man intentionally. It is a standing order in the British cavalry that if a trooper gets dismounted he must lie still. If he does this the whole squadron is likely to pass over him without doing him injury.

It is a popular belief that no matter what crime a soldier commits the Civil authorities cannot reach him if his commanding officer insists on dealing with the matter on the lines of military discipline. This is quite erroneous, as for any infraction of the law of the land, no matter how trifling, the Civil power takes precedence of the military; and the Civil police can demand the surrender to them of any soldier guilty of an offence which would entail his being taken into custody.

Well-Known Ruses.

Every soldier in the British Army, when on service, carries in his haversack what is known as the "emergency ration." This consists of a small tin cylinder, similar to a pocket spirit flask, divided into two compartments. One of these is filled with four ounces of cocoa paste, and the other contains a similar quantity of concentrated beef (pemmican). As its title applies, the ration is not to be used except in the case of direct necessity, and, if consumed in small quantities, it will maintain strength for thirty-six hours.

Formerly infantry wore buttons on the skirts of their tunics, but when the valise equipment was introduced the valise was worn on the buttocks instead of the shoulders, where the old knapsack was carried. As the buttons on the skirts interfered with this arrangement they were removed, the Guards alone continuing to wear white slashes where the buttons had been. Now that the valise is no longer carried the buttons have again been introduced, and are being worn as in the olden days.

Chevrons worn on the forearm as a rule denote higher rank than those worn above the elbow; they are worn with the points upwards. The exception is the sergeant drummer, who wears a four-bar chevron on the fore-arm, but whose rank is only that of a sergeant, and therefore junior to that of color-sergeant, who only wears three bars on the upper arm with a crown above them. Stripes denoting rank are worn on the right arm; stripes on the left forearm are good conduct badges, and carry with them a penny a day each as good conduct pay.

Drummed Out.

In former days when a soldier was discharged with disgrace, he was turned out of his regiment with a regular ceremony. His facings, buttons, and badges were cut off on parade, his coat turned inside out, and he was marched to the barrack gate with the band playing "The Rouge's March." On arrival there he was assisted into the street by a kick behind from the smallest drummer boy in the regiment. This custom became obsolete years ago, but last year it was again revived by the 4th Battalion Middlesex Regiment, in the case of a man who was discharged with ignominy from that corps by sentence of a court martial.—Tit-Bits.

CREATED A SENSATION IN GALT

The Whole Country Ringing with Praises of

PSYCHINE

(PRONOUNCED SI-KEEN)

Mr Weaver, Cured two years ago, continues to spread the good news of his recovery from Grinder's

CONSUMPTION

Publicly corroborates the history of his restoration to health, as published recently by the daily press of Canada.

Doctors and specialists despaired of a cure and gave Mr. Weaver but three months to live.

MR. L. WEAVER, GALT.

Who desires to publicly confirm the history of his remarkable recovery, as published quite recently by the daily press of Canada. Mr. Weaver was as bad a case of Consumption as might well be imagined. He was employed for five years in the grinding room of James Warnock & Co's, better known as "The Axe Factory," in Galt. Here he contracted consumption from the steel-laden dust. He persisted with local physicians' treatment for over a year, also consulted a number of lung specialists. They all did their utmost to cure, but declared Mr. Weaver's an incurable case of grinder's consumption giving him but three months to live. Mr. Weaver himself, despaired of a permanent cure, as two of his brothers before him had already died of consumption.

It is but seldom that any remedy receives such strong endorsement as Psychine is receiving daily. Seldom indeed that the cured come forward voluntarily to state their case a second time so that all may be convinced of the truth. The instance herein reported from the busy town of Galt, Ont., is a typical instance of what is occurring in every city, town, hamlet and country-side in this broad Dominion. Scores of people living in Galt were long ago conversant with the facts of this notable case; while to others the publication of it in the daily press came as a revelation.

Scores of people recently called upon Mr. Weaver to see if all that had been published was really true. Medical men evidenced a desire to see the good work wrought with Dr. Slocum's famous remedy, Psychine (Si-keen). Mr. Weaver has also been the recipient of hundreds of letters from all parts of the country enquiring as to his case.

Sad and sorrowful is the first chapter of the story told by the man whose case has excited the interest of Lung Specialists and of medical men and whose cure and complete restoration to health is the talk of Galt and the wonder of the medical profession. Such, in brief, are the opening remarks of the case of Mr. Weaver, of Galt, whose portrait appears above.

Mr. Weaver is to-day a splendid specimen of manhood and the picture of robust health. His lungs give him no more trouble. He is strong and healthy, eats and sleeps well, and feels better than he has for ten years.

Mr. Weaver's Case as given to the press, January 30th, 1904.

Dr. T. A. Slocum:—For five years I worked as a grinder in the James Warnock, better known as the Axe Factory, here. The dust from the grinding did for me what it has done for many others. It gave me "grinder's consumption." I was compelled, of course, to quit work. I persisted with two local physicians, and also consulted a number of lung specialists. Their diagnoses were all alike:—"You have Grinder's Consumption, and may possibly live three months, but you are liable to drop off at any time." This was over two years ago.

I then almost abandoned myself to what seemed my fate, my two brothers having died of consumption a few years previous. I was in an advanced stage of the disease. I was thin and weak, had night sweats, chills and fever, and a terrible cough.

I saw your advertisement of "Psychine," and I determined to try it. Through the kind advice and assistance of REV. MR. KETTLEWELL, Methodist minister in charge here at that time, I procured your treatment. The very first bottle gave me great relief, and after taking six bottles I could walk down town and even work occasionally. Have since then entirely regained my health, and work hard every day. I can eat and sleep well. I feel better to-day than I have for years. I owe my life to Psychine.

Yours truly,

LEVI WEAVER.

Mr. Weaver's second statement after the above was published.

GALT, ONT.

Dr. T. A. Slocum:—The publication of the history of my case in Toronto and Galt papers has caused quite a sensation in this town. There have been scores of people ask me if such were really the case. I have also received by mail numbers of like enquiries. Some people hardly think it possible that I was so near death's door. But I can say for certain that Psychine saved my life and I bless the day I saw Psychine advertised and became convinced of its merits enough to try it. I have spread the good news in three counties, and shall ever continue to praise Psychine. Every word, as published January 30th, is true to the facts of the case.

Yours truly,

LEVI WEAVER.

IN UNCLE SAM'S LAND

SOME EMINENT CANADIANS WHO LIVE ACROSS THE BORDER.

The Dominion, However, Attracts Many Residents From Brother Jonathan—Canadians in All Walks of Life—Archbishops and Bishops, Politicians and Men Expert in Transportation, Science and Art Who Have Left Us.

The movement of the people, governed as it is by personal considerations, largely those of a business nature, brings many citizens of the United States to Canada as permanent residents, and transfers many excellent Canadians to Uncle Sam's land. Our neighbors who have come from the United States are welcome additions to the strength of the Dominion. They are, as a rule, experts in some particular line, for which there has been no special training on this side of the border. After a short residence with us, they find that Canada is a country worth living in, not only because of its natural splendor, but because of its promising future. They thereupon take a lively interest in the Dominion, and although of foreign birth, are as enthusiastically Canadian as the home-grown article. From Canada, however, the Republic has drawn very largely. There has been a species of exchange going on.

Archbishops and Bishops.

The "Morgan," or American "Who's Who," which has been recently issued, throws a good deal of light upon the careers of Canadians next door. It is interesting to find from it that the Dominion has given to the United States two archbishops of the Roman Catholic Church, five Protestant Episcopal bishops, and three Methodist Episcopal bishops. The archbishops are the Most Rev. James E. Quigley, of Chicago, and the Most Rev. Patrick Riordan, of San Francisco. Mgr. Quigley was born at Oshawa. He studied at Niagara Falls for the ministry, proceeded to Austria and Rome, where he completed his education, and was called to the bishopric of Buffalo. From that see he was recently appointed to Chicago. This prelate became world renowned on the occasion of the Iroquois conflagration. He was passing the burning theatre at the time of the fire, and entered it to help in the work of rescue and to administer to the dying. Archbishop Riordan comes from New Brunswick. The Protestant Episcopal prelates are Bishop Niles, of New Hampshire, a native of Hatley, Que.; Right Rev. Arthur L. Williams, of Owen Sound, coadjutor bishop of Nebraska; Right Rev. Charles P. Anderson of Kemptville, coadjutor bishop of Chicago; Right Rev. Peter T. Rowe, of Toronto, a graduate of Trinity University, bishop of Alaska, and Right Rev. Charles H. Brent, of Newcastle, Ont., bishop of the Philippine Islands. Among the Methodist Episcopal bishops are Rev. Charles E. Smith, of Colborne, Ont., now of Detroit; Rev. Charles H. Fowler, of Burford Township, now of Buffalo, and Rev. Frank W. Ware, missionary bishop to India. Other celebrities of Canadian origin are Rev. Francis E. Clarke, a native of Aylmer, Que., who founded the Christian Endeavor movement, and Rev. John E. Ferguson, of Lonsdale, Ont., who is president of the Nanking University, and has charge of the Central China Mission.

In Political Life.

The Canadians in political life are numerous. One of them is United States Senator J. H. Millard, formerly of Hamilton, now the representative of Nebraska at Washington. He has as a colleague Thomas Kearns, of Woodstock, Ont., who sits for Utah. In the House of Representatives there are James T. McCleary, born at Ingersoll, a member from Minnesota; Philip P. Campbell, of Cape Breton, representing a district in Kansas; James A. Hughes, a native of Ontario, sitting for West Virginia, and Alfred Lucking of Ingersoll, representing the first district of Michigan. The County of Compton, in the Eastern Townships, had as Governor of Vermont Hon. Josiah Grout, while Madoc, in Ontario, has sent two natives to the United States to become important in diplomatic life. One of these, Herbert G. Squires, has been Envoy-Extraordinary to Havana, Cuba, and the other Robert P. Whitmarsh, has been Governor of Benguet, in the Philippine Islands. The City Chamberlain of New York, during Seth Low's administration, was Elgin Gould, a native of Oshawa, and the Assistant Postmaster-General of the United States is Edwin C. Madden, formerly of Montreal. It is somewhat startling to learn that Jerry Simpson, who attained notoriety as "the sockless" member of Congress from New Mexico, was born in New Brunswick.

Transportation, Science and Art.

It is of course well known that J. J. Hill, the railway magnate and millionaire of the West, was born near Guelph. He left his father's farm a barefooted boy, and is now the controller of the Great Northern Railway. S. R. Callaway is another successful railway man. He spent his early days in Toronto, and gradually rose until he became manager of the Union Pacific Railway. Percy Todd, of Toronto, is second vice-president of the New York and New Haven Railway, and Monserrat Nichols, formerly of London, is president of the Hocking Valley. In science we have Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, who spent his early days in Brantford, and Montague Chamberlain, the greatest American ornithologist, born at St. John, N.B., and now of Harvard. Literature is rich in Canadian names. Palmer Cox, of the Brownie stories, was born in Granby, Quebec, and spent his early days at Norwich Ont. Thompson-Seton, the writer about animals, is from Toronto, while Robert Barr, the novelist and humorist, is from Wallaceton, Elgin County. Bliss Carman, Charles G. D. Roberts, and Benjamin Rand are contributions from the east. On the stage Canadians have become famous. Among the names of celebrated actresses are Julia Arthur, of Hamilton; Margaret Anglin, of Toronto, Clara Morris, of Toronto, May Irwin, of Whitby.

Manning the Colleges.

It is in the colleges that Canadians are most numerous. Probably the most eminent on the list is President Jacob G. Schurman, who is at the head of Cornell University. This gentleman was born in Prince Edward Island. He began life as a boy in a store, and by industry and application educated himself. There are some sixty Canadian professors in the various colleges, and nine of them are presidents of the institutions with which they are connected. On the whole Canadians take an important place in the life of the United States. While it is a matter for some regret that they should not be in their own country, there is a compensation in the fact that the exchange of men, and the consequent community of interests make for good feeling and render misunderstandings less liable to occur than would be the case were each country to be without friends of the other within its borders. It is fortunate for our neighbors that the Constitution of the United States reserves the Presidency for the native born.

DEEP SEA HOSPITAL SHIPS.

Maintained for the Newfoundland Fishermen—Lord Strathcona's Gift of 600 Ton Steamer—Dr. Grenfell's Work.

While the Newfoundland and French fishermen on the Grand Banks are provided with hospital ships and the most modern medical accessories, the United States fleet in the same waters is without any such humane auxiliary, and has to depend for the treatment of its sick and injured upon the ministrations of the medical services of its rivals, or else has to suffer the loss of time and business involved in coming to land to place helpless men under proper care.

The Newfoundland Medical Mission has been at work now some twelve years, and is splendidly organized and equipped. The mission is a branch of that which works among the British seamen and fisher folk, and its extension to Newfoundland has been of immense benefit. To-day it maintains three hospitals—one on the "French Shore" and two on Labrador, each with a resident doctor, a trained English nurse, a staff of local assistants and a stout steam launch for the conveyance of patients. In addition, there is a fine modern yacht, the Strathcona, a steamer of 600 tons, built by Lord Strathcona, and presented by him to the mission. In this ship the superintendent, Dr. Grenfell, cruises every season from the Grand Banks to Hudson Bay, treating all who come to him for aid, regardless of race or class or condition, the same rule prevailing in all the other branches of the mission.

The total cost of this work each year is now about $20,000, and the number of house patients (serious cases) in 1902 was 110, and of out patients 2,664. Some thirty-five operations under anaesthetics were undertaken, and eight deaths occurred in the hospitals or on the ship. The majority of these cases had no chance whatever of any other skilled assistance. It was not a question of better or worse treatment, but of suffering or dying without medical aid at all, other than what the mission afforded. Some of the cases are unique in medical annals. The two-year-old child of a Labrador settler wandered away from the doorstep in the winter, and when found both her feet were frostbitten. Mortification set in, and to save her life the father chopped off both extremities with his wood axe. In due course the mission doctor reached the place with his dog sled, and found the little sufferer almost at death's door. But he treated the stumps scientifically and preserved the child in health, even if she is stricken with this infirmity. The child has now been fitted with artificial legs and adopted by an English family. Another case is that of a little boy, the four-year-old son of the Hudson Bay Company's factor at Rigolet Station, who was worried by savage Esquimaux dogs until there were eighty-seven separate bites on his puny body. He was hurriedly brought to the nearest hospital, where he eventually recovered, though at first little hope was entertained of this.

Equally remarkable are the cures effected among the fishermen on the Banks. Most of these are surgical cases. Men are crushed by falling or breaking spars, have ribs or limbs fractured in storms, or are the victims of gunshot wounds. The Strathcona in her cruises meets most of these, and the patients are either transferred to her or, if not bad enough for this, treated on board their own vessels. If the cases are desperate or the yacht's accommodations crowded the ship is ordered to one of the hospitals and the man is housed there. Skippers, too, make for these centres of their own accord when a mishap occurs to their crews and the yacht is not near. French, Portuguese, Canadians, Americans—all avail themselves of the missions, and their generosity gets abundant play here. The story is told of one Yankee skipper who asked the hospital doctor if he would like fresh fish for the patients, and, being answered in the affirmative, sent ashore a halibut weighing over a hundredweight and taking four men to carry. Staff and patients ate it while they could, but had ultimately to bury its remainder some distance away, being without sufficient ice to preserve it. But, apart from this, these fishermen all pay in cash for their medicine and food, the seafarer, as a class, being about the most independent man alive, and knowing only too well from sad experience what a boon it is to secure such ministrations in time of sickness or misfortune.

The ship and the hospitals have the latest devices in medical science, including the X-ray apparatus. They are lighted by electricity, and are as well kept as much more pretentious institutions. The Newfoundland fishermen, working from their own coast and Labrador, and only a day's run seaward, do not need a hospital ship so much as they do a kindred institution on shore, and that is why these three buildings have been erected. Fully twenty thousand Newfoundland men are engaged in the fishery on the Banks and Labrador every season, and until the mission was established they had no medical aid whatever. Even as it is now, there is work for a larger staff than that employed, but this is naturally limited by the funds at the mission's disposal. Another work which it does that is of great good is in feeding the hungry and clothing the naked "liveyeres" (live-heres, or permanent inhabitants) of Labrador, when the approach of winter threatens these wretched beings with death in its worst form—i. e., from starvation and cold.

Men's Fashions.

Heads are worn large in the early morning.

South Dakota ties are popular at Newport.

Spats are general in married circles.

Collar buttons are scarce, as usual.

Cutaway coats are worn by bank cashiers.—Smart Set.

The Useful Sunflower.

It is a common joke to call inferior cigars "cabbage leaves," but, as a matter of fact, some very good "weeds" are made from the leaves of the sunflower. These leaves can also be smoked in the place of tobacco, forming quite a passable substitute.

The stalks and leaves make excellent food for various animals, while the former can also be employed as fuel. Sunflower cake is made from the seeds of this useful plant after the oil has been extracted, this oil being very nearly equal to olive oil and used in cooking. The seeds not only serve as food for cattle; they are mashed and kneaded into bread by the poor peasants of certain parts of Russia, and they find it very palatable.

Potash is obtained from the ash of the stalks. The proportion is about one-third of potash to the total ash left after burning. A yellow dye is made from the flower of the plant. The fiber can be worked into a silk material.

				$2,110,755.25

During the year of 1903, the policies issued and taken amounted to $1,278,850, an increase of $1,180,400, or 88 per cent over last year. The insurance in force showed an increase of $2,734,092, leaving our total business in force at the end of the year $18,023,639. The interest earned in 1903 amounted to $110,428, an increase of $25,752, or 30 per cent. over that of last year. The Surplus to Policyholders is now $473,963, or more than double the surplus at the end of the previous year.

All the Investments of the Company (outside of Debentures, principally deposited with the Dominion Government) are on the security of first mortgages on improved and rental bearing properties in the West, and on policies of the Company.

The amount of Death Claims was $80,542.76, again very much below the amount expected, and we are once more able to report that every death claim received was paid before the end of the year. We have included in the liabilities $1,000 to cover a claim that has not yet been received, but we have been advised of the reported death of the insured in a foreign country.

We have valued our insurance liability, as in previous years, on a more stringent basis than that required by the Insurance Act; and it now reaches the handsome sum of $1,601,217.

As may be plainly seen, the year has been a very prosperous one, and the results shown should enable all interested in the success of the Company to conscientiously continue to recommend intending insurers to give the Great-West the preference when placing their insurance.

A CANADIAN IN EGYPT.

Mr. S. G. Archibald Chosen Professor of French Law for Cairo University.

That a Canadian should receive the appointment of professor of French law in the University of Cairo, Egypt, is rather an unique honor. As the civil law of Quebec Province is the Code Napoleon, a lawyer trained in that Province and able to speak French, is competent to fill such a post. Mr. S. G. Archibald, who has received the appointment, is a son of Mr. Justice Archibald of the Superior Court of Quebec

DR. S. G. ARCHIBALD.

Province, and was born in Montreal in 1875. He passed through the High School, where he carried off both the Davidson gold medal and the Governor-General's gold medal in 1891.

Entering McGill University, he obtained his degree of B. A., in 1897, with first-class honors in English literature and at the same time the winner of the Shakespeare gold medal. In April, 1900, he graduated in the law faculty of McGill as B.C.L., with high honors, and was admitted to the Quebec Bar in July of the same year. Mr. Archibald studied for some time in France, especially in Paris and Montpellier, where he became thoroughly conversant with the French language. He was for two years lecturer on English literature in McGill University.

Snow Modeling.

The best time to build a snow statue or an elaborate snow man, says Country Life In America, is just before the formation of a crust on the snow—that is, during a thaw and just before a cold snap. The thaw is sure to occur at the right time, but to be "real smart" one should consult the weather map for the cold snap. A subject should be chosen and thoroughly committed to memory in advance, since the actual work of modeling must generally be begun and finished between 2 or 3 o'clock and dark, and there is no time for "courting the muse."

If the weather conditions are favorable, the statue may last a month. But within a week the evaporation from the surface begins to have a disfiguring effect, especially on the side most exposed to the sun, even though the temperature has continued below freezing.

BLOOD POISON

On account of its terrible effects, blood disease is called the king of all diseases. It may be either hereditary or contracted; so while it may not be a crime to have the disease, it is a crime to permit it to remain in the system. It may manifest itself in the form of Scrofula, Eczema, rheumatic pains, stiff or swollen joints, itchiness of the skin, eruptions or blotches, ulcers in the mouth or on the tongue, sore throat, falling out of hair, disordered stomach, and a general depression of the system. If you have any of these symptoms don't neglect yourself. You have no time to lose. Beware of "cold fogy" treatment—beware of mineral poisons—beware of Quacks and Fakirs. OUR NEW METHOD TREATMENT is guaranteed to cure this disease, never to return. Bank Bonds will protect you. Our treatment is not injurious in any way, but reaches the very root of the disease and eliminates all poison from the system. The symptoms of disease gradually disappear. The blood becomes pure and enriched, the whole system is cleansed and purified, and the patient feels prepared anew for the duties and the pleasures of life. CURES GUARANTEED OR NO PAY. 25 Years in Detroit. 250,000 Cured.

GOOD SEASON FOR TOURIST TRAEFIC.

Is Predicted by Captain Tuffield Morn of the "Empress."

Captain Tuffield Morn, of Lakefield, was in town to-day on his way home from Cobourg and Harwood. Mr. Morn says that the ice on Rice Lake is still quite thick, although it is detached from the shore.

Captain Morn will probably be on the Empress this season and looks for a good season's business. The tourists traffic is growing each year, and he looks to see the season of 1904 eclipse all former years.

The ice is all out of the lake between Young's Point and Lakefield, but Stony lake is still in the grasp of the frost king. The season will be late in opening, but if the weather becomes warm the business will be good.

GOOD PROGRAMME ON VICTORIA DAY.

T. A. S. Arranging a First Class Field Day of Sports.

The committee of the T.A.S. appointed to prepare for a field day of sports on May 24th, Victoria Day, met last night in the T.A.S. rooms and discussed plans for the event. The lacrosse and baseball teams will co-operate and a splendid programme of sports will be arranged. No definite plans have been made, but it is assured that the day will be characterized by one of the best day's sport ever seen in the town. A strong committee has the matter in charge, and it is likely that some good outside teams will be brought in to compete with the local teams.

A good list of prizes is being arranged for the different sporting events.

IMPORTANT DECISION.

At a meeting of the Barbers Union, No. 402, held April 12th, there being two non-union shops in town it was decided to publish a list of the fair shops for which they solicit patronage of the union men and the public in general. The following is a complete list of the Union shops:—

A. Donaldson,	F. Potvin,
J. Cottingham,	Irwin & Hall,
Ed. Wright,	D. Lake,
Wm. Morgan,	Wm. McGregor,
Jos. Primeau,	C. LeGros,
J. Lewis,	S. Baker,

Blinding Dust Swept on Streets To-Day.

Snow on the streets one night, and blinding dust the following day. Such is the strange combination of winter-spring which Peterborough is at present experiencing. The Examiner has been requested to urge that street watering be begun at once. The strong north-westerly winds today raised the dust in great quantities, and walking was exceptionally disagreeable. Besides this, merchants who display goods outside their shop windows suffer loss, which would not be incurred if the streets had been properly watered. Undoubtedly on another day as was today the watering cart should be doing service on, at least, the main streets of the town.

THE MINISTREL'S SCORE SUCCESS.

An Enjoyable Event in Fifth Ward Hall.

Given by the Men's Guild of St. Lukes Church—a Long but Pleasant Programme Given.

The minstrel show given in the Fifth Ward Hall last night, under the auspices of the Young Men's Guild of St. Luke's church, was in every way a huge success. The hall was crowded to the doors. All through the entertainment the audience was kept in laughter. Jokes were "cracked" that really were never "cracked" before, and not a few prominent personages were lightly "hit." The songs were up-to-date and well rendered, and for amateurs the "artists" are deserving of great credit.

The programme opened with the overature, which was comical in the extreme, after which the circle, composed of the young men of the Guild took their seats. The following are the names of those in the circle:—

Tambos. — J. J. Turner, A. E. Lucas, C. Calcutt, G. Butcher, C. Crane, H. Burnett, H. McWha, S. Gibbs,

Bones. — W. F. Turner, G. G. Pratley, S. Whittaker, G. Detcher, S. Gaskins, D. Curtis, A. W. Turner.

Interlocutor. — W. E. Wesley.

The conductor called on Tambo Turner for a song, but as he was not in condition, the conductor favoured the audience with the song, "Under the Amhenser Bush." His deep bass voice suited the selection and he was accorded a hearty reception.

Mr. John Turner, senior tambo, next gave "Mary Ann." He also had to respond. After a few jokes had been thrown and a story or two told, Mr. W. Andrews sang the song "Wake up, My Dixie Sweetheart," and brought down the house. "Lucy Bailey," was a favourite number, Mr. Albert Lucas giving it. He also sang "Lorna Doone," for which he received hearty applause.

Mr. A. G. Pratley pleased the audience with "Good Bye, Eliza Jane," and was heartily encored and had to respond. Webber Turner, in "The Wise Old Owl," made a hit. The song, "Barney," given by Mr. Sam Whittaker seemed to please the audience, who showed their appreciation by rapturous applause.

The first part of the programme was brought to a close with the song, "Hallelujah," sung by Mr. John Turner, which was exceedingly well rendered, and only satisfied the audience by a response.

The second part of the programme opened with Mr. W. E. Wesley singing the song entitled "Clang of the Forge." He handled it well and was rapturously encored.

The descriptive sketch "In the Streets of London" was not given, owing to rather lengthy programme, but the "Business Office of Mr. Brown" was given and kept the audience in a happy mood while it lasted. Mr. J. J. Turner, Jr., acting as Mr. Brown, played his part well, while Mr. W. E. Wesley as George Washington the office boy, kept the audience in laughter all through the play. Mr. W. F. Turner as "Shorlock Holmes," comedian, gave several oratorical sketches which pleased those present. Mr. A. E. Lucas, as "the Lady in the Play," performed his part well.

Mrs. A. W. Turner was the accompanist of the evening, and pleased the audience with several instrumental selections.

The entertainment was a big success and all present enjoyed themselves heartily. The guild deserves great credit for the successful issue of the entertainment.

THE MISSION BAND'S EASTER CONCERT

"THE HOUSE BEAUTIFUL"

The Turnbull Co's Luxurious Carpets, Curtains, Draperies and Home Decorations.

The homekeeper's mind, after the long winter, with its cares and social fatigues, gladly goes roaming in April to the subject of spring housefurnishings.

Perhaps the most cheerful, cosy decorations of "the house beautiful," are the carpets and floor coverings. Ten or twelve years ago one's choice was limited to a few possibilities in good inexpensive carpets and rugs, but now the choice is very wide. The owner of a very artistic home, complete in every detail, once said she fairly longed to have assigned to her the pleasure of furnishing a house on a very limited amount of money. This task now awaits the owners of Peterborough homes—the accomplishment of which is very much simplified by the rare selection of floor coverings, window draperies, and allied decorations, shown by the Messrs Turnbull Co., in their double store on George and Simcoe streets. It will not be a weary task to find just what is wanted here. No need to hunt, hunt, hunt, for the desirable thing for the floors, windows, nooks and cosy corners. Making the house beautiful, is easy, once you visit Turnbull's.

Connoisseurs who purchase the expensive patterns, as well as the practical housekeeper, who wishes to buy the most serviceable and attractive goods, will be able to make a satisfactory selection from this unequalled stock.

There are the beautiful and costly English Axminster carpets, in a range of high-class goods, and all that is best in designs and colour combinations from the special manufacturers of Great Britain. The English Wilton carpets, by far the best and most satisfactory wearing carpet made for homes. The English Brussels carpets, well woven and reliable makes, with many exclusive designs. The English Tapestry carpets, which have been steadily improving of late years. The Ingrain carpets in the best brands of all-wool, reversible, as well as the Union Ingrain Carpets, of superior quality and reversible. Stair Carpets are shown in Axminster, Velvet, Brussels, Wilton and Tapestry effects, from the leading makers.

Then, there are the luxurious rugs, art squares and mats; coloured rugs and squares with heavy pile, whose silky texture, like that of plush, provides great durability and softness of tread. Axminster and Smyrna rugs, inexpensive and pretty, which includes many beautiful antiques in large and small sizes, in every variety of colouring and weave.

The selections of artistically designed heavy inlaid and printed linoleums are very extensive and handsome, so are the floor oil cloths, the Cocoa mattings, string mattings and Japanese straw mattings.

The lace curtain and drapery departments are resplendent with a large selection of newest decorations and materials. Curtain nets and muslins, art silkaline, art cretonne, art sateen, art denims, etc. If you are furnishing, consult Messrs. Turnbull & Co., and they will send a skilled decorator and have him give you the tastiest and most original ideas.

An evidence of the Turnbull Co's extensive business in carpets and floor coverings may be seen in the large plate glass show window, where large rolls of a beautiful Axminster carpet is well exhibited. This is a very rich, conventional design, in dark garnet and green, and is a sample of a three hundred yard order received for decorating the Oddfellows' hall. The Bank of Commerce also recently placed an order with this firm for a large quantity of heavy Scotch inlaid linoleum in parquet design.

The firm also carry a full stock of white enamelled iron beds, improved mattrasses and springs, rich bed spreads, etc.

Mr. John Titterson, who is in charge of the carpet department, is a practical house-furnishing man with a long experience, and will be found most obliging and painstaking.

BORN TO BE PAUPERS.

Whole Family Living in an English Workhouse Together.

A family with a remarkable experience of workhouse life is at present enjoying the hospitality of the Marylebone Poor Law Guardians, says the Daily Mail.

At the end of July, 1891, the grandfather, Patrick Downs, at that time about 60 years of age, who lived in Lisson street west, sought the shelter of the workhouse, to be followed a few months later by his wife, Catharine. He was a day laborer, and for the non-payment of rent was turned out of his home The couple are still in the workhouse, and there they will doubtless remain.

A daughter, Kate, made periodic visits to the institution, taking her discharge when well enough to leave. She is now about 30 years of age. Three of her children, born in the workhouse, are dead, and were buried by the parish. Another, a boy, is now in the Shaftesbury training ship, where he is maintained at the expense of the guardians.

Another daughter, Elizabeth, married a man named Lawes, who has been an inmate, but is not now in residence. The wife died in the institution, and her four children are being maintained and educated at the Guardians' Schools at Southall. A third daughter, Johanna Cooling, who has no children, is now out of the "house," but she has been an inmate.

JUST ONE MORE DIRECT PROOF

That Dodd's Kidney Pills Cure Promptly and Permanently.

All Forms and Stages of Kidney Disease —New Brunswick man Tells of Terrible Urinary Complaint Banished Once and for all.

St. Mary's Ferry, York Co., N.B.—April 15.—(Special.)—Thomas Harrison, a well known resident of this place, adds his testimony to that of the thousands who have proved that Dodd's Kidney Pills cure promptly and permanently any form or stage of Kidney Disease. Mr. Harrison says:—

"Some years ago I began to suffer from pain in the back, accompanied by a lethargy impossible to overcome. I was attended by a physician, but continued to grow worse, and began to pass bloody urine.

"On the advice of a friend I started using Dodd's Kidney Pills, and by the time I had taken one box I passed a stone which is now in the doctor's possession.

"Three boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills cured me completely, and though it is now years since I was cured I have had no return of my old complaint."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure the Kidneys, and with sound Kidneys you need never fear Urinary complaints.

Mr. McEvoy's Mistake.

Toronto, April 15.—Barrister McEvoy, has made a slight mistake in the joint actions taken against R. R. Gamey, and A. W. Wright, for alleged libel. The Master-in-Ordinance yesterday decided that he will have to bring suit against defendants individually. Two weeks will be given the lawyer to choose which one he will proceed against first.

Calls Chamberlain Traitor.

Washington, April 15.—In the House yesterday in some remarks on the protective tariff, Mr. Baker (New York) criticized Joseph Chamberlain as a "traitor to the cause of free trade."

Only one Dr. Chase.

There is only one Dr. Chase of Receipt Book Fame—Only one Dr. Chase who is known the world over because of the great prescriptions he gave to mankind. His portrait and signature—A. W. Chase, M.D.—are on on every box of his medicine. Imitators do not dare to reproduce these—they are the guarantee which protects you against fraud. Be sure they are on the box you buy.

The Cat.

The cat is called kat in Danish and Dutch, katt in Swedish, chat in French, katti or katze in German, catus in Latin, gatto in Italian, gato in Portuguese and Spanish, kot in Polish, kots in Russian, cath in Welsh, kath in Cornish, Catua in Basque and gaz or kats in Armenian.

REINDEER WOOL CLOTHES.

Their Buoyancy Makes Them an Aid to Persons Learning to Swim.

From their herds of reindeer the Laplanders in northern Europe take the woolly hair and make from it blankets which are remarkable for their excellent qualities of resisting moisture and cold. Of these blankets the United States consul at Frankfurt, Germany, has this to say:

"A close examination of the hair of the reindeer furnishes an explanation of its peculiar value. The hair does not have a hollow space inside for its whole length, but is divided or partitioned off into exceedingly numerous cells, like water tight compartments. These are filled with condensed air, and their walls are so elastic and at the same time of such strong resistance that they are not broken up either during the process of manufacture or by swelling when wet. The cells expand in water, and thus it happens that a man clad completely in garments made of reindeer wool does not sink when in water because he is buoyed up by means of the air contained in the hundreds of thousands of hair cells. In the markets and stores of Norway, Sweden and Russia garments and blankets of reindeer wool are to be had at lower prices than other fabrics. In Vienna there is a factory which manufactures garments of reindeer wool, especially bathing costumes. For persons unable to swim the possession of such garments is of great value. It is possible that they may be utilized in learning how to swim. Recently successful trials have been made in Paris in this line. In England attention has been directed to this peculiar property of reindeer wool, and it is proposed to take up its manufacture and possibly to improve it."—Fiber and Fabric.

AN AID TO MOTHERS.

In thousands of cases it has been proved that Baby's Own Tablets are the very best thing for children suffering from colic, constipation, diarrhoea, simple fevers, colds and teething troubles. The Tablets are guaranteed to contain no opiate or harmful drug, and may be given with equal safety to the tender, new born babe, or the well grown child. Mrs. Jorl Anderson, Shanley, Ont., is one of the mothers who have proved the value of this medicine, and says: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets with the very best results. They are easy to give the little ones and I have never known them to fail to benefit. Every mother should keep the Tablets in the house. In an emergency they may save a precious little life. Story of Seton Thompson.

M. S. Clark writes from Toronto to The Montreal Witness as follows: "The other day at the closing exercises of Palmerston Avenue Public School I heard Mr. Hughes, Public School Inspector, tell the children the following story of Ernest Seton Thompson:

"Thompson was a pupil at the Victoria Street School in this city, and seems even at that time to have acquired some skill in animal sketching. One day while the teacher was out young Thompson went up to the board and made an excellent chalk crayon picture of some animal, giving it, however, a man's head easily to be recognized as that of the teacher of the room. When the latter came in and saw the picture, he sternly asked who had made it. When Thompson owned the deed, the teacher punished him for daring to leave his seat without leave. 'And thus,' added the inspector, 'with strong facial expression, 'instead of taking the incident as a joke and complimenting the young artist on his excellent drawing and thereby winning the heart of every boy and girl in the class, he thr-r-r-a-s-h-e-d' (crushing frown here) 'him, and did his best to beat out of his young heart the splendid talents which God had given him.'

"While wondering what the moral effect of such a story would be, when told to a room full of boys and girls before their teachers, it occurred to me that Seton Thompson had not yet got over the habit of putting men's heads on the animals he has known and sketched, but his own most frequently, rather than that of his teacher's. It is hardly to be expected that any other students of nature will meet such creatures in the wild wood or flowery vale as Seton Thompson claims to have known."

Commands British Forces in S. A.

The St. James' Gazette says of General Sir Henry Hildyard, who has been appointed to succeed Sir Ian Hamilton in command of the British forces in South Africa: "General Hildyard is something more than a hard-hitting fighter. He is a strategist and tactician of the first order. His reputation was immensely enhanced by his brilliant work in South Africa. Although he had men who could not, as he told the War Commission, take a hand at snap-shooting, and many who were soft and unformed, he did wonders. 'Lanesman' summed him up in one of his admirable appreciations: 'There is no general officer in this army who has more speedily, certainly and deservedly won the confidence of his subordinates than General Hildyard, from the day when he saved as many lives of his brigade as could be saved from the devastating inferno raging around them at Colenso, by his timely adoption of extended order, to the moment when that same brigade, with others, was triumphantly nursed by him on to the knobby summits of Almond's Nek.'"

The Metal Nodium.

A new metal similar to aluminium; but of still lesser weight, has been discovered by the French engineer, Albert Nodon, and called "nodium" after him. It is manufactured by an electric process. In color, luster and structure it is almost exactly like steel. Its specific weight when molten is only 2.4. Its resistance against breaking is given as about twenty pounds a square of .04 inch. Its constancy in the air is higher than that of aluminium. Its ductility is between six and eight inches. The malleability can be compared to that of bronze. It melts at about 600 degrees.

HAS UNIQUE RECORD

PURSER KINSEY, WHO HAS CROSSED THE ATLANTIC 830 TIMES.

An Interesting Career Which Comprehends Greater Part of History of Atlantic Steam Navigation, and in Which Has Been Viewed at Close Range the Marvelous Changes in Ocean Travel.

Nowadays it is no unusual thing to meet persons who have crossed the Atlantic forty or fifty times. On almost any voyage of a big Atlantic liner you will encounter one of these veterans who informs you casually that he is making his fifty-sixth voyage, who can prophesy the weather as well as the chief boatswain, who hobnobs with the captain and runs affairs in the smoke room quite as a matter of right.

While it is a question who is entitled to be called the champion amateur ocean traveler, there is no question that what may be called the professional record belongs to Purser Thomas Kinsey of the American Line steamship New York. The little red book in which he keeps a diary bears testimony to the fact that down to date he has crossed the international ferry 830 times, and as he is still one of the youngest men that wear gray hair and is regularly making his two trips a month from New York to Southampton and back again there is every reason to believe he will reach a grand total of a thousand or more crossings before he finally retires from the sea.

Purser Kinsey is by no means the oldest man in the Atlantic passenger trade, though in continuous service he probably passes most of his fellow officers. The reason he has more ocean trips to his credit by a hundred or two than any other man in the business is that he began very early and has kept at it almost continuously since. He became the purser of one of the Inman Line steamers at nineteen and has remained in the service of that company, and of its successor, the American Line, ever since. So his career comprehends the greater part of the history of Atlantic steam navigation. He has seen ocean steamships multiplied in size tenfold, and the liner to which he is now attached makes the journey between New York and Europe in less than half the time of his first ship, which was then the wonder of the sea.

The veteran purser's first Atlantic voyage was made when, as a boy of ten, he came from England to Philadelphia, Pa., in the City of Manchester, one of the earliest screw steamships and the first vessel built by the Inman Line, or the Liverpool, New York and Philadelphia Steamship Company, as it was then known. But the real beginning of his ocean career may be said to date from 1866, when he became the purser of the Inman liner City of London. During the sixties the City of London was one of the belles of the ocean She was the third ocean screw steamship to be put into operation and was considered remarkable for both size and speed, being nearly 300 feet long, about two-fifths the length of the present day Oceanic, or 2,765 gross tons, and 450 horse-power. Most astonishing, however, was the fact that she made the voyage between Liverpool and Philadelphia in twelve days.

"The City of London was really a gem for her time," said Purser Kinsey the other day when he sat in his office on board the New York, chatting with some of his younger associates about his experiences, "You must remember she came not long after the time of sailing packets and directly on the heels of the early paddle wheel steamships. As she was the best of her kind and time, no better indication of the great progress made in steamship construction can be had than by comparing her with the New York or some other of the big modern greyhounds."

Mr. Kinsey has seen service on nearly all the crack ships the Inman and American Lines have put into commission during the past thirty years. Among them the City of Brussels, the City of Chester and the City of Berlin. The latter was built in 1875 and was for a time the fastest ship on the Atlantic, as she was also the largest, with the exception of the Great Eastern, reducing the time from New York to Queenstown to 7 days 15 hours 28 minutes, which was considered a remarkable performance.

When Two Rainbows Are Seen.

When two rainbows are sometimes seen at once, one outside the other, the inner or primary bow, as it is called, is always the brighter, and the red band of color is always on its outside. The outer or secondary bow is much fainter in color, and the red band is always on its inside. This is because in the primary bow the sun's rays are only reflected once, while in the secondary bow they are reflected twice, which makes them fainter in color and turns them upside down. In one rainbow we see the rays of the sun entering the raindrops at the top and reflected to the eye from the bottom, while in the other we see the rays entering the raindrops at the bottom and reflected from the top, whence they reach the eye.

The Veil In Persia.

J. D. Rees, a lecturer on Persia, says that the veils worn by Persian ladies are more of a privilege than a punishment. Screened behind it woman may walk wherever she pleases, and even her own husband dare not question her movements. Doubtless many Persian ladies make the most of their opportunities. The Persians, as a rule, do not think it right to take wine, but as nearly all their poetry is in praise of the flowing bowl it will be inferred that they frequently do violence to their conscience. Occasionally, however, they are seized with remorse, whereupon they destroy the wine of their Armenian neighbors.

Ten Free With Knives.

Sir Frederick Treves, the eminent English surgeon, recently delivered an address in which he took the view that the knife is used too hastily in many cases of appendicitis. There are opposing schools of surgery all over the world in this generation. One is rarely willing to wait and often cuts in a hurry. The other holds to the view that nature ought to have a liberal chance to do her best. In the long run the conservative surgeons may possibly come out ahead

Could Not Sleep At Night.

Was All Run Down.

Had No Appetite.

FOOD WOULD NOT DIGEST.

Mrs. I. W. Warner, Riverdale, N.S., is glad there is such a remedy as

Burdock Blood Bitters.

IT CURED HER AND WILL CURE YOU.

She says: "I wish to add my testimony to the many others who have spoken so highly as to the unfailing virtues of Burdock Blood Bitters. I was all run down, had no appetite, lost all ambition, could not sleep much and had terrible headache and backache, and my food did not digest properly. I saw B.B.B. advertised, so concluded to give it a trial, thinking if it did no good it could do no harm. But after using one bottle I began to feel better, and by the time I had used three bottles I was feeling like a new person. I am so glad there is such a remedy provided for suffering humanity, and cannot praise it enough for I think there is no medicine like it on the market."

Ill Effects of Indoor Life

Impure Air, Artificial Food, Lack of Exercise, Have Brought on Constipation, Clogging of the Kidneys and Liver Derangement.

The exceptional severity of the past winter is showing itself in the enormous death rates reported by the Boards of Health.

The extreme cold has necessitated indoor life. Rooms have been badly ventilated in the effort to keep them warm. Impure air and the use of artificial food have given rise to constipation, clogging of the kidneys, derangement of the liver, poisoning of the system and a complete upsetting of the organs of digestion.

As a result, many people are suffering from backaches, headaches, stomach troubles, biliousness and kidney pains who had previously considered themselves strong and healthy.

There are some reasons why Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are the most satisfactory treatment that you could possibly use under the circumstances.

They are wonderfully prompt to relieve pain and suffering, are thorough and far-reaching in action and lastingly beneficial, and because of their direct and continued action on the kidneys, liver and bowels, prove effective when ordinary medicine seems entirely useless.

By making these filtering and excretory organs active and vigorous Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills quickly eliminate from the blood and system generally the poisonous waste matter which causes pains and aches and gives rise to the most dreaded and most fatal of diseases.

MR. SPARLING

Mr. Samuel Sparling, Ladysmith, Pontiac Co., Que. writes: "I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and believe there is no medicine to equal them. I was troubled for years with kidney disease and this treatment has cured me. When I began to use these pills I could only walk from my bed to a chair. Now I can go to the field and work like any man. They are an excellent medicine.

"Dr. Chase's Ointment is a perfect cure for itching piles. One box cured two members of my family who had suffered from this wretched ailment for four years."

Mrs. James Griffiths, Geneva St. South, St. Catharines, writes: "It gives me great pleasure to speak in commendation of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. For some years prior to the spring of 1900 I was afflicted with serious derangements of the digestive functions, and liver and kidney disorders. I tried many remedies, without the desired results, until I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. After taking a few boxes of this medicine, I was again enjoying all my former health and vigor, and, in fact, feeling better than for ten years. Other members of our family have also received the best results from the use of this medicine, and I shall always consider myself under lasting obligation to Dr. Chase for what it has done for me and mine."

Beginnings of Forests.

Guelph, April 15.—The O. A. C. is branching out. C. A. Zavitz has been appointed to look after a plot of land which has been set apart for forestry near the Macdonald Institute building. Some 30,000 seedlings will be planted, principally Norway spruce, white pine, white ash, basswood and sugar maple. These young trees will be ready for distribution among the farmers in the spring of 1905 and 1906.

A Good Word for Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"In December, 1900, I had a severe cold and was so hoarse that I could not speak above a whisper," says Allan Davis of Freestone, N. Y. "I tried several remedies but got no relief until I used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, one bottle of which cured me. I will always speak a good word for that medicine." For sale by all druggists.

BY MARY J. HOLMES.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

When Wilford left Katy so abruptly, he had no definite purpose in his mind. Like most angry people, he forgot wherein he had been in fault, but charged it all to Katy as he went down Broadway that spring morning, finding on his table a letter from an old classmate, who was then in Washington getting up a company, and who wrote urging his friend to join him at once, and offering him the rank of First Lieutenant. Here was a temptation—here an opportunity to revenge himself on Katy, against whom he wrote a sad list of errors, making it sadder by brooding over and magnifying it until he reached a point from which he would not swerve.

"I shall do it," he said, and his lips were pressed firmly together, as in his private office he sat revolving the past, and then turning to the future, opening so darkly before him, and making him shudder as he thought of what it might bring. "I will spare Katy as much as possible," he said, "for hers is a different nature from Genevra's. She cannot bear as well," and a bitter groan broke the silence of the room as Katy came up before him just as she had looked that very morning standing by the window, with tears in her eyes, and a wistful, sorry look on her white face.

But Wilford was not one to retract when a decision was reached, and so he arranged his business matters as well as his limited time would allow; then, after the brief note to his father, wrote the letter to Katy, and then followed to the Jersey ferry a regiment of soldiers who were going on to Washington that night. Four days more and Lieutenant Wilford Cameron, with no regret as yet for the past, marched away to swell the ranks of men, who, led by General McClellan, were pressing on, as they believed, to Richmond and victory. A week of terrible suspense went by, and then there came a letter to Mr. Cameron from his son, requesting him to care for Katy, but asking no forgiveness for himself. There were no apologies, no explanations, no kind words for Katy, whose eyes moved slowly over the short letter, and then were lifted sadly to her father's face as she said:

"I will write to him myself, and on his answer will depend my future course."

Meanwhile at Silverton there was much anxiety for Katy, and many doubts expressed lest something was wrong. That Wilford should go away so suddenly, when he had never been noted for any very great amount of patriotism, seemed strange and Uncle Ephraim at last made up his mind to the herculean task of going to New York to see what was the matter.

Presuming upon her experience as a traveler, Aunt Betsy had proffered sundry pieces of advice with reference to what it was best for him to do on the road, telling him which side of the car to sit, where to get out, and above all things not to shake hands with the conductor when asked for his ticket.

Uncle Ephraim heard her good-humoredly, and stuffing into his pocket the paper of ginger-snaps, fried cakes and cheese, which Aunt Hannah had prepared for his lunch, he started for the cars, and was soon on his way to New York.

In his case there was no Bob Reynolds to offer aid and comfort, and the old man was nearly torn in pieces by the hackmen, who, the moment he appeared to view, pounced upon him as lawful prey, each claiming the honor of taking him wherever he wished to go, and raising such a din he turned away thoroughly disgusted, telling them—

"He had feet and legs, and common sense, and he guessed he could find his way without 'em. Bleeged to you, gentlemen, but I don't need you," and with a profound bow the honest looking old deacon walked away, asking the first man he met the way to Madison Square, and succeeding in finding the number without difficulty.

With a scream of joy Katy threw herself into Uncle Ephraim's arms, and then led him to her own room, while the first tears she had shed since she knew she was deserted rained in torrents over her face.

"What is it, Katy-did? I mistrusted something was wrong. What has happened?" Uncle Ephraim asked; and with his arm around her, Katy told him what had happened, and asked what she should do.

"Do?" the old man repeated. "Go home with me to your own folks until he comes from the wars. He is your husband, and I shall say nothing agin him; but if it was to go over I would forbid the banns. That chap has misused you the wust way. You need not deny it, for it's writ all over your face."

Mr. Cameron knew that Katy would be happier at Silverton, and he finally consented to her going, and placed at her disposal a sum which seemed to the deacon a little fortune in itself.

To Mrs. Cameron and Juno it was a relief to have Katy taken from their hands, and though they made a show of opposition, they were easily quieted, and helped her off with alacrity, the mother promising to see that the house was properly cared for, and Juno offering to send the latest fashions which might be suitable, as soon as they appeared. Bell was heartily sorry to part with the young sister, who seemed going from her forever.

"I know you will never come back. Something tells me so," she said, as she stood with her arms around Katy's waist, and her lips occasionally touching Katy's forehead. "But I shall see you," she continued; "I am coming to the farm-house in the summer, and you may say to Aunt Betsy that I like her ever so much, and ——" Bell glanced behind her to see that no one was listening, and then continued: "tell her a certain officer was sick a few days in a hospital last winter, and one of his men brought to him a dish of the most delicious dried peaches he ever ate. That man was from Silverton, and the fruit was sent to him, he said, in a salt bag, by a nice old lady, for whose brother he used to work. Just to think that the peaches I helped to pare, coloring my hands so that the stain did not come off in a month, should have gone so straight to Bob!" and Bell's fine features shone with a light which would have told Bob Reynolds he was beloved, if the lips did refuse to confess it.

"I'll tell her," Katy said, and then bidding them all good-bye, and putting her hand on Uncle Ephraim's arm, she went with him from the home where she had lived but two years, and those the saddest, most eventful ones of her short life

CHAPTER XL.

There was much talk in Silverton when it was known that Katy had come to stay until her husband returned from the war, and at first the people watched her curiously as she came among them again, so quiet, so subdued, so unlike the Katy of old that they would have hardly recognized her but for the beauty of her face and the sunny smile she gave to all, and which rested oftenest on the poor and suffering, who blessed her as the angel of their humble homes, praying that God would remember her for all she was to them. Wilford had censured her at first for going to Silverton, when he preferred she should stay in New York, hinting darkly at the reason of her choice, and saying to her once, when she told him how the Sunday before her twenty-first birthday she had knelt before the altar and taken upon herself the vows of confirmation, "Your saintly cousin is, of course, delighted, and that I suppose is sufficient, without my congratulations."

Perhaps he did not mean it, but he seemed to take delight in teasing her and Katy sometimes felt she should be happier without his letters than with them. He never said he was sorry he had left her so suddenly—indeed he seldom referred to the past in any way; or if he did, it was in a manner which showed that he thought himself the injured party, if either.

Katy did not often go to Linwood, and seldom saw Morris alone. After what had passed, she thought it better to avoid him as much as possible, and was glad when early in June he accepted a situation offered him as surgeon in a Georgetown hospital, and left Silverton for his new field of labor.

True to her promise, Bell came the last of July to Silverton, proving herself a dreadful romp, as she climbed over the rocks in Aunt Betsy's famous sheep-pasture, or raked the hay in the meadow, and proving herself, too, a genuine woman, as with blanched cheek and anxious heart she waited for tidings from the battles before Richmond, where the tide of success seemed to turn, and the North, hitherto so jubilant and hopeful, wore weeds of mourning from Maine to Oregon. Lieut. Bob was there, and Wilford, too; and so was Captain Ray, digging in the marshy swamps, where death floated up in poisonous exhalations—plodding on the weary march, and fighting all through the seven days, where the sun poured down its burning heat and the night brought little rest. No wonder, then, that three pairs of eyes grew dim with watching the daily papers. But the names of neither Wilford, Mark, nor Bob were ever found among the wounded, dead, or missing, and with the fall of the first autumn leaf Bell returned to the city more puzzled, more perplexed than ever with regard to Helen Lenhox's real feelings toward Captain Ray.

The week before Christmas, Mark came home for a few days, looking bronzed from exposure and hardship, but wearing a disappointed, listless look which Bell was quick to detect, connecting it in some way with Helen Lennox. Only once did he call at Mrs. Cameron's, and then as Juno was out Bell had him to herself, talking of Silverton, of Helen and Katy, in the latter of whom he seemed far more interested than her sister. Many questions he asked concerning Katy, expressing his regret that Wilford had left her, and saying he believed Wilford was sorry, too. He was in the hospital now, with a severe cold and a touch of the rheumatism, he said; but as Bell knew this already she did not dwell long upon that subject, choosing rather to talk of Helen, who, she said, was "as much interested in the soldiers, as if she had a brother or a lover in the army," and her bright eyes glanced meaningly at Mark, who answered carelessly:

"Dr. Grant is there, that may account for interest."

Mark knew he must say something to ward off Bell's attacks, and he continued talking of Dr. Grant and how much he was liked by the poor wretches who needed some one like him to keep them from dying of homesickness if nothing else; then, after a few bantering words concerning Lieutenant Bob and the picture he carried into every battle, buttoned closely over his heart, Mark Ray took his leave, while Bell ran up to her mother's room as a seamstress was occupying her own. Mrs. Cameron was out that afternoon, and that she had dressed in a hurry was indicated by the unusual confusion of her room. Drawers were left open and various articles scattered about, while on the floor, just as it had fallen from a glove-box, lay a letter which Bell picked up, intending to replace it.

"Miss Helen Lennox," she read in astonishment. "How came Helen Lennox's letter here, and from Mark Ray, too," she continued, still more amazed as she took the neatly folded note from the envelope and glanced at the name. "Foul play somewhere. Can it be mother?" she asked, as she read enough to know that she held in her hand Mark's offer of marriage, which had in some mysterious manner found its way to her mother's room. "I don't understand it," she said, racking her brain for a solution of the mystery. "But I'll send it to Helen this very day, and to-morrow I'll tell Mark Ray."

Procrastination was not one of Bell Cameron's faults, and for full half an hour before her mother and Juno came home, the stolen letter had been lying in the mail box where Bell herself deposited it, together with a few hurriedly written lines, telling how it came into her hands, but offering no explanation of any kind.

"Mark is home now on a leave of absence which expires day after to-morrow," she wrote, "I am going round to see him, and if you do not hear from him in person I am greatly mistaken."

The next day a series of hindrances kept Bell from making her call as early as she had intended, so that Mrs. Banker and Mark were just rising from dinner, when told she was in the parlor.

"I meant to have come before," she said, seating herself by Mark, "but I could not get away. I have brought you some good news. I think—that is—yes, I know there has been some mistake, something wrong somewhere. Mark Ray, yesterday afternoon I found—no matter where or how—a letter intended for Helen Lennox, which I am positive she never saw or heard of; at least her denial to me that a certain Mark Ray had ever offered himself is a proof that she never saw what was an offer made just before you went away. I read enough to know that, and then I took the letter and——"

She hesitated, while Mark's eyes turned dark with excitement, and even Mrs. Banker, scarcely less interested, leaned eagerly forward, saying:

"And what? Go on, Miss Cameron. What did you do with that letter?"

"I sent it to the rightful owner, Helen Lennox. I posted it myself. But why don't you thank me, Captain Ray?" she asked, as Mark's face was overshadowed with anxiety.

"I was wondering whether it were well to send it—wondering how it might be received," he said, and Bell replied:

"She will not answer no. As one woman knows another, I know Helen Lennox. I have sounded her on that point. I told her of the rumor there was afloat, and she denied it, seeming greatly distressed, but showing plainly that had such offer been received she would not have refused it. You should have seen her last summer, Captain Ray, when we waited so anxiously for news from Potomac. Her face was a study as her eyes ran over the list of casualties, searching not for her amiable brother-in-law, nor yet for Willard Braxton, their hired man. It was plain to me as daylight, and all you have to do is to follow up the letter with another, or go yourself, if you have time." Bell said, as she rose to go, leaving Mark in a state of bewilderment as to what he had heard

Who withheld that letter? and why? were questions which troubled him greatly, nor did his mother's assurance that it did not matter so long as it all came right at last, tend wholly to reassure him. One thing, however, was certain. He would see Helen before he returned to his regiment. He would telegraph in the morning to Washington, and then run the risk of being a day behind the time appointed for his return to duty.

"Suppose you have three children when I return, instead of two, is there room in your heart for the third?" he asked his mother when next morning he was about starting for Silverton.

"Yes, always room for Helen," was the reply, as with a kiss of benediction Mrs. Banker sent her boy away.

CURES BACKACHE NERVOUSNESS HEADACHE AND FEMALE WEAKNESS

WHY

Droop with Dyspepsia?

She was a beauty until irregularities peculiar to her sex brought on that dread dyspepsia and general misery.

But there is certainty of cure for her.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN NERVINE WILL FIRST FEED

Her SHATTERED NERVES; then strengthened by it they will put every vital organ to work vigorously. The liver will do its share, the heart will have blood to pump, the nerves will be quiet. The woman will be beautiful again.

Mrs. James Edge, Post-Mistress of Edge Hill, Ont., writes:

"I have had indigestion and dyspepsia for nearly ten years. At times I could eat nothing. After taking two bottles of South American Nervine I was entirely well and again in perfect health."

The Great South American Kidney Cure dissolves and washes out waste matter at once from kidneys and bladder, and simultaneously begins the building up of new tissues. Relief in six hours.

We Offer $1,000

For a Disease Germ That Liquozone Can't Kill

On every bottle of Liquozone we publish an offer of $1,000 for a disease germ that it cannot kill. We do that to convince you that Liquozone does as we claim.

Please note what that means. Any drug that kills germs is a poison, and it cannot be taken internally. Medicine is, therefore, almost helpless in any germ disease. Liquozone alone can kill germs in the body without killing the tissues, too.

Acts Like Oxygen

Liquozone is the result of a process which, for more than 20 years, has been the constant study of scientific and chemical research. Its virtues are derived solely from gas, made in large part from the best oxygen producers. By a process requiring immense apparatus and 14 days' time, these gases are made part of the liquid product.

The result is a product that does what oxygen does. Oxygen gas, as you know, is the very source of vitality, the most essential element of life. Liquozone is a vitalizing tonic with which no other known product can compare. But germs are vegetables; and Liquozone, which—like oxygen—is life to an animal, is deadly to vegetal matter.

We Paid $100,000

For the American rights to Liquozone—the highest price ever paid for similar rights on any scientific discovery. We did this after testing the product for two years, through physicians and hospitals, in this country and others.

That price was paid because Liquozone does what all the skill in the world cannot do without it. It does in germ diseases that which is impossible with drugs. It carries into the blood a harmless yet powerful germicide, to destroy at once and forever the cause of any germ disease. And no man knows another way to do it.

Liquozone is new in America, and millions who need it don't know of it. For that reason we are spending $500,000 to give the first bottle free to each of a million sick ones.

Germ Diseases

These are the known germ diseases. All that medicine can do for these troubles is to help Nature overcome the germs, and such results are indirect and uncertain. Liquozone kills the germs, wherever they are, and the results are inevitable. By destroying the cause of the trouble, it invariably ends the disease, and forever,

BASEBALL.

The teachers of the north ward, south ward, west ward and fifth ward schools intend to form a league amongst their senior pupils. Mr. Kelley called a meeting on April 14th to appoint the officers of his team. These teams are not expected to play just to see who will win but it is suggested that there be something to play for. There will be a meeting held later on to fix the dates on which the teams shall play. The officers of the fifth ward team are: President, Mr. Kelley; secretary, H. Faint; treasurer, N. Geale; executive committee, D. Gillespie, A. Coughlin, G. Quartermaine.

EARLS AND DIDN'T KNOW IT.

How the House of Courtenay Lost Title for 300 Years.

The death is announced at Powderham Castle, near Exeter, of the thirteenth Earl of Devon, in his ninety-third year. The late Earl, who was prebendary of Exeter Cathedral and rector of Powderham, succeeded his nephew in the Earldom in 1891.

The house of Courtenay, to which the Earl belonged, dates back to a very early period, and members of the family have for centuries been associated with the history of the country. The existing branch was founded by Sir Philip Courtenay of Powderham Castle, who received the honor of knighthood from Edward the Black Prince the day before the battle of Navaret in Spain.

One branch of the Courtenays were Counts of Odessa, and another became allied to the royal family of France. In England the Courtenays have been allied to the Bonvilles, Bohuns, Spencers, St. Johns, Talbots, Veres and royal house of Plantagenet.

With the city of Exeter the family has always been closely associated, and in olden times there were stout struggles for privileges between the Earls of Devon and the Mayors of the city.

Few, if any, titles in the peerage have been, for long periods of their history, involved in more mystery and doubt than that of the Earls of Devon.

For several hundreds of years the heads of the house of Courtenay were Earls without being aware of it. Indeed, so far were they from being acquainted with the dignity that should have been theirs that they accepted baronetcies and viscounties, and were proud to hold them.

After three centuries had passed, however, an astute lawyer discovered the patent among some old records, and found that there were two missing words, 'de corpore,' usually inserted in patents.

The discovery meant that the Earldom could be inherited by collateral heirs, and a Courtenay in 1831, after a hard fight, established his right to sit among his peers. The peerage he recovered was the one created by Queen Mary.

Five times the Earldom has been supposed to be extinct. Four of its holders have been attainted and four beheaded.

Queen Mary revived the Earldom in favor of Edward Courtenay, who, in the previous reign, when only twelve years of age, was committed prisoner to the Tower. He was released when only twenty-eight years old, and he died at Padua of poison. —London Express.

After Thirty Years Service.

General Sir John Dartnell, who has just retired from the command of the Natal Mounted Police after thirty years' service, distinguished himself in the early stages of the war in South Africa, when his knowledge of the country was of invaluable service. He was with General Penn Symons when he fell at Talana Hill, and to his guidance General Yuly's column owed its safe arrival at Ladysmith. Among his other exploits he made a march of 120 miles in three and a half days without transport. Lord Roberts, in his report to the War Office, said that General Dartnell's "name stands very high in the estimation of the colonists, and he possesses the greatest influence over the natives. His advice was of much assistance in the earliest actions of the war, afterwards during the siege of Ladysmith, and finally in the general advance through the Biggarsberg to Laing's Nek, when Natal was cleared of the enemies of the Queen." General Dartnell was born at London, Ontario, in 1838, and entered the army in 1855. He was severely wounded while serving with the Central Indian Field Force in 1857, and received the brevet of Major. He had plenty of South African experience, in the Zulu war of 1879, the Basuto war of 1880, and the Boer war of 1881, before the recent struggle.—London Star.

A STOLEN DOCUMENT

Mr. Borden Called Upon For An Explanation Thereanent.

MR. BLAIR'S MEMORANDUM

View of Sir Wilfrid Laurier—"Nobody Supposed Mr. Borden Had Stolen It; But Somebody Stole It"—Mr. Borden's Duty Is to Tell Where He Got It—Railway Debate.

Ottawa, April 16.—It was not to be expected that the last word had been said on the confidential document stolen from Mr. Blair, and it furnished fuel yesterday for furious flames of party feeling. Mr. Borden, goaded by Mr Cowan's direct accusation, made a personal explanation, in which he acknowledged having received the document, but said it was handed to him by a gentleman not in the employ of the Government.

Mr. Borden's Complaint.

The leader of the Opposition complained that Mr M. K. Cowan has misquoted him. It was true the unrevised Hansard made him say, when speaking on April 5th, that Mr. Blair had published a private and confidential memorandum to the Privy Council. This, Mr. Borden said, he believed to be a clerical error of Hansard, and as soon as he saw it he corrected it. In spite of the fact that the revised edition had been in the hands of members for some time, Mr Cowan had quoted from the unrevised version and had attributed to him a disposition not justified by the facts. So far as the charge by Mr. Cowan against a large body of civil servants in the country, that the document was stolen, was concerned, Mr. Borden characterized the statement as absolutely untrue, so far as his knowledge and belief was concerned. He had never had any communication with any civil servant of the Government, either directly or indirectly with regard to any confidential business of the Government, and had never been approached by any civil servant. Neither had he obtained the document wrongly, as charged by Mr. Cowan, but he received if from a gentleman not in the confidence or employ of the Government, who gave it to him without any solicitation on his part, without any knowledge on his part that it existed, and without any restriction whatever as to the use which should be made of it. Further, Mr. Borden said, he did not look at it for some hours after it was placed in his hands. In reference to the report of the proceedings at the recent Grand Trunk Railway meeting, which had been quoted, the leader of the Opposition asserted that he had handed it to Mr. Osler, who was not in any way responsible for it, in order to get it printed at Toronto. He had received it as a verbatim report of the meeting, and if it was shown that it was not an accurate report he was prepared to apologize to the House. He had before using taken the precaution to verify every quotation he had made from that report by the published reports of the proceedings Therefore he regarded the remarks of Mr. Cowan on these matters as absolutely and entirely uncalled for.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Reply.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, although Mr. Borden had not moved the adjournment, said he could not allow the observations of Mr. Borden to pass without comment. The Premier pointed out that Mr. Borden might, in the heat of debate, have stated that Mr. Blair had published the memorandum from which he had quoted, but Mr. Borden had the right to say that he had not uttered the objectionable words, although the fact that they appeared in the unrevised Hansard would lead to the belief that they had actually been used. Incidentally Sir Wilfrid testified to the efficiency under trying circumstances of the Hansard staff. But in that very speech Mr. Borden himself had quoted from a private report of a meeting of the Grand Trunk Railway shareholders, which neither Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson nor Mr. Hays, nor anyone else who was there reported, had an opportunity to revise. Therefore the leader of the Opposition had laid himself open to the very charge he brought against Mr. Cowan. Mr. Borden had denied that the memorandum by Hon. Mr. Blair had been published by that gentleman. Yet it was in Mr. Borden's hands. How did it come into his hands? Nobody supposed he had stolen it; possibly the gentleman from whom he received it did not steal it; but somebody stole it. It was evident it did not get into the hands of the public without the violation of the law in some way. No member of the Privy Council would violate his oath by giving out a confidential communication presented by a member of the Privy Council to the Privy Council, as it was understood the document in question was. Mr. Borden had not explained how it came into his hands. He had introduced into the debates of the House, for a party purpose, a purloined document; he must have read the document, and must have seen that it was marked "secret and confidential." At all events, he had used a document as to the origin of which he could not answer in a satisfactory manner to the House.

Mr. Borden, who claimed the right to make a further personal explanation, insisted that he did not regard the statement of a public man in regard to a public question as confidential. It was not a matter of policy, but merely Mr. Blair's private opinion.

The motion to adjourn was declared lost, and the House settled down to the business of the day—the debate on the Grand Trunk Pacific resolution.

Domville Wants Committee.

Ottawa, April 16.—Senator Domville moved for a committee to be appointed to inquire into the position of the Mutual Reserve Life Association in the Senate yesterday.

Senator Scott said this Government proposed to introduce certain amendments to the insurance act, and suggested that it would be better to wait until the terms of these amendments were known.

Senator Domville replied that he was glad to hear the act was to be amended. He had made up his mind, however, to show up this company. Why they even had men from New York in Ottawa to tell the Senate of Canada what they should and should not do. He would postpone his motion until Tuesday, but no longer.

CUTICURA SOAP

The World's Greatest Skin Soap.

The World's Sweetest Toilet Soap.

Sale Greater than the World's Product of Other Skin Soaps.

Sold Wherever Civilization Has Penetrated.

Millions of the world's best people use Cuticura Soap, assisted by Cuticura Ointment, the great skin cure, for preserving, purifying and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening and soothing red, rough and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings and chafings, for annoying irritations, or too free or offensive perspiration, for ulcerative weaknesses, and many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, especially mothers, as well as for all the purposes of the toilet, bath and nursery.

Cuticura Soap combines delicate emollient properties derived from Cuticura, the great skin cure, with the purest of cleansing ingredients and the most refreshing of flower odours. No other medicated soap ever compounded is to be compared with it for preserving, purifying and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair and hands. No other foreign or domestic toilet soap, however expensive, is to be compared with it for all the purposes of the toilet, bath and nursery. Thus it combines in one soap at one price the most effective skin and complexion soap, and the purest and sweetest toilet, bath and nursery soap.

Cuticura Resolvent, Liquid and in the form of Chocolate Coated Pills, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Soap are sold throughout the world. Depots: London, 27 Charterhouse Sq.; Paris, 5 Rue de la Paix; Australia, R. Towns & Co., Sydney; Boston, 137 Columbus Ave. Potter Drug & Chemical Corp., Sole Proprietors.

WHERE PARLIAMENT FIRST MET.

Facts That Illuminate a Question Perhaps Never to Be Solved.

It is one of the vexed questions not yet settled, perhaps never to be settled, where the first Parliament of Upper Canada met, each contestant scouting the statement of his opponent, writes Janet Carnochan in The Globe. The individual possessed of discretion meekly says when asked, "I do not know," but others not so wise are sure. Several places have been mentioned—Navy Hall, Indian Council House, Government House, Parliament Oak, and even Fort Niagara. Now, as Parliament met in Newark five years, 1792, 1793, 1794, 1795 and 1796, it is possible it may have met in each and all of those places. Many libraries have been visited and many books of travel consulted, the archives of Ottawa, the Educational, Parliamentary, Military and city library of Toronto, to obtain the following facts:

In 1787 there were four buildings at King's Wharf, West Niagara, called Navy Hall, used for naval stores and by naval officers. On the arrival of Governor Simcoe, in 1792, one of these were cleared out, repaired and put in order for the residence of the Governor. Mrs. Simcoe's diary, 26th July, 1792, mentions that "These buildings are undergoing repairs for our residence, but are still so unfinished that the Governor has ordered three marquees to be pitched on the hill above the house," and we have in the public accounts the full bill of expenses given. Col. Clarke's diary, in possession of his son, Dr. Clarke of St. Catharines, says: "The first Parliament met in the Council chamber between Butler's Barracks and Navy Hall." This is the building burned down some years ago, the Military Hospital, formerly the Indian Council House. Whether there is any truth in the story of the Parliament Oak or not, or whether it is a myth (but these generally have some foundation), an explanation may be given thus: When on the warm September day the room was found oppressive the members adjourned to the open air, and as the town itself was then a plain and none of the beautiful trees now seen in every direction was to be seen (on the map of 1835 the oak grove is called Young Oak), perhaps the only large tree near was the oak tree lately destroyed, and our early legislators walked across the space between to take shelter in its shade. The Government House was not built for some time. The Duke of Rochefoucault de Laincourt, who visited Simcoe for eighteen days in 1795, describes his residence as a miserable low building. In Miss Simcoe's picture, drawn from the entrance to the river, there are seen four small buildings at King's Wharf. Some assert that the long low building, now in ruins, cannot be Navy Hall, or part of Navy Hall, but much evidence can be adduced in favor of the statement. In a map of 1818, copied from the archives at Ottawa, there is one long, low building slanting to the water, marked Navy Hall. In the map of 1835 the same building is also marked Navy Hall. In the Harbor & Dock Co.'s map of 1831 the same is seen. In 1853 this building is marked Red Barracks, as it had been used for troops; the two doors have yet the words "28 men" on them. The same building now stands in Fort George enclosure, partly turned round with front to the water instead of the end, which is thus explained: About 1862 the late W. A. Thomson made a cutting to have the trains enter on the other side of the present wharf instead of going through the town, and as thus cutting would run almost through Navy Hall he obtained permission to move the building back, which was carefully done. To the statement that every building was burned on 13th December, 1813, we reply that the American troops left in such haste that though the town was burned very effectually, the soldiers' tents were left standing and cannon, etc., at Fort George. We do not assert that the building was the residence of Gov. Simcoe, or that the Parliament first met here, but that it is one of the four buildings forming Navy Hall, and that it may be the very one in which so many important events took place. The testimony of many old residents points in this direction. Old Mrs. Quade, daughter of Dominic Henry, the lighthouse-keeper, who was born here in 1804, and present at the burning of the town, always said to her children when visiting the old home, landing at the ferry and passing Navy Hall: "There is the old Parliament." Others always called it old Navy Hall. The tavern near was called in advertisements of 1830 Navy Hall tavern. Rev. Mr. McEwan, born here in 1809, spoke of both it and the Indian Council House as the places where the early legislators met.

However, it is certain that it is an historic building, and the Ontario Historical Society lately appointed a committee to send a request to the Dominion Government that all these historic spots be put in the hands of the Niagara Falls Park Commissioners, as has been done with Queenston Heights and Fort Erie with such good effect. We surely should unite to preserve what is left of historic value.

A Lake Postoffice.

Here is an item that is on its rounds in the American press just now: In Lake Wabigoon, Ontario, at a point where the water is not very deep, a strong wooden stake has been driven into the ground. On the top a box has been securely fastened, and there you have the Lake Wabigoon postoffice. The little steamer from Rat Portage drops the mail here on its outward voyage, and a canoe goes out from the shore and collects it, depositing the outgoing mail at the same time, which is picked up by the steamer on its return trip to Rat Portage next day.

The Word Japan.

The word "Japan" comes from the Portuguese pronunciation of the Japanese characters "Ni Hon," meaning "Land of the Rising Sun."

JAPANESE MINE DID THE TRICK.

Admiral Togo Tells the Story of the 12th-13th April.

FATE OF THE PETROPAVLOVSK

Japanese Admiral Says None of His Ships were Hurt nor was a Single Japanese Wounded in the Perilous Work Assigned Them—Signalman Tells Graphic Story of Makaroff's Death.

Washington, D. C., April 18.—The Japanese Legation Saturday received the following cablegram, dated Tokio, April 16:

"Admiral Togo reports that the combined fleet, as previously planned, commenced on April 11 the eighth attack on Port Arthur.

"The fourth and fifth destroyer flotillas and the fourteenth torpedo flotilla and the Keryo Maru reached the mouth of Port Arthur at midnight of the 12th and effected the laying of mines at several points outside of the port, defying the enemy's searchlight.

"The second destroyer flotilla discovered at dawn of the 13th one Russian destroyer trying to enter the harbor, and after ten minutes' attack, sunk her.

"Another Russian destroyer was discovered coming from the direction of Liaoshan and was attacked, but she managed to flee into the harbor.

"On our side there were no casualties, except two seamen of the Ikazuchi were slightly wounded. There was no time to rescue the enemy's drowning, as the Bayan approached.

"The third fleet reached outside of Port Arthur at 8 a. m., when the Bayan came out and opened fire.

An Offensive Movement.

"Immediately afterward the Novik, the Askold, the Petropavlovsk, the Pobieda and the Poltava came out and made an offensive attack. Our third fleet, hardly answering and gradually retiring, enticed the enemy within fifteen miles southeast of the port, when our first fleet, informed through wireless telegraphy from the third fleet, suddenly appeared before the enemy and attacked them.

"While the enemy was trying to regain the port a battleship of the Petropavlovsk type struck mines laid by us on the previous evening and sank at twenty-eight minutes to 11 a.m.

"Although another ship was observed to have lost freedom of movement, the confusion of the enemy's ships prevented us from identifying her. They finally managed to regain the port.

"Our third fleet suffered no damage and the enemy's damage, besides above mentioned, is probably slight also. Our first fleet did not reach firing distance.

"Our fleets retired at 1 p.m., prepared for another attack. They resailed on April 14 toward Port Arthur; the fourth and the fifth destroyer flotilla and the ninth torpedo flotilla also joined, at 3 a. m. and 7 a.m. No enemy's ships was found outside of the port.

Destroyed Enemy's Mines.

"Our first fleet arrived at the port at 9 a.m. and discovered three mines laid by the enemy and destroyed all. The Kasuga and Nisshin were despatched to the west of Liaoshan and made indirect bombardment for two hours, it being their first action. The new forts on Liaoshan finally silenced, our forces retired at half-past one a.m."

In concluding his report Admiral Togo says: "The fact that not a single man was injured in these successive attacks, must be attributed to His Majesty's glorious virture. The officers and men proved gallant and did their utmost in the discharge of their duties, despite many things that seemed to be beyond human control. The ships freely moving over the enemy's ground without suffering any damage, must be attributed to heavenly assistance."

How Petropavlovsk Went Up.

Liaoyang, April 18.—The Associated Press correspondent yesterday says of the fight of the 12th inst., after describing the preliminaries:

Vice-Admiral Makaroff was evidently unwilling to risk his vulnerable craft to heavy projectiles. I watched the Petropavlovsk closely as she steamed toward Electric Cliff.

All was quiet. It was the hush before a battle. I looked. Japanese ships. But they were without movement, save that caused by the heaving sea.

My glance returned to our squadron. The Petropavlovsk was almost without headway when suddenly I saw her tremble. She seemed to rise out of the water, a tremendous explosion rent the air; then, a second, and then a third.

Fragments flew in all directions, and wreckage and men were mixed up in a terrible mass. I was hardly able to realize the horror of it when the ship began to list.

In a moment the sea seemed to open and the water rushed over her. The Petropavlovsk had disappeared.

The floating woodwork and the few men struggling in the water were all that was left to recall the splendid fighting machine which a few hours before had sailed out of the harbor.

Makaroff Bathed in Blood.

Signalman Perchfiok, after telling of the blowing up, says:

"On the bridge I saw an officer weltering in blood; he was our Admiral, Makaroff. He lay face downward. I sprang to him grasped him by the shoulder and attempted to raise him.

"The ship seemed to be falling somewhere. From all sides flew fragments. I heard the deafening screech and the frightful din. The smoke rose in dense clouds and the flames seemed to leap towards the bridge, where I was standing beside the Admiral. I jumped on the rail and was washed off, but succeeded in grabbing something. On our ship was an old man with a beautiful white beard, who had been good to our men. He had a book in his hand and seemed to be writing, perhaps sketching. He was Verestchagin, the painter."

Congratulate Victor.

Tokio, April 18.—Vice-Admiral Yamomoto, Minister of Marine, yesterday sent the following congratulatory message to Vice-Admiral Togo: "I am delighted at the success of the eighth attack on Port Arthur. The result was splendid, and while it was attributable to the Emperor's illustrious virture, the loyal and gallant actions of officers and men played a conspicuous part. Their behaviour leaves nothing to regret.

"Tender my congratulations to your officers and men. I hope the same noble discharge of duties will be continued while the present great national problem lies before us. The goal is yet distant. Take the best care of yourselves, that all may be enabled to finish the great work expected."

Regret Makaroff's Death.

Expressions of regret at the death of Vice-Admiral Makaroff are general here. Speaking for the naval staff, Commander Ogasawara has published a lengthy statement in which he laments the death of the Russian vice-admiral and pronounces it to be a loss to the navies of the world. Commander Ogasawara reviews the life, professional career and the personal attributes of Vice-Admiral Makaroff and declares that he is entitled to be classed with the best admirals in the world.

The Japanese report that the wreck of the Petropavlovsk lies southeast of Golden Hill, one mile outside of the entrance to the harbor.

Russian Confirms Togo.

St. Petersburg, April 18.—The claim of Vice-Admiral Togo, commander-in-chief of the Japanese standing squadron, that he sank mines off Port Arthur elecited an authoritative statement that not a single Japanese torpedo boat approached the entrance to Port Arthur at that time. But the informant of the Associated Press, who is in a position to have access to all official reports, admits he can explain the Petropavlovsk explosion. An admiral has given a version of the affair, confirming that of Vice-Admiral Togo.

Russia Sends Submarines.

Baron Schilling, the torpedo expert, has gone to Vladivostock to take charge of two submarine boats there. Other submarines are going out in sections.

Fresh Bombardment.

Port Arthur, April 18.—In a fresh bombardment of Port Arthur on April 15, the Japanese disposed their ships in a semi-circle about the port. Five were directly in front of the entrance to the harbor, three others, including the armored cruiser Kasaga, took up positions off Liaoshan, with the remainder to the left of the first column. Active operations were conducted only by two groups of Japanese ships. The Russian ships answered the high fire of the enemy into the harbor, directing their aim, according to the indications whence the Japanese shots were fired. Many eye-witnesses of the engagement confirm the report that one Japanese cruiser was struck by two well-aimed shots.

It is declared here that one Japanese torpedo boat was sunk in this engagement, but this statement lacks confirmation.

Since the bombardment of Friday, all has been quiet here. Viceroy Alexieff has hoisted his flag on the Sebastopol.

Sir Thomas Home.

Montreal, April 18.—Sir Thomas Shaughnessy reached home yesterday from a five weeks' trip to England. Sir Thomas denied that his visit to the other side had anything to do with either the company's Atlantic or Pacific fleets.

Japan Has Gold to Burn.

Paris, April 18.—The Tokio correspondent of The Matin telegraphs that the gold reserve in the Japanese bank there is $15,000,000, and that $9,500,000 gold was sent to America during the month of March.

Quebec, April 18.—The French newspapers announce that there is a proposition under consideration to erect a monument at Quebec to commemorate the memory of the first Canadian farmer, Louis Hebert.

Special G. N. W. Despatches to the Examiner.

LANDING FRUSTRATED.

St. Petersburg, April 18.—An attempted landing by the Japanese troops on the shores of Corea Bay between Port Arthur and Yalu River was frustrated by the Russians. A Japanese boat flotilla scouted the shores of the bay, but was received with such a heavy fire from land batteries at Taku Shan, Ching Tai Tse, Tehanbe, and Pai-lieno, that it retired. Vice-Admiral Togo's flagship then recalled nine transports which were on the way to land troops. A squadron of ten warships protecting the transports then withdrew with them. The Russians have 20,000 troops concentrated at Taku Shan. A force landing between Taku Shan and Ching Tai Tse would have been in a position to isolate the defenders of Port Arthur and cut the line of communication. Taku Shan is in Manchuria, about fifty miles to the westward of the Estuary of the Yalu River and Ching Tai Tse is about twenty-five miles west of Taku Shan, or about one hundred and fifty miles from Port Arthur. The other towns mentioned are smaller places on the coast in this vicinity.

PORT ARTHER AGAIN BOMBARDED

Tien Tsin, April 18.—It is reported that the bombardment of Port Arthur was resumed to-day.

JAPS AT VLADIVOSTOCK.

London, April 18.—The Central News has a despatch from Rome stating that a telegram has been received there from Harbin Manchuria conveys the intelligence that a squadron of Japanese warships has arrived near Vladivostock. The commandant of the town is preparing to resist the attack of the squadron and the work of completing the fortifications is proceeding with feverish energy. The Post further learns that tuhe visit of Count Carl Mettermich, German ambassador to England, to Berlin, was of a diplomatic rather than of a recreative character.

ABOUT RULE BRITANNIA

STIRRING PATRIOTIC HYMN WHICH WE ALL LOVE.

Political Hymn of Britain So Long as She Retains Political Power—Reason of the Peculiar Satisfaction Which It Engenders in British Breasts—Authorship of the Song Is a Debatable Question.

Southey said that "Rule, Britannia" would be the political hymn of this country so long as she maintains her political power. Wagner, the great composer, declared that the whole character of the British nation is expressed in the opening strain of the tune, writes J. Cuthbert Hadden. Recent events—the war with the Boers—certainly tended to bring out that view, for the entire British nation seemed to find a peculiar satisfaction in proclaiming that Britons "never, never, never shall be slaves," and giving utterance to all the other grand sentiments which make our bosom swell with patriotic pride.

It is certainly a fine tune, this of "Rule, Britannia." It was made by the famous Dr. Arne, who set a great many fine songs in his day. Arne was a humorist as well as a composer. A couple of vocalists called on him one morning. They had been debating as to which was the best singer, and not being able to settle the question they resolved to appeal to Arne. When they had finished he turned to one and remarked: "Well, sir, you sing very badly." The other concluded that he had won the wager—for there was a bet in question—and he said so to Arne. "Nay," retorted Arne, "for while he sings badly, you can't sing at all." That was the man who wrote the tune of "Rule, Britannia." It is, however, like putting the cart before the horse to speak of the tune while as yet we have said nothing about the words.

Authorship Is Disputed.

Unfortunately, the authorship of "Rule, Britannia" is a debated question, and debated questions are hardly for discussion in a column like this. Still, we want to know what can be said for one claimant or another. Briefly, "Rule, Britannia" was written either by James Thomson, the poet of "The Seasons," or by David Mallet, a venal hack scribbler of the time, upon whom Dr. Johnson poured his contempt in his dictionary—of all places! Thomson and Mallet were both Scots, and Johnson hated Scots as the devil is said to hate holy water. Mallet's name (he was a Perthshire man) was originally Malloch; but when he went to London he found that the cockney difficulty with the guttural led to his being called Mallock, and as he did not like being called Mallock he changed his name to Mallet. It was this that gave Johnson his opportunity, and when he came to define the word "alias" he did it so: "Alias—A Latin word signifying 'otherwise;' as Mallet alias Malloch; that is, otherwise." Moore, the poet, declared that when Johnson defined "mallet" as "a thing with a wooden head," he had the Perthshire man in view, and I verily believe he had. Johnson was capable of anything when it came to dealing with natives of the northern half of the kingdom.

But to come more directly to our story. The difficulty in deciding between Thomson and Mallet lies in this, that "Rule, Britannia" first appeared as part of a work which they wrote together, and in which their respective shares are not indicated. The work in question was the masque of "Alfred," written in 1740 for an entertainment at Cliefden, which was meant to commemorate the accession of George I. and the birthday of the Princess Augusta. Thomson died eight years after this, and in the meantime nothing had been said about the authorship of the song. But "Rule, Britannia" had sprung into popularity—was, in fact, the one thing in the whole masque which had survived, and the suggestion of some is that Mallet obscured the issue and allowed it to be inferred that he, and not Thomson, had written the song.

Thomson was dead, and had left behind him no evidence one way or another. Mallet was thoroughly unscrupulous, and would not hesitate a moment about an imposture in which he was not likely to be detected. To give him his due, however, Mallet did not directly claim the authorship of "Rule, Britannia." True, he published the whole of "Alfred" in an edition of his works printed in 1759; but that has nothing to do with the question, since, even so, Mallet admitted (still without specifying respective shares) that "Alfred" contained work from Thomson's pen. Moreover, while Mallet was still living—in 1762—"Alfred," including "Rule, Britannia," as a matter of course, was also printed by Murdoch in his edition of Thomson.

Thus the matter, so far as "Rule, Britannia" is concerned, stood in 1762 exactly as it had stood in 1740. Thomson left the authorship in doubt—so did Mallet. Neither directly claimed the song, and although several of their contemporaries must have known the facts, they remained silent with the result that the authorship of one of our finest patriotic pieces remains among the list of controversial subjects.

Thomson Probable Author.

Personally, I am inclined to favor Thomson. Thomson was really a poet; Mallet was at best only a poetaster. The internal evidence is, I think, on the side of Thomson. Thomson frequently dealt with patriotic themes, witness his "Liberty" and "Britannia," two productions which, in spirit, very much resemble the celebrated ode. He was an enthusiastic advocate of liberty, making constant appeals to freedom and Great Britain, while he was also a warm admirer of heroes and legislators. There is not a single image or idea in "Rule Britannia" which does not occur, or recur, elsewhere in the general body of his poetry. Nothing like this can be said of Mallet. Still, it is dangerous arguing from internal evidences, and on the whole we must leave the question in what the poet describes as a state of "—— vacillating doubt." One thing is certain: "Rule, Britannia" was written by a Scot—an "unspeakable Scot," if you identify him with David Mallet. There [illegible] "unspeakable" about poor Jemmy Thomson unless it was his laziness. He used to lie in bed on winter days (sensible man!) and write with his hands through a couple of holes in the blankets; and everybody has heard of his eating the pears from the garden walls without taking his hands from his pockets.

Beg Ming of Popularity.

It was in 1715 that the general public first became acquainted with "Rule, Britannia." In the beginning of that year Dr. Arne altered "Alfred" into an opera, and had it performed at Drury Lane for the benefit of Mrs. Arne. The rebellion in the north was then exciting the public attention, and "Rule, Britannia" only required to be heard to be taken up at once. The air was adopted by Jacobites as well as Hanoverians, but of course the Jacobites parodied the words. Ritson mentions one Jacobite version which began:

Rise, Britannia! Britannia, rise and fight!
Restore your injured monarch's right.

A second version is included in "The True Loyalist; or Chevalier's Favorite." Here is the first verse:

Britannia rouse at Heaven's command!
And crown thy native Prince again;
Then Peace shall bless thy happy land,
And plenty pour in from the main;
Then shalt thou be—Britannia, thou shalt be—
From home and foreign tyrants free.

But "Rule, Britannia" did nothing for the Jacobites. An air like "The Marseillaise" might have, made all the difference at Culloden if the followers of Prince Charlie had come under such an intoxicating influence.

Sung in Church.

"Rule, Britannia," strange as it may seem to us now, was at one time sung in church, just as the air of "Robin Adair" was used as a hymn tune in the early years of the nineteenth century.

A Church of England clergyman, writing in 1831, remarks: "Nothing need be said of the impropriety of adopting such tunes as 'Rule, Britannia,' and 'Britons, Strike Home,' because, though they have worked their way into some dissenting places of worship, no instance has occurred of our churches" (i. e., the state churches) "being profaned by their introduction." It is ever the enthusiasts who, as Rowland Hill put it, object to the devil having all the best tunes!

Here is an extract from The Times of Oct. 3, 1798, when the news of Nelson's victory in the battle of the Nile reached England: "Drury Lane.—After the play, the news of Admiral Nelson's glorious victory produced a burst of patriotic exultation that has been rarely witnessed in a theatre. 'Rule, Britannia,' was unanimously called for from every part of the house, and the performers came forward and sang it, accompanied by the audience. It was called for, and sung a second time. The acclamations were the loudest and most fervent we ever witnessed." It must, indeed, have been a stirring scene!

Khedive's Financial Adviser.

Mr. Vincent Corbett, who has been appointed to succeed Sir Eldon Gorst as Financial Adviser to the Khedive, has for some time past been the British Commissioner on the Caisse of the Egyptian Public Debt. Mr. Corbett has spent twenty years in official positions. He was nominated an attache in 1881, and was appointed to the Embassy at Berlin in 1885. He was transferred to The Hague in 1887, and a year later was appointed to Rome. In 1891 Mr. Corbett was sent to Constantinople, where he was granted an allowance for his knowledge of Turkish. He later filled positions at the Embassies at Copenhagen and Athens, at both of which places he acted for a period as Charge d'Affaires. Before proceeding to Egypt Mr. Corbett held the appointment of British representative on the International Financial Commission for the control of Greek finance.

Malaria-Proof Wallace.

Mr. William Wallace of Nigeria has just arrived in England on one of his rare holidays, says The West African Mail. He is accompanied by Col. Morland, whose brilliant audacity won Kano for the Empire. Mr. Wallace (who used to be thought a negro by our French friends in days when their knowledge of British colonial methods was not so accurate as it now is) has served eighteen years on the Niger, and is malaria-proof.

A Scotsman and a diplomatist, Mr. Wallace went on embassies to Sokoto and Kano, on behalf of the Royal Niger Company, when such journeys involved great personal risk. On the assumption of direct Imperial control Mr. Wallace, who is a C.M.G., was appointed Deputy High Commissioner. He has visited every corner of the protectorate from Sokoto to Lake Chad. From him Sir Frederick Lugard has had most valuable help in bringing about the acceptance of British rule.

FREAKS OF WILL MAKERS.

A Case In Which Authenticity Was Curiously Proved.

It is probable that a whole volume, and a very interesting one at that, might be composed of the freaks of legal evidence in will cases. The evidence is often purely documentary; hence the paradoxes which arise from time to time in its interpretation. If ever such a volume comes to be published, it will surely be incomplete if the following case, told by John Corwin of the firm of Harris, Corwin & Gunnison, is left out:

"The testatrix," said Mr. Corwin, "died in Brooklyn some years ago, and it devolved upon me, as her lawyer, to find and probate her will. In a trunk I found an envelope containing a number of very small pieces of paper, on both sides of which was writing. Inside the flap of that envelope was written, 'This will is all here,' in the handwriting and with the signature of the testatrix.

"You must remember that these scraps of paper were very small indeed. The paradox is this—that the extreme smallness of the scraps was the evidence that this torn paper was the last will and testament of the deceased. The law recognizes tearing as one method by which a testator may revoke a will, and the intention to revoke is presumed in a testator who so tears one. But if a contrary intention can be proved by another act done at the same time then the tearing of the will does not revoke it. Now, in this case the words 'This will is all here' clearly showed that the testatrix meant those scraps of paper to be regarded as her will. It remained to prove that she so meant at the time when she tore the paper. If she had torn the paper at one moment, intending by that act to revoke the will, and had subsequently written those words without witnesses or other legal formality, meaning to revive the force of the revoked will, then the latter act was legally invalid and the will could not be probated. Surrogate Abbott took this view.

"My contention was that the writing on the flap of the envelope was in technical language a part of the same res gesta as the tearing of the will. I argued that if the testatrix had torn that paper at one time and put it in that envelope at another some of the pieces, small as they were, must surely have become lost in the interval. The extreme minuteness of the pieces, coupled with the fact that not one piece was missing, was my evidence that the tearing and the putting into that envelope were one res gesta.

"I had quite clearly demonstrated the presence of every piece by taking a sheet of glass covered with white of egg and carefully reconstructing the whole sheet of paper upon it, leaving each piece with the same side to the glass as its fellows. In this way I was able to present the will in legible shape. Its physical completeness established my point to the surrogate's satisfaction, for the presumption that the placing of the pieces in the envelope and the writing on the flap were one res gesta was in my favor. And so I succeeded in probating that will."

To the lay mind the mystery of the tearing of the will remains no less interesting than the curious legal evidence of its validity. People who make wills notoriously indulge in strange fancies at times, and it may be that this woman resorted to the expedient of tearing up her will precisely because that was one of the last things which any one who wished to preserve a will would be likely to do with it, and consequently no one who wished to steal the will would be likely to look for it in an envelope containing only minute scraps of paper.—Exchange.

National Hatreds.

King Joseph, in one of his letters, tells his imperial brother of France that the people of Naples have begun to love their new sovereign and that they hate the old queen. To this Napoleon replies by cynically advising his brother not to believe any of the nonsense talked by courtiers as regards popular likes or dislikes for particular individuals. They are mere evanescent expressions of feeling upon which it is quite unsafe to depend. "What," he adds, "one nation really hates is another nation." We fear that there is a profound truth in this saying. National hatreds are never obliterated, though they are sometimes temporarily concealed by the personal popularity which a particular man or woman may gain in a foreign country.—Saturday Review.

Retains Youthful Enthusiasm.

Field Marshal Sir Evelyn Wood, says The London Chronicle, still retains the enthusiasm of youth. He beats youngsters at tennis; and in the season is among the best mounted riders in the Row. Sir Evelyn has always loved horses, and one of his griefs in leaving England for the Egyptian campaign of 1883 was the death of his brown pony Puskie on the very day of his departure. Puskie, whose years then numbered 31, was a survivor (perhaps the last of his race) of the Crimean war. Wood, when a midshipman, had bought him for £8, and never had a better bargain; for once when he was carrying Lord Raglan's despatches to the naval camp he lost his way, and but for the right lead of Puskie would have found himself within the Russian lines. Another accomplishment associated less frequently than good horsemanship with a soldier is Sir Evelyn's. He is the most facile of letter-writers. During one arduous campaign, which lasted 450 days, his total post-bag to family and friends at home numbered 450—a letter a day.

Brussels Lace.

After Waterloo M. Trayaux, a leading lace merchant, turned his warehouse into a hospital for British soldiers. Such virtue was not left to be its own reward. His good action was noised abroad, and when the stream of tourists set in again all the English made it a point of honor to buy lace of him; hence in a few years his fortune was made.

Many attempts have been made to make brussels lace away from Brussels, always though without success. Though the mechanical processes are strictly followed, something in the air or water or soil gives a hallmark that nothing else can attain.

The Wonderful Number Seven.

Seven is a number of great prominence and singularity. There are seven planets, seven metals, seven colors and seven tastes; there are seven principal virtues—three divine and four cardinal; there are seven days in the week and seven ages of man; there are seven windows through which the ordinary senses are exercised—the eyes, the ears, the nostrils and the mouth; there are seven liberal arts, seven sciences and seven notes in music; the seventh son is a wonder, and the seventh son of a seventh son is simply marvelous in his healing powers.

Your System Demands Help.

Just Such Help as Can Best be Supplied by the Use of the Great Restorative.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Spring seems to be the time of year when the vitality of the human system is at its lowest ebb.

To most people the winter season is a trying time. Either as a result of colds or the effects of indoor life with poor ventilation or the use of artificial foods, the system gets run down and exhausted, the blood becomes thin and watery and the nerves play out.

Headache, sleeplessness, stomach troubles, loss of energy and ambition, feelings of discouragement and despondency, are among the symptoms which cause distress.

It doesn't do to neglect these warning notes. Your system needs help, and you cannot do better than call to your aid Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

If you have been reading the cases reported in the newspapers from day to day in which this great medicine has been instrumental in restoring health and strength to weak and suffering people you are no doubt already convinced as to its extraordinary medicinal properties.

Then why not make a test in your own case? You cannot possibly use preparation which is so certain to prove of lasting benefit.

HUDSON BAY NAVIGATION.

Bishop Lofthouse of Keewatin Gives Valuable Information—Wooden Boats Needed to Better Withstand Ice Pressure.

Speaking of the navigation of Hudson Bay and Hudson Straits, Bishop Lofthouse of Keewatin states that both could be safely navigated from the middle of June until near the first of October. Trading vessels, which were entirely whalers with the exception of the two Hudson's Bay Company's boats, entered the Bay every year during that period. The whalers, which were American, never came very far south, but remained on the northern part of the Bay above Marble Island. These boats were all wood and double-sheathed, built to withstand the ice, and were of about 700 tons burden. In his opinion steel vessels, unless specially constructed, would be useless for navigating the Straits and the Bay, as an ice-pack would crush them almost as easily as an egg shell. Ice was really never entirely out of the Bay, and he thought that this was due to the fact that no warm currents of water entered the Bay with the exception of the waters which flowed into the Bay from the rivers, which emptied themselves into that great body of cold water. The currents in the Bay come down the western side until the mouth of James Bay was reached. They then turned and went up the eastern and out into Hudson Strait. These currents were constantly carrying ice in their course, and he had personally in the month of August encountered 60 miles of field ice in the Bay within 100 miles of Fort Churchill. Adding to such a condition of affairs the presence of no warm currents, it was not to be wondered at that the surrounding territory was cold and barren; in fact, it was colder at Fort Churchill than in the southern part of Greenland.

The country to the south of James' Bay, around Moose Factory, His Lordship says, had a totally different climate from that at Fort Churchill, which was 700 miles further north. At Moose Factory he had seen as fine vegetables grown as could be grown around the city of Toronto, such as potatoes, roots and carrots. He had also seen oats ripen, and had fed the fowl at Moose Factory during the winter with the oats grown there. Ploughing had been carried on there as late as the 4th of November, but field work usually closed down at the end of October, and commenced about the end of April. The country around Moose Factory was swampy, and very little was known about it in the general sense of the word. At Fort Churchill there was a two-months' difference in the length of the winter, compared with Moose Factory, and it was not possible to even grow a potato there, let alone to think of ripening grain. In fact, he did not think that the grain could be relied upon to ripen anywhere in the country between Hudson Bay and Lake Winnipeg, the coldness of the waters of the Bay and their effect upon the surrounding country making this an impossibility.

The Hudson Bay country was not in the general sense of the word a mineral country, and he was inclined to doubt any statement to the effect that gold had been located in the country. There were unquestionably iron and copper deposits. The iron deposits on Chesterfield Inlet, south of the Churchill River, were extensive and of a good quality, but there was no coal, peat or even wood in the country; it was practically 1,000 miles from anywhere. Native copper deposits must exist on the shores of the Arctic, for the Esquimos often bring into the stations great lumps of native copper, from which they make their spear heads.

Again referring to the navigation of the Bay, His Lordship says that steamers built for the purpose of carrying the products of the Northwest from some port on the Bay to Great Britain, would be practically useless for anything else during the period in which the Bay was closed up, as they would be too heavy for ordinary mercantile use. No definite dates could be set for arrivals and departures on account of the ice, but safety could be relied upon.

His Lordship says that the Indians around Hudson Bay are practically the only remaining redmen who are to-day living in the same manner, as all the Indians in Canada West were living 120 years ago. They were still hunters and trappers, and the Hudson's Bay Company was the only commercial company with whom they traded. This condition of affairs was changing at Moose Factory.

Shipbuilding Labor.

Tonnage is but a poor basis for comparing the worth of the shipbuilding work done. In the ordinary tramp steamer of 6,000 tons, which represents a large proportion of the year's shipbuilding work, the number of workmen's hours spent in constructional work, from first to last, is from 200 to 230 per ton of builders' finished weight; whereas, even in the intermediate liner with moderately handsome accommodation for passengers, the time spent is at least 100 hours per ton of finished builders' weight. And in warship work the time is seldom less than 700 hours; so that in considering the relative value of the work of different firms this ought to be taken into account.

The Mutilation of Trees.

The charming manner in which trees relieve the monotony of the buildings, the sweet harmony they impart, and the refreshing shade they afford ought to be an inducement to encourage the growth of town trees; but the reverse is the case. In the second year after planting, a barbarian with a knife, hatchet or saw cuts every branch off down to the stump. In a few years the head becomes most unsightly and scraggy; not a particle of beauty remains. The practice is a fashion, and infectious.—Amateur Gardening.

Easy Reading For Infants.

He proposed, conjointly with his father and brother, to blast the stone as the most expeditious mode of gaining access to her arcana, and this in the open daylight, in order that any tutelary protection she might be disposed to extend to her favorite haunt might, as she was a thing of darkness and night, be effectually countervailed.—Extract From Child's Fairy Book.

THE DECLINE OF CASTE

NOW SAID IT WILL DISAPPEAR FROM INDIA IN FIFTY YEARS.

Most Important Fetich of the Hindoos Losing Ground and Expected to Become Obsolete—With It an Obstacle to Progress Will Vanish—Acts That Lead to Expulsion of Caste.

Everybody who keeps in touch with the slowly changing social conditions in India is convinced that the caste, the most important fetich of the Hindoos, is gradually losing its hold, particularly upon the upper classes, because they cannot adjust it to the requirements of modern civilization and to the foreign customs they imitate and value so much.

Very high authorities have predicted in my hearing, writes W. C. Curtis from Agra, that caste will be practically obsolete within the next fifty years, and entirely disappear before the end of the century, provided the missionaries and other reformers will let it alone and not keep it alive by controversy. It is a sacred fetich, and when it is attacked the loyal Hindoo is compelled to defend and justify it, no matter what his private opinion of its practicability and advantages may be; but if foreigners will ignore it the progressive, cultured Hindoos will themselves discard it.

The influences of travel, official and commercial relations and social intercourse with foreigners, personal ambition for preferment in the military and the civil service, the adoption of modern customs and other agencies are at work undermining the institution, and when a Hindoo finds that the laws interfere with his comfort or convenience he is very certain to ignore them. The experience of the Maharaja of Jeypore, of whom I wrote you recently, is not unusual. His case is only one of thousands, for nearly every native prince and wealthy Hindoo has broken caste again and again without suffering the slightest disadvantage, which has naturally made them indifferent.

Travelers see very little of this peculiar institution, and it is so complicated that they cannot comprehend it without months of study. They notice that half the men they meet on the streets have odd looking signs upon their foreheads. Ryas, our bearer, calls them "god marks," but they are entirely artificial, and indicate the particular deity which the wearer is in the habit of worshiping, as well as the caste to which he belongs. A white triangle means Krishna and a red circle means Siva—the two greatest gods—or vice versa, I have forgotten which, and Hindoos who are inclined to let their light shine before men spread on these symbols with great care and regularity.

At every temple, every market place, at the places where Hindoos go to bathe, at the railway stations, public buildings, in the bazars and wherever else multitudes are accustomed to gather, you will find Brahmins squatting on a piece of matting behind trays covered with little bowls filled with different colored ochres and other paints. These men know the distinctive marks of all the castes, and for small fees paint the proper signs upon the foreheads of their patrons, who wear them with great pride. You frequently see them upon children also; and on holidays and religious anniversaries, when the people come out for pleasure, or during special ceremonials at their temples, nearly everybody wears a "god mark," just as he would wear a badge denoting his regiment and corps at an army reunion.

The more you study into the question of caste the more confusing it becomes, but it is interesting and important because it is the peculiar institution of India and is not found in any other country in the world. The 200,000,000 or more Hindoos in this Empire are divided into a vast number of independent, well organized and unchangeable groups, which are separated by wide differences, who cannot eat together or drink from the same vessel or sit at the same table or intermarry.

There have been and still are eminent and learned philosophers and social scientists who admire caste as one of the highest agencies of social perfection, and they argue that it alone has prevented the people of India from relapsing into barbarism, but foreigners in general and Christian missionaries in particular take a very different view, and many thoughtful and patriotic Hindoos publicly declare that it is the real and only cause of the wretched condition of their people and the greatest obstacle to their progress. Sinoshee Chunder Dutt, a very learned Hindoo and author of a standard book entitled "India, Past and Present," declares that "civilization has been brought to a standstill by its mischievous restrictions, and there is no hope of its being remedied until those restrictions are removed."

It is curious to learn that the word "caste" is not Hindoo at all, but Portuguese, and that instead of being an ancient feature of the Hindoo religion, it is comparatively a modern idea.

The first form of religion in India was the worship of nature, and the chief gods of the people were the sun, fire, water and other natural phenomena, which were interpreted to the ignorant masses by the priests, who gradually developed what is now called Brahminism, and in the course of time, for social reasons, divided the people into four classes: First, the Brahmins, which include the priestly, the literary and the ruling portion of the population; second, the Kshatyas, or warriors, who were like the knights of Europe, in the middle ages, then the Kaisyas, or landowners, the farming population and those engaged in mercantile and manufacturing industries, and finally the Sudras, or servants, who attended the other cases, toiled in the fields and did the heavy labor of the community.

The laws of caste, as explained by Chunder Duff, provide:

1. That individuals cannot be married who do not belong to the same caste.
2. That a man may not sit to eat with another who is not of his own caste.
3. That his meals must be cooked either by persons of his own caste or a Brahmin.
4. That no man of an inferior caste is to touch his cooked rations, or the dishes in which they are served, or even to enter his cook-room.
5. That no water or other liquor contaminated by the touch of a man of inferior caste can be made use of—rivers, tanks and other large sheets of water being, however, held to be incapable of defilement.
6. That articles of dry food, excepting rice, wheat, grains, etc., do not become impure by passing through the hands of a man of inferior caste so long as they remain dry, but cannot be taken if they get wet or greased.
7. That certain prohibited articles, such as cows' flesh, pork, fowls, etc., are not to be taken.
8. That the ocean or any other of the boundaries of India cannot be crossed over.

The only acts which now lead to exclusion of caste are the following:

1. Embracing Christianity or Mohammedanism.
2. Going to Europe, America or any other foreign country.
3. Marrying a widow.
4. Throwing away the sacred thread.
5. Eating beef, pork, or fowl.
6. Eating food cooked by a Mohammedan, Christian, or low caste Hindoo.
7. Officiating as priest in the house of a low caste Sudra.
8. By a female going away from home for an immoral purpose.
9. By a widow becoming loose in character.

When a Hindoo is excluded from caste his friends, relatives and fellow-townsmen refuse to partake of his hospitality; he is not invited to entertainments in their houses; he cannot obtain wives or husbands for his children; even his own married daughters cannot visit him without running the risk of being excluded from caste; his priest and even his barber and washerman refuse to serve him; his fellow-caste men ostracize him so completely that they refuse to assist him even in sickness or at the funeral of a member of his household. In some cases the man excluded from caste is debarred from the public temples.

To deprive a man of the service of his barber and his washerman is becoming more difficult these days, but the other penalties are enforced with more or less rigor.

A STORY OF DICKENS.

How "Boz" Got a Black Eye in Louisville, Ky.

Josh Hutchinson, who for thirty-five years has been head bellboy at the Galt House, was in the hotel on the day that Col. Throckmorton had his famous set-to with Charles Dickens. Dickens was writing in his room, and Col. Throckmorton, a courtly Southern gentleman, thought he would go to the room and see if he could not assist in giving Dickens all the comforts of the hotel.

The landlord went to the room of the great writer and knocked at the door.

"Come in," said Dickens, gruffly. Looking up he saw Throckmorton.

"I, what do you want?" he asked, gruffly, for he had his English ideas about the standing of an innkeeper.

"I thought I would ask if there was anything I could do for you."

"No, not a thing," Dickens answered, churlishly, not looking up from his writing.

Col. Throckmorton thought he had been misunderstood, and again asked Dickens if there was anything that he could do for him.

"No. Didn't you hear me?" answered Dickens, growing excited and gazing at the landlord as if he were a schoolboy. "If there is anything I want I'll ring for it. You can go."

That was enough. Col. Throckmorton walked quickly over to Dickens, grasped his coat collar, and pulled him out of the chair. Dickens' manuscript fell all over the floor and the ink spattered on the carpet. He was game, however, and the men fought all over the room.

"Dat Mr. Dickens were no gen'man," said Josh, recently, in telling about the occurrence. "And how de cunnel did black his eye."—Louisville Herald.

Tremendous Kill of Rats.

Over two hundred thousand rats—202,782 to be precise—have been caught at the London docks within the last five weeks. They have fallen victims to the official rat-catchers, who visit every ship that comes into port and do their best to rid it of live stock of the rodent variety.

"We are very glad to see them," said an officer of a South American grain ship on Saturday. "We came here fairly swarming with the vermin, but since the rat-catchers' visit I have scarcely seen one. I believe the animals come prospecting around before a vessel leaves port, and pick their ship like passengers. For instance, they would sooner sign articles on a grain ship than on one carrying pig iron."—London Mail.

Canada's Agent in Japan.

Mr. Alexander McLean, of Ottawa, the newly-appointed Canadian Trade Commissioner to Japan, was for years the senior partner of the firm of McLean & Rider, who held the contract for Government printing before the establishment of the Bureau at Ottawa. He is a Liberal of life-long standing, and with his pen and means has performed valuable service for that party. He began life as a journalist in the strenuous atmosphere of Cornwall. Some ten years ago he made an experiment as proprietor of The Montreal Herald, and since then his journalistic labors are understood to have been confined to editorial contributions to his brother's paper in Picton. He is also a brother of Mr. M. Y. McLean, M.P.P., of The Seaforth Expositor. He is a writer of elegance and force, and his contributions to the archives of the Trade and Commerce Department should combine both literary and material value.

RIDDLE OF STONEHENGE.

Mysterious Stones Have Been a Source of Wonder and Speculation to Unnumbered Generations of Britons.

We may not know exactly what Stonehenge originally was; but we are all convinced that it was either a place of worship, a place where rites thought to be pleasing to some higher power were performed, or a place of burial for the illustrious dead, or a place of tribal meeting, perhaps for the crowning of kings, or, as is very probable, a place used for more than one of these purposes. It is also quite certain that of its kind it was a place of the highest importance.

It may be regarded as the Westminster Abbey of some tribe or race which in the neolithic age spread over the south of England. Obviously, it must have been a place of resort for a whole nation of people—the one place of all others to which public highways would lead.

No one would suggest that a street leading to the doors of Westminster Abbey was not a public highway because it stopped there. It seems to be equally absurd to say that a road is not a public road because it stops at Stonehenge.

No doubt changes of race, changes of faith, changes in the distribution of population, might have relegated Stonehenge to obscurity, and might have led to such a disuse of the way leading to it as to have amounted to practical destruction. But it happens not to have been so. So remarkable was Stonehenge that when it ceased to be used for worship, meeting or sepulture, it became a wonder in itself, and it continued to be a place of resort, from one motive or another, throughout the centuries. Indeed, it is not quite clear that there has not been something in the nature of a continuing rite performed at Stonehenge from age to age. Popular traditions cling strangely about these megaliths. In Brittany, to the present day, weird customs, obviously connected with Christian worship, though sometimes adopted and blessed by the priests, are observed before many a prehistoric stone.

At Stonehenge there is, and has been beyond living memory, an assembly of persons on the longest day of the year to see the sun rise over the top of the Friar's Heel and strike the altar stone. The modern view of Stonehenge is that it was a temple of the sun; if so, this gathering on June 21st is obviously a remnant of sun worship. Can there be any better reason for the existence of roads than that they lead to a place so remarkable that year by year it brings people many miles to take part in a gathering the origin and significance of which have passed into oblivion? Is it not idle, in the face of such facts, to suggest that there cannot be a public right of way to Stonehenge because its stones were placed there by man and may not be removed by man?

As a matter of fact, they are older than anything else in the nature of a building which the British Isles can show. Removable they may be, but centuries have seen them standing in the same place, and centuries have seen them an object of interest and an object of resort. The megaliths of Stonehenge saw old Sarum grow into a great city; they saw it deserted; they saw its buildings fall to pieces; they have seen it for centuries a mere series of concentric earthworks; they have seen the new city of Salisbury (now old, as British cities go) rise mushroom-like in its stead. If any structure of man can claim permanence, it is Stonehenge.

British Consul at Paris.

To use the official formula, "His Britannic Majesty's Consul-General in Paris" is Mr. A. Percy Inglis, and it is doubtful if there be a more distinguished-looking or more popular Consul-General on the continent. Middle-aged, with hair and moustache almost turning grey, keen, pleasant eyes and a kindly if somewhat dignified expression, Mr. Inglis is impressive; some have said—alarming; but his courtly manner soon sets one at one's ease. It goes without saying that in the English and American colonies he is much sought after, and he is ever ready to lend his invaluable assistance in the matter of amateur theatricals and other pleasant functions. In spite of his many official and social duties, Mr. Inglis finds time to patronize regularly enough the British Club on the Boulevard des Capucines, of which he is one of the most prominent members; and he may be seen there three or four times a week for afternoon tea, always surrounded and always courtly. For three or four hours a day he is to be seen at the Consulate-General in the Rue d'Agnesseau, hard by the Embassy, but his home is in the charming and fashionable Avenue Marceau, where he occupies a flat.—M. The Oldest Inhabitants.

The oldest living inhabitants of the earth are believed to be a family of turtles which have recently been exhibited in London. The youngest is a trifle over 2,000 years old. Despite their age the turtles appear to be in excellent health, retaining all their faculties and giving every promise of living for many years to come. The turtles were found in the Galapagos islands. Several of the largest weigh as much as 500 pounds. They were found far up on the side of a crater on Albemarle, the largest of the islands.

Boys Beware of the Cop.

The police have received many complaints that boys have frequently torn the limbs from the maple trees which line the streets for the purpose of getting the maple up. Chief Roszel states that there will be a sharp look out kept for such offenders who, if caught, will be severely dealt with.

Strangers' Tea.

The monthly Strangers' Tea held at the Y.M.C.A. last night proved to be another of the pleasant series of the Strangers' Fellowship Club. Mr. R. E. Harding presided. Mayor Roger and Colonel Edwards were also present. The ladies of the Charlotte street Methodist church provided the tea, the committee being Mrs. Lyle, convenor; Mrs S. Clegg, Mrs. Dr. Bradd, Mrs. A. B. Cunningham, and Mrs. Bookart.

AN IMPRESSIVE MEMORIAL SERVICE

Held in the Charlotte Street Church Yesterday.

In Connection with Death of Rev. Jos. Kilgour Rev. W. J. Jolliffe's Touching Address.

An impressive memorial service was held in the Charlotte street Methodist church yesterday morning in connection with the death of Rev. Jos. Kilgour. The organ was appropriately draped in black, and the service was attended by a large congregation. The pastor, Rev. W. J. Jolliffe, preached, taking as his text, Nehemiah vii. verse 2, "He was a faithful man and feared God above many."

The preacher began by showing how very closely the verse applied to the late Rev. Jos. Kilgour. For he was a man of faith; he believed in God with all his heart and mind and soul. He studied the Scriptures and became assured of their truthfulness by his own experience. You can only believe a truth, when on Mr. Jolliffe's by experience." The late Mr. Kilgour was a clear thinker, although he may have had views in which all persons might not concur. Beyond all, he could be trusted, for he was a man of honour, who despised all duplicity and base dealing. He possessed a rugged, forceful nature, yet he was kind and gentle, and his gentleness was his strength. He feared God, but it was a loving filial fear, not a tormenting fear. In his condemnation of wrong he was absolutely fearless, for he knew he was called by God to be His ambassador and to do His work. Mr. Kilgour overcame difficulty. He was steadfast and he stood upon his difficulties and was lifted nearer God. In 1856 he entered the ministry of the Methodist church, and for over forty years continued to toil for the Master, both in Quebec and Ontario. He was very faithful in keeping all his appointments. He would start out to preach at some distant church, when the roads were almost impassable. And when he could not drive nothing daunted he finished his journey on snowshoes. His preaching was practical and pointed at bringing the people to Christ. His genial nature brought him near the people. His strong personality set him before men. Then his promises were by himself regarded as almost sacred, and except in a case of impossibility he kept his engagements. And thus he worked for over 40 years; the care of the church to a conscientious minister is a great deal. The nervous strain is intense. Yet for over 40 years he laboured thus, unceasingly. He won the hearts of children and the young people looked upon him as a friend and the older generation as a wise and loving counsellor. Together with all he had an intense love for all dumb animals and were they able to speak they would tell of his kindly treatment. This love for dumb brutes shows up the real nature of the man.

True service for Christ brings happiness and Mr. Kilgour during his life on earth was happy. There was nothing gloomy or sad in his feelings. He never whined. He realized that the ways of righteousness were the ways of peace.

The late Mr. Kilgour retired from active church ministration in the year 1898 and took up his residence in Peterborough, joining the Charlotte street church. Then, even after these long years, he was not idle. He was ever willing to take a service and even under difficulty. During his residence in this town he endeared himself to all, not only Methodists, but to the clergy and people of other denominations. His life stands out as an example of righteousness, an example which all would do well to follow. During the last twelve months, continued Rev. Mr. Jolliffe, we have noticed that he had been failing in health. We little thought when he preached here on March 6th that it would be his last word to us as a congregation. His illness was of short duration. He returned from a visit west with his work done. Last Sunday night he said to his wife that he would recover, but on the morrow, sitting in his chair, with his loving wife by his side the end came, and he closed his eye-lids in the sleep of death. Continuing, Mr. Jolliffe said that he knew all sympathized with Mrs. Kilgour in her loss, and in conclusion expressed his personal feelings, saying he had lost a loving friend, kind, helpful and true.

Before the close of the service Miss Clara Belleghem sang.

FEELING REFERENCE TO LATE REV. KILGOUR.

Made at Morning Service in the Mark Street Church.

At the Mark street Methodist church yesterday morning Rev. J. G. Lewis referred in touching words to the late Rev. Jos. Kilgour's tenderness and sympathy for people in their afflictions; losses and bereavements. He was always a welcome visitor, though tender he was firm and outspoken in the denunciation of all wrong. As a minister he was unsparing in his duties and gave freely of his heart treasures and of his purse, for the relief and uplifting of all. And at the basis of all was the rich personal experience of salvation in his own heart. In conclusion Rev. Mr. Lewis made reference to Mr. Kilgour's long and effective work for the Mark street church. The music was suitable to the occasion and the church was appropriately draped in black.

LOWER LOCKS ARE IN GOOD CONDITION.

Rumour to the Effect that the Steamers Could Not Use it Untrue.

The Examiner was informed to-day that because of some alleged defect in the lower lock, the steamers plying the Otonabee River this year would not be able to land at their wharves, but would have to remain below the locks, which, of course, would entail a great deal of inconvenience to passengers and those using the boats for shipping freight. Enquiry at the Canal office, from Mr. R. B. Rogers, Superintending Engineer, gives the information that there is no truth in the statement, and that the river steamers would be able to land at their usual landing places.

EXPIRED SUDDENLY IN CHURCHYARD.

Mr. William A. Whetung Died Last Night on his Way to Church.

Deceased was Son of Daniel Whetung of Chemong Death Due to Hemorrhage.

Word was received in town to-day of the very sudden death of William A. Whetung, which occurred at Chemong last night. The late Mr. Whetung was in his usual good health all day, and attended church in the morning and afternoon. He was on his way to church again at night, when he was taken ill with a hemorrhage, to which he was subject and died almost immediately, in the the church grounds. A doctor was called at once, but on his arrival he found that life was extinct.

The deceased, who was 33 years of age, was a son of Daniel Whetung, and was a highly respected young man in the community, over whi h his sudden death has cast a deep gloom.

He leaves a wife and one daughter to mourn his loss, in addition to his father, two brothers and two sisters. The brothers are Daniel, jr., and Albert, and the sisters, Mrs. Taylor of Chemong, and Daisy at home.

The funeral will take place on Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock.

ACCIDENT BEFALLS MR. FRANK YOUNG.

Suffered from Blood Poisoning, but is now on Road to Recovery.

Mr. Frank Young, the popular purser of the Majestic, is just recovering from a severe case of blood-poisoning. Some weeks ago Mr. Young met with what he thought at the time was a slight accident. He was assisting to unload the steel for the hull of the new steamer being constructed at Young's Point to ply on the Kawartha Lakes, and in some way the second finger of the left hand became jammed, and was lacerated.

Mr. Young paid no particular attention to the injury, and it caused him little pain for about a week, when suddenly it became very painful, and after suffering intense pain for some days he consulted a doctor, who found that he was suffering from blood poisoning. His arm swelled up and for two weeks his condition was considered serious. All will be glad to learn, however, that the danger is now passed, and he is able to be out again, and will doubtless be seen this season as usual on the popular line of steamers.

The new steamer "Stony Lake," being constructed by Mr. Young, will be ready early in the excursion season. The steel hull has been erected and planking is now being proceeded with. The boat when completed; will be one of the finest on the inland waters.

NARROW ESCAPE FROM DROWING.

A young man Given Plunge in Overflowing Otonabee River.

The present high water in the Otonabee was responsible for almost a drowning the other night. A young man connected with the reportorial staff of the other evening paper, had occasion to pay a business visit to the vicinity of the river, and as the night, was comparatively dark, he did not notice that the river had overflown its usual bounds, until he was given a sudden plunge into the icy waters of the Otonabee. Luckily the water at this point was not very deep and the only damage done was a duck in the watery element.

A GOLD LOCKET FOR THE LEADER.

Mr. Rupert Gliddon Made Recepient of Handsome Gift from His Choir.

On Saturday night at the conclusion of the choir practice in St. John's, the members of the choir went to the Guild room, where Mr. Rupert Gliddon, the choir master, was presented with a gold locket, on behalf of the choir, of which for about two years he has most efficiently filled the position of leader. The presentation was a thorough surprise to Mr. Gliddon. An address in which the excellent tact and good judgment of Mr. Gliddon in his leadership of the choir was referred to, was read by Mr. H. E. Morphet, and Miss Maude Rush made the presentation, on behalf of the choir. Mr. Gliddon in acknowledgment of the remembrance of the members expressed his deep appreciation for the gift, and his pleasure at being associated with the choir.

Refreshments were served during the evening and a most enjoyable hour was spent. Mr. Gliddon has been singularly successful in his leadership of the choir, and the members took this opportunity of evidencing their recognition of his efforts.

CYLINDER HEAD WAS BLOWN OUT.

Local from Belleville Delayed Four Hours by Accident at Birdsall.

The local from Belleville on Saturday night, met with an accident which detained it some hours at Birdsall's station. Just as the train was leaving the station, running about thirty minutes late, the head of the right cylinder blew out, and, although no one was injured, a long delay ensued. The engine was uncoupled on the right side from the drive wheels, and proceeded to town using steam in only one cylinder. Although due here at nine o'clock, the train did not arrive here until one o'clock on Sunday morning. There were a large number of passengers aboard, to whom the delay, while it was purely accidental, was most annoying.

STEEL MADE FOR EIGHT DOLLARS.

This is the Cost of One Ton Manufactured by the Electrical Process.

Mr. C. E Brown, Member of the Commission in Town Is Enthusiastic in His Belief of Canada's Possibilities.

Mr. C. E. Brown, Ete of the Canadian General Electric Company and now a member of the Royal Commission appointed by Government to investigate the process of steel manufacture by electric smelting, was in town yesterday spending the day with his family. The commission has just returned from Sweden, where the members saw in operation plants manufacturing steel by electricity. Mr. Brown is enthusiastic in speaking of the possibilities of Canada along this line.

A despatch from Ottawa says:

"Steel can be made by the electric process at a total cost of $8 a ton. It is believed this is what the commission that went to Europe to investigate the several electro-thermic processes employed in the smelting of iron ores and the making of steel will report. This means that iron and steel will be manufactured on an enormous scale in Canada. The commission, consisting of Dr. Haanel, Mr. C. F. Brown, of Peterborough, electrical expert, and Mr. Thos. Cote, secretary, left Canada on Jan. 21st, and they returned to Ottawa yesterday. On reaching England from Canada the services of Prof. F. W. Harbord of Cooper's Hill, Surrey, professor of metallurgy, and metallurgist to the Indian Government, were engaged as metallurgist, and the party proceeded to Gysinge, Sweden, where the making of steel from pig iron and scrap was witnessed. From Gysinge Dr. Haanel carred away some knives made from steel manufactured by the electric process. The next place visited was Kortfors, Sweden, where one of Heroult's furnaces was seen in operation. From Kortfors, Dr. Haanel went to Berlin, where he inspected an exhibition of peat having also been commissioned to make an investigation into the peat industry. Paris was next visited, and then the commission went to La Praz where experiments in making steel from pig iron and scrap and also of pig iron direct from the ore were observed. The most important experiments witnessed were those at Livt in the Pyrenees. The firm there were working night and day in the manufacture of ferro-silicon for for the Russian Government. These operations were however stopped, and experiments made for the commission in electric furnaces in the smelting of iron ores direct. The cost of these operations to the company was $2,500. For the purpose of the experiments 90 tons of iron ores were imported from Spain. With the result Dr. Haanel is highly pleased. Samples of the steel were secured, and Prof. Harbord will report on the quality of steel, cost of manufacture, etc. Mr. Brown, the electric expert, will report on the absorption of electric energy in the different processes. When these reports are received Dr. Haanel will be able to give definite statements, until then he declined to state what was the actual cost of making the steel produced at Livet. It is rumoured, however, that the sum total was $8 a ton. Dr. Haanel was asked whether the manufacture of steel at that price would be a profitable enterprise, and he said it certainly would. All that Dr. Haanel would say as to the results of his investigation was that it was most successful. This is taken to mean that the smelting of iron ores in Canada by electricity is commercially feasible, which opens up enormous possibilities for this country. Throughout Ontario there are immense deposits of iron ore and numerous waterpowers for the development of electric energy. It is not difficult to picture the speedy establishment and development of a great iron and steel industry in Canada, and the Province of Ontario may yet be studded with several Pittsburgs. If this remarkable result is brought about, and the world is furnished with Canadian iron and steel made from native ores, it will be largely owing to Hon. Clifford Sifton, who persuaded his colleagues to agree to a thorough investigation of the electric process with a view to its introduction into Canada.

THE CHURCHES.

ALL SAINTS' CHURCH.

The services yesterday were largely attended and two excellent sermons were delivered by Rev. Mr. Major. The morning discourse was based upon part of the 19th verse of the 16th chapter of John, "They saw Jesus walking on the sea."

In the evening he spoke upon the 12th verse of 20th chapter of Numbers, "And the Lord spoke to Moses and Aaron." During the offertory Miss Rickey sang "Rock of Ages."

GEORGE STREET METHODIST.

At the morning service yesterday the pulpit was occupied by Rev. J. Bastow, of the Murray street Baptist church, who preached a stirring evangelistic sermon on the text, "His yoke is easy." Mr. Bastow showed how easy it was to become a Christian, and also to remain a Christian. The choir sang as an anthem, "Rock of Ages." At the offertory Mr. Hutchinson of Ottawa, sang a solo, which was highly appreciated. In the evening Rev. J. P. Wilson preached a strong sermon, on "The Divine Ruler," his text being "The Lord Reigneth, let the Earth Rejoice." The evening anthem was "As Christ Upon the Cross," and Mr. R. N. Jolliffe delighted the congregation by his excellent rendition of "The Lord is King."

WILL THE WOOLLEN MILLS REALLY CLOSE?

Canada Woollen Mills Company Has Sent Out Circulars Asking for Orders.

Rumour that Action was to Force the Government to Revise Tariff

Opinion of Woollen Men.

The following despatch from Montreal to the Toronto Star gives some further light on the woollen situation:—

In direct contradiction of the announcement made by the Canadian Woollen Mills Company that they intended closing down their various mills, a request has been received from the company by all the leading customers soliciting orders. One of these requests, is received by the J. W. Peck Company, shows clearly that the company intends continuing operations. It is as follows:—

"To avoid misunderstanding, we take this means of informing you that our company is still taking orders, and all orders accepted by us will, as heretofore, be filled in the terms and at the date agreed upon, without fail. Any repeats of present orders should be with us as soon as possible. Yours truly, Canada Woollen Mills, (limited.) George Davidson, Secretary-Treasurer."

Mr. Peck, when seen regarding the letter, said that he understood the Woollen Company (limited) intended to continue operation, and it was only as a bluff to get the Government to take action that the announcement of the closing down and sale of the mills had been made.

Mr. Millichamp, of Millichamp, Coyle & Co., Toronto, who are agents of the Canada Woollen Mills Company, said upon the above despatch being read to him:—

"There have been so many foolish and so many false reports regarding the Canada Woollen Mills Company lately that it seems immaterial whether another despatch, which is erroneous and entirely contrary to existing conditions, is published or not. I simply refuse to say anything about the matter. You can publish what you like."

WESTERN PEOPLE WANT RAILWAY.

Development of Country Greater in Proportion to the Railway Facilities.

Mr. D. McLean, of Moose Jaw, Assa., and formerly of the Trent Valley Flour Mills, Lakefield, passed through Peterborough to-day, on his way home from Ottawa. Mr. McLean has been away from Lakefield about 12 years, eight of which were spent in Calgary, and four in Moose Jaw, in both of which towns he has been engaged in the milling, grain and real estate business. Mr. McLean is like every westerner, enthusiastic when discussing the west and its prospects. He says that the people of the west are a unit in their belief that the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific is urgently needed. He pointed out that it is impossible for the present railways to handle the amount of traffic being offered, and the development of the country is progressing in a greater proportion than the extension of the railway lines, and their equipment.

Mr. McLean left for his western home this afternoon.

IMPORTANT DECISION.

At a meeting of the Barbers Union, No. 402, held April 12th, there being two non-union shops in town it was decided to publish a list of the fair shops for which they solicit patronage of the union men and the public in general. The following is a complete list of the Union shops:—

Midland Football League Schedule of Games—Large Meeting Saturday—Interesting Sporting Notes.

GOOD PROSPECTS OF SEASON'S SUCCESS.

The Midland Football League Arranged Schedule on Saturday.

FOURTEEN CLUBS ENTERED.

Enthusiastic Meeting Held Saturday Afternoon League Season Opens on April 30th. A Close Finish Promised.

A most enthusiastic meeting of the Midland Football League was held on Saturday afternoon in the Y. M.C.A. Board Room, when the districts were arranged, and schedules drawn up. An evidence of the growth of the League may be found in the fact that while last year there were three districts, in 1901 there are five. At the present time there are 14 clubs in the League, which fact substantiates the claim that it is the largest football organization in Ontario.

A perfect feeling of harmony pervaded Saturday's meeting, which augurs well for the success of the League.

Those in attendance at the meeting were: Dr. Morgan, president; Arthur Noble, vice-president; M. J. Hutchinson, secretary-treasurer; Dr. Devitt, Bowmanville; Dr. Keith, Omemee; E. Brumwell, Bridgenorth; W. Nicholls, Norwood; F. A. Coughlan, Caughnawaga; J. E. Sullivan, Peterborough Quakers; Mr. Donaldson, Harwood, who were representatives of the different clubs. A number of other gentlemen from town, as well as from outside points, were also in attendance.

Letters were read from Bethany, Deseronto, Albert College, Belleville and Belleville City Battalion, asking for admission to the League, but stating that it would be impossible to send representatives to the meeting. All of these clubs were admitted, and the League this year will be constituted as follows:—

District No. 1.

(Bowmanville and such other clubs as may wish to unite with it, from that vicinity.

District No. 2.

Omemee, Bethany, Peterborough Y. M.C.A.

District No. 3.

Old Country Wanderers, Bridgenorth, Norwood.

District No. 4.

Caughnawagas, Quakers, Harwood, Keene.

District No. 5.

Deseronto, Belleville City Battalion, (Belleville Albert College.

Napanee and Picton may also unite with the League, in which case they will be attached to No. 5 District.

It was decided to open up the League series on Saturday, April 30th.

The schedule of games was then arranged as follows:

District No. 1.

Bowmanville was allowed in case they failed to arrange with other teams in their vicinity to enter the semi-finals.

District No. 2.

April 30th, Omemee at Bethany.
May 7th, Bethany at Y.M.C.A.
May 14th, Y.M.C.A. at Omemee.
May 21st, Y. M. C. A. at Bethany
May 28th, Bethany at Omemee.
June 4th, Omemee at Y. M. C. A.

District No. 3.

April 30th, Wanderers at Norwood.
May 7th, Bridgenorth at Wanderers.
May 14th, Bridgenorth at Norwood.
May 21st, Norwood at Wanderers.
May 28th, Norwood at Bridgenorth.
June 4th, Wanderers at Bridgenorth.

District No. 4.

April 30th, Keene at Harwood.
May 7th, Quakers at Keene.
May 7th, Harwood at Caugnawaga.
May 14th, Caugnawaga at Quakers.
May 14th, Harwood at Quakers.
May 20th, Caugnawaga at Keene.
May 21st, Quakers at Harwood.
May 28th, Quakers at Caugnawaga.
May 28th, Harwood at Keene.
June 3rd, Caugnawaga at Harwood.
June 4th, Keene at Quakers.

District No. 5 will be asked to arrange its schedule to conform with that of the other districts.

Semi-final.

Group A.

June 11th, winners of 5 versus 4.

Group B.

June 11th, winners of 3 versus 1.

Group C.

Winners of District 2, (a bye).

Group D.

June 18th, winners of A versus C.

Final.

June 25th, winners of D at B.
July 1st, winners of B at D.

It was decided that the League would adopt an official ball, to be known as the "Midland League Ball," and arrangements were made for procuring at once such a ball, to be specially made for the League. This will be used in all League games. It was also decided to publish a League annual, which will include the constitution of the League, rules of the game, list of the clubs and secretaries, schedule of games, list of official referees, etc.

Each club has the privilege of naming one referee, who shall be recognized by the League, and all clubs are requested to send the name of such referee to the League secretary at once, in order that the full list may be published in the annual.

A motion was made that the League affiliate with the Ontario Association Football League, the central governing body of the province, but this was defeated. It was thought that the League was comparatively young yet, and that it would not be advisable at this stage to enter the association. It seemed to be the general concensus of opinion that by next year it might be thought in the interest of the League to affiliate with the association.

The formation of the executive occassioned some considerable discussion. It was felt that that body as at present constituted was too unwieldly, and it was finally decided that it should consist of the officers elected, with one representative from each district, the latter being elected as follows:

District No. 1—Dr. Devitt, Bowmanville.

District No. 2—Dr. Keeth, Omemee.

District No. 3—W. Nicholls, Norwood.

No. 4—J. R. McIntyre, Keene.

No. 5—Fred Richardson, Deseronto.

The League starts the season of 1904 with the best of prospects for a successful series of games, and the club winning the cup this year will have no easy time of it. It is gratifying to know that the towns in the smaller towns have been able to organize strong teams, and the competition will be very keen. The season will open in Peterborough on May 7th with two games. Bridgenorth will try conclusions with the Old Country Wanderers, and on the same day Bethany will meet the Y.M.C.A. here.

BURNS THE FAVORITE; BURNS THE WINNER

Outran Belland by Some 250 Yards on Saturday.

As was reported in Saturday's issue, Burns beat Belland in the five mile footrace by some 250 yards, covering the distance against a strong cross wind in 32 seconds. Burns ended in fine style, the result of careful training.

The race attracted quite a crowd, and Burns was the favourite, odds of two to one being given freely; in fact Belland's supporters would take nothing less. The race was two and a half miles along the Lakefield road and back, ending at Madill's corner. "Paddy" Carroll has a challenge out for Burns over the same course on Saturday.

BOWLING-ON-THE-GREEN.

The Lawn Bowling Club will meet in the Ontario Bank Chambers tomorrow night at 8 o'clock. All members are requested to be present.

FOOTBALL.

The Y.M.C.A. team held a meeting Saturday night in the Y.M.C.A. building, at which a large number of the players were present. The boys are enthusiastic and will get into practice this week, the first being held Wednesday night, from 6 to 8 in the Central Park. Mr. A. Noble, the team's representative in the Midland League, presented a report of the league meeting held earlier in the day, and said that the season gave promise of being most successful. As a means of raising funds, a concert will be held in the near future, and a committee composed of Messrs. Campb ll. Harding, Anderson, Merrell, Laing and Williamson was appointed to arrange details. It was decided that two balls, one a league and the other a practice ball, be purchased, and the secretary was authorized to arrange for the purchase of jerseys. The regular practice evenings will be Wednesday and Friday, and it is expected the practice will be held at the Oval. A meeting of the Executive and Concert Committees will be held in the Association parlours on Wednesday evening.

BASEBALL.

Lindsay Baseball Club has organized again for the season, and promises to put a fast nine in the field this year. The Club will enter the Midland League, and representatives will attend the meeting to be held in Port Hope on Tuesday. The Post says:—Among those who will likely be seen on the green this year are—Messrs. Will Cinnamon, Bert Menzies, Herb Workman, Norman McGill, L. Silver, G. Little, G. Miller, F. Brooks, N. Menzies, W. Stalker, H. Soanes, P. O'Neill, J. Cinnamon, B. Meagher, Ford Moynes and a number of other players. The boys are going in for the game with a determination to spread Lindsay's baseball fame abroad.

Oshawa is to have a team in the Midland League this season, and from all accounts it is to be a strong one, as Manager Galbraith already has his line out for some well known players who can deliver the goods.—Reformer.

* * *

George street Young Men's Guild will meet to-morrow night at the Y.M.C.A. at 8 o'clock to discuss baseball prospects for the season. All the young men of the church interested in the game are invited to be present.

LACROSSE.

Oshawa is apparently sick of the policy of last year's club, and the Reformer moralizes thus: "What we want here in Oshawa is a team composed of bona fide residents, not the summer visitor, and we think that from the material developed last year with proper coaching, such a team can be placed on the field and make a respectable showing. One thing is certain that such a team could always be depended upon to do their best, which is more than could be said of the team which represented Oshawa last year."

The Owen Sound Times says:—"Miles McDonough arrived on Monday and will wear the Owen Sound colours this season. McDonough is a big, heavy home player. Last year he played in the senior ranks with Port Hope. He is an old Peterborough boy and personally a gentleman. He has accepted a situation at the Patterson House."

SPRINTING.

Mr. A. J. Burns wishes, through the Examiner, to thank the officials of the race on Saturday: Messrs. Shaw, Duncan and Anderson, Judges, and Dr. Bridd, referee; also his managers, Messrs. Rowland and Joyce.

MINE WORKES WIN.

Decision of Board of Conciliation of Coal Strike Commission.

Philadelphia, Pa., April 18.—The Board of Conciliation created by the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission, which has been for months considering the question of whether the several increases in wages granted the men in the Schuylkill region, as the result of the strike of 1900 and 1902, shall be calculated on the gross or net earnings, made an award Saturday which is virtually a victory for the mine workers. The board decided that the advances granted in 1900 and 1902 shall be added to the gross earnings, and that the percentage to which the contract miners are entitled under sliding scale fixed by the strike commissioners, shall be calculated on the net earnings. The award dates from April 1.

THE FISHING SEASON OF NINETEEN THREE.

Reported on by Overseers From Peterborough County.

The Season a Successful one Generally Few Violations of the Fishing Season Reported.

Mr. S. T. Bastedo, Deputy Commissioner of Fisheries, has just submitted his report of the department to Hon. F. R. Latchford, Fisheries Commissioner, of Ontario, and the report has been published.

A considerable portion of the publication is devoted to the reports of Overseers, and those from Peterborough county are most satisfactory. They are given below:—

Overseer Yellard, Peterborough, reports that the fishing was exceptionally good during the past season, the catch being equal to, if not greater than, the previous year. Two cases of illegal fishing came to his notice, and the parties were fined in each case, which was a warning to others to refrain from breaking the law. He confiscated several nets which were destroyed.

He is of the opinion that if the water could be regulated so that it would not rise and fall during the spawning season there would be no need of re-stocking the waters, as the spawn deposited would hatch and mature, which would give ample fishing for all who cared to fish. He recommends that steps be taken to exterminate the catfish that are becoming so plentiful, and are so destructive on the spawn of bass and maskinonge, and suggests that hoop net licenses be granted to be fished under the surveillance of an overseer.

The law regarding the running of sawdust in the streams has been well observed.

Overseer Moore, Lakefield, reports that the catch was not as large as last season, perhaps owing to the coolness of the season. Many tourists visited the lakes during the summer and had fair catches of bass and maskinonge. The law had been well observed both as to close season and the number of fish caught daily by tourists. He suggests that the number of bass that may be caught by any one person in a day be changed to 6, and 2 maskinonge and as in previous reports again suggest that non-resident tourists should pay a small license fee. Most of them that he has talked with express a willingness to pay towards the expense of re-stocking the waters and better protection of the fish.

He recommends that the use of spears be entirely prohibited. At present they are used to kill suckers, and as the maskinonge spawn about the same time that the suckers are running he is of the opinion that a number of maskinonge are killed at that time.

Overseer Shewen, Apsley, reports that there was an increase in the catch of fish for the past year on account of an influx of American tourists. All fish caught were used for home consumption. He visited the different camps and cautioned the parties about catching more fish than they could consume, and the result was that the settlers in the vicinity were given all surplus fish, and none were wasted.

The year before he was appointed overseer he counted over 100 black bass lying rotting on the shore of Long Lake, Township of Burleigh, at one camp. He has patrolled his district at different intervals to see that the close season was duly observed.

He had reason to believe that illegal fishing was carried on in October at Trout Lake, Township of Burleigh. He immediately visited the camp and lake, but found no nets.

No damage had been done to fish by dumping mill refuse in the streams. There are no fishways, but he would recommend one to be placed between Gold Lake and Eagle Lake, and another between Eagle and Deer Lakes.

He had a small grant some four years ago to place some parent fish in Loon and Little Wolf Lakes, and is pleased to say that the result has proved satisfactory. The settlers are now catching fair sized bass.

The Americans, who are now coming more frequently and in greater numbers to this district, have asked "why the Government do not place fish in more of the pretty and numerous lakes which are now devoid of game fish."

There are two lakes, Wolf and Crab Lakes, Township of Anstruther, both suitable for bass, and they certainly ought to be stocked with bass and salmon trout. It might be done at no great expense.

Overseer Nichols, Hall's Bridge, reports that the quantity of bass and maskinonge caught during the season was about the same as last year, but as the number of tourists was about double, the individual catch, especially of bass, was correspondingly smaller. Although the fishermen are becoming more expert and have tackle, and the guides are better acquainted with the fishing grounds, the catches were, as a rule, smaller in number than last year.

This decrease may be accounted for by the rapid lowering of the water levels at the various dams after the spring freshets. In this way millions of bass and lunge spawn are left to die on the shores and in the drowned lands every spring. The spawn is destroyed also by catfish, eels, suckers and other coarse fish. But the greatest cause of decrease is the ever-increasing number of American tourists who come to this locality year after year. Their number has doubled during the last three years, and as new railroad and steamboat lines are being added every year, it is reasonable to expect that the Kawartha Lakes will become more popular and the number of fishermen will rapidly increase. Thus it is only a matter of a few years when the black bass in these waters will be exterminated, and the large revenue derived from the the tourist traffic will be lost to the district, unless the waters are restocked with bass.

The close seasons were very well observed, very little illegal fishing being attempted. Several spears and trawling lines were taken, and the offenders dealt with, as mentioned in his monthly reports. The extension of the time prohibiting the sale and barter of bass and lunge has done much to suppress illegal fishing.

The mill owners have taken every precaution to prevent the pollution of the waters by mill refuse.

There are no fishways on his division.

He submits the following recommendations, which he believes would greatly benefit the division under his charge:

The waters should be re-stocked with black bass.

The chief lakes of his division are Pigeon, Chemong, Buckhorn, Deer, and Lovesick Lakes, which form a connected chain from Bobcaygeon to Burleigh Falls, being in part a part of the Trent Valley Waterway. On these lakes are situated four large summer resorts, at Bobcaygeon, Chemong, Buckhorn and Burleigh Falls, which cater to the tourist trade. The hotel registers show a daily average of from fifty to eighty guests at each resort during the summer months. Several steamers are engaged in carrying these people from point to point, and each resort gives employment to from twenty to thirty guides during the season, and altogether these summer visitors leave a great deal of money in this locality. Their number, too, is steadily increasing, having doubled during the last three years. So many fishermen are a heavy drain on the waters, and the black bass, which are the chief attraction to the angler, are becoming scarcer year by year. Unless some means are taken to re-stock the waters, this district will soon lose a large and profitable summer trade. These waters, and especially Deer Lake and Deer Bay are admirably adapted for breeding grounds.

The daily maximum catch of bass should be reduced to eight. This is as many as can be used, and if more are caught they are allowed to spoil in the ice houses and have to be thrown away, or it is a temptation to sell them.

The season on Rice Lake is reported on by Overseer Skeen, who reports that the season as a whole has not been as good for maskinonge fishing as last year, owing in a great extent to the prevalence of very high winds, which kept the water in a condition that was not favourable for trawling, and caused the tourist to seek the more sheltered places and angle with the rod and line for bass, on which they had excellent results. There was an increase in the number of tourists who visited these waters during the year, and he looks for a much greater number during the coming year, as Rice Lake is fast becoming far and wide as a sportsman's paradise. The close seasons and other regulations of the Department were well observed. There are no fishways in his district. He is convinced that a lot of spawn is lost annually through the rapid lowering of the water during the spring, and suggests that some means be adopted to overcome this.

Story of Cabinet Reconstruction at Ottawa Denied From An Authoritative Source—Mr. Sutherland's Health Good—Hon. James Sutherland Denies the Stories Told Regarding Himself.

Ottawa, April 18.—The reports in circulation respecting Cabinet reconstruction and the retirement of Sir Richard Cartwright, Mr. Sifton and Mr. Fisher from the Government are wholly without foundation. It is learned from an authoritative source that there is not a vestige of truth in the reports. In regard to Hon. James Sutherland, so far as his colleagues are aware, his health is not such as to necessitate his leaving the Government.

Hon. James Sutherland's Denial.

Woodstock, April 18.—Hon James Sutherland on Saturday afternoon emphatically denied the report, which has been given circulation, that he intended to retire from the Cabinet. He has not been in so good health in years as at present. He has been absent from Ottawa for a few days merely for the purpose of attending to some urgent business of a private character.

SEALING VESSELS LOST?

Two of the Victoria Fleet Are Now Considerably Overdue.

Victoria, B. C., April 18.—It is feared that the Victoria sealing schooners Triumph and Diana have foundered at sea, as the name board of the Triumph has been found at Quatsino Sound, and both schooners are considerably overdue at Clayoquot, where they usually land their catch of skins. All the other schooners of the fleet have reported. The Triumph was the pioneer of the Victoria fleet, having been built at Shelburne, N. S., about thirty years ago. She carries a crew of twenty-five white men and several Indians. The owners express no uneasiness yet as to her failure to report.

The Kite Is Missing.

St. John's, Nfld., April 18.—Fears are entertained for the safety of the sealing steamer Kite, the smallest vessel of the fleet. The Kite has not been reported by any steamers which have arrived here lately, and the outlook respecting her is regarded as serious, and especially as the weather is extremely severe. She had on board 120 men.

Toronto Man in Trouble.

Belleville, April 18.—George Calder, a canvasser for a Toronto firm of picture enlargers, is in trouble in this city. Saturday he called at the house of L. R. Carlette, and while left alone for a short time took a pearl brooch and departed. Afterwards he was found trying to dispose of the brooch at a jewelry store and was arrested. In the police court a charge of theft was registered against him, but the magistrate thought he was acting queerly and remanded him for two weeks for examination as to his sanity.

To Port Dover.

Ottawa, April 18.—Saturday night a party of officers from the Intelligence Department left for Port Dover, where they will begin a topographical survey and work west toward Lake Huron. The party is in charge of Capt. W. B. Anderson, and consists of Lieuts. Wright, Van Tuyl and Stevenson, and Staff-Sergeant Brown.

Ate Poisoned Candies.

Kingston, April 18.—Rev. J. H. Edmison, a recent Queen's graduate, stationed west of Toronto, and his wife, had a trying experience a few days ago. They were poisoned through eating fruit chocolates, and only that antidotes were administered their condition would have been precarious. They were quite ill for a time.

Cheese Market.

London, April 18.—The quotations for Canadian cheese are: Choicest, 49s to 50s; finest, 48s. The improved demand of last week has fallen away and prices have weakened about a shilling per cwt., the reduction being due to a cable announcing a large shipment from Canada.

A Mother's Recommendation.

I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for a number of years, and have no hesitancy in saying that it is the best remedy for coughs, colds, and croup that I have ever used in my family. I have not words to express my confidence in this remedy. Mrs. J. A. Moore, North Star, Mich. For sale by all druggists.

A PASTOR'S SUICIDE.

While Congregation Gathered He Put An End to Life With Revolver.

Montreal, April 18.—A tragic affair was reported last evening. The congregation of the Maisonneuve Presbyterian Church gathered as usual, but the pastor, the Rev. Colin Duguid, did not appear, and when the deacons went to his residence near the church the pastor was found dying in his study with a revolver on the floor. He had shot himself in the head and expired in a very few minutes. Rev. Mr. Duguid was a young Scotchman, and no reasons are given for the suicide.

One Killed; Many Injured.

Indianapolis, Ind., April 18.—While the city fire department, reinforced by companies from the suburbs, was being taxed to its utmost, fighting a fire in the Occidental Hotel yesterday morning, an alarm was turned in from St. Vincent's Hospital. When the first fire company arrived one life had been lost and several persons had been severely injured in a panic.

Harriet Leahy jumped from the fourth floor and was instantly killed. Miss Kate Beach is believed to be fatally injured. She fell from the third floor, while trying to escape by means of a rope made of bedclothing. Sister Superior Stella, Wm. Schneider and Henry Nicholas suffered from shock. All had just been operated upon. Several other nurses and attendants were more or less bruised.

The panic that raged on the third and fourth floors continued until long after the fire had been extinguished.

The loss by the fire in the Occidental Hotel is estimated at $75,000.

Brakemen Lose Lives.

Albany, N. Y., April 18.—Frank Shear and Frank Graham, West Shore brakemen, were burned to death in the wreckage of a rear-end collision between freight trains of the West Shore and Delaware and Hudson roads, at the junction of the two roads on the outskirts of this city Saturday night. Before assistance could be offered both men were burned to death.

Explosion on Warship.

Paris, April 18.—By the explosion of a small projectile in the magazine of the cruiser Forbin Saturday five members of the crew were injured. Fortunately the other explosives did not become ignited.

McPherson & McGregor

(Successors to the F. R. J. McPherson Co.)

Take this opportunity of thanking the public for the very liberal patronage accorded the late firm. Trade has been so satisfactory that Mr McGrego decided to increase his interest in the business and, as a consequence, the firm will be know hereafter as McPHERSON & McGREGOR.

Our specialties are:—

Sanitary Plumbing
Sanitary Ventilating
Steam and Hot Water Heating
Electrical Wiring and Supplies

We wish to draw the attention of the public to a few of the many complimentary testimonials received by Mr. McGregor for the high quality of the work he has installed in Plumbing and Heating:—

From the Firm of Bennet & Wright, Plumbing, Heating and Electrical Contractors, Toronto.

This is to certify that Duncan McGregor has been in our employment steady for about fifteen years and during that time we have found him to be steady, honest and trustworthy. He has given every satisfaction as a practical mechanic in each of the following branches: Plumbing, steam and gas fitting, also electrical and conduit work, and for some time has had charge of some of our largest contracts with satisfactory results.

From Illsley & Horn, General Contractors, Toronto.

The bearer, Mr. Duncan McGregor, had charge of the electric wiring at the King Edward Hotel Building. The job was a large and complicated one and by the way Mr. McGregor handled the work he proved himself a mechanic of more than ordinary ability. We unhesitatingly recommend him as a first class mechanic to anyone needing his services.

From Mr. J. Ross Robertson, of the Evening Telegram.

Mr. Duncan McGregor, who has been connected with the Bennet & Wright Co. for some years, and who has superintended the work of plumbing and heating for the Bennet & Wright Co., is not only in my opinion, but also that of my architect, a fully competent mechanic. His work, my architect informs me, has been most satisfactory. Any thing that has come under my own supervision has been likewise satisfactory.

An Extract Taken from the June Number of Domestic Engineering.

During the recent convention of the Canadian Electrical Association held in the King Edward Hotel, a thorough examination was made of all the electrical work in the hotel, and it was pronounced second to none on the continent. Therefore, great credit is due Mr. Duncan MacGregor, who superintended the entire conduit, electrical and power system for the firm of Bennet & Wright, of this city, who were the contractors for all the different branches of the electrical work in the new hotel.

Purified by Suffering

BY MARY J. HOLMES,

CHAPTER XLI.

There was to be a Christmas tree at St John's, and all the week the church had been the scene of much confusion. But the work was over now, the church was swept and dusted, the tree with its gay adornings was in its place, the little ones who had hindered so much, were gone, and were their mothers, and Helen only tarried with the organ boy to play the Christmas Carol which Katy was to sing alone, the children joining in the chorus, as they had been trained to do. It was very quiet there, and pleasant, with the fading sunlight streaming through the chancel window, lighting up the cross above it, and falling softly on the wall where the evergreens were hung with the sacred words, "Peace on earth and good will towards men." And Helen felt the peace stealing over her as she sat down by the register for a moment ere going to the organ loft where the boy was waiting for her. Not even the remembrance of the dark war-cloud hanging over the land disturbed her then, as her thoughts went backward eighteen hundred years to Bethlehem's manger and the little Child whose birth the angels sang. And as she thought, the Child seemed to be with her, a living presence to which she prayed, leaning her head upon the railing of the pew in front, and asking Him to keep her in the perfect peace she felt around her now. For Mark Ray, too, she prayed, asking God to keep him in safety wherever he might be, whether in the lonely watch, or in some house of God, where the Christmas carols would be sung and the Christmas story told.

As she lifted up her head her hand struck against the pocket of her dress, where lay the letter Fred Gale to her an hour or so ago — Fred's letter which she had put aside to read at a more convenient season.

Taking it out, she tore open the envelope, starting suddenly as another letter, soiled and unsealed, met her eye. She read Fred's first, and then, with a throbbing heart, which as yet would not believe, she took up Mark's, understanding now much that was before mysterious to her. John's call came to her mind, and though she was unwilling to charge so foul a wrong upon that young lady, she could find no other solution to the mystery. There was a glow of indignation—Helen had scarcely been mortal without it—but that passed away in pity for the misguided girl, and in joy at the happiness opening so broadly before her. That Mark would come to Silverton she had no hope, but he would write—his letter, perhaps, was even then on the way, and kissing the one she held, she hid it in her bosom and went up to where the organ-boy had for several minutes been kicking at stools and books, and whistling Old John Brown by way of attracting attention. The boy was in a hurry, and asked in so forlorn a tone, "Is we going to play?" that Helen answered good-humoredly, "Just a few minutes, Billy. I want to try the carol and the opening, which I've hardly played at all."

With an air of submission Bill took his post and Helen began to play, but she could only see before her, "I have loved you ever since that morning when I put the lilies in your hair," and played so out of time and tune that Bill asked, "What makes 'em go so bad?"

"I can't play now. I'm not in the mood," she said. "I shall feel better by and by. You can go home if you like."

Billy needed no second bidding, but catching up his cap, ran down the stairs, and out into the porch, just as up the steps a young man came hurriedly.

"Hallo, boy," he cried, grasping the collar of Bill's roundabout and holding him fast. "Who's in the church?"

"Darn yer, Jim Sykes," you let me be, or I'll——" the boy began, but when he saw his captor was not Jime Sykes, but a tall man, wearing a soldier's uniform, he changed his tone, and answered civilly, "I thought you was Jim Sykes, the biggest bully in town, who is allus hectorin' us boys. Nobody is there but she—Miss Lennox—up where the organ is," and having given the desired information, Bill ran off, wondering first if it wasn't Miss Helen's beau, and wondering next, in case she should some time get married in church, if he wouldn't fee the organ-boy as well as the sexton. "He orto," Bill soliloquized, "for I've about blowed my gizzard out sometimes, when she and Mrs Cameron sings To Deum."

Meanwhile Mark Ray, who had driven fast to the farm-house in quest of Helen, entered the church, and stole noiselessly up the stairs to where Helen sat in the dim light, reading again the precious letter withheld from her so long. She had moved her stool nearer to the window, and her back was towards the door, so that she neither saw nor heard, nor suspected anything, until Mark, bending over her so as to see what she had in her hand as well as the tear she had dropped upon it, clasped both his arms around her neck, and drawing her face over back, kissed her fondly, calling her his darling, and saying to her, as she tried to struggle from him:

"I know I have a right to—call you darling, by that tear on the letter, and the look upon your face. Dear Helen, we have found each other at last."

It was so unexpected that Helen could not speak, but she let her head rest on his bosom, where he had laid it, and her hand crept into his, so that he was answered, and for a moment he only kissed and caressed the fair girl he knew now was his own. They could not talk together very long, for Helen must go home; but he made good use of the time he had, telling her many things, and then asking her a question which made her start away from him as she replied, "No, no, oh! no, not to-night—not so soon as that!"

"And why not, Helen?" he asked with the manner of one who was not to be denied. "Why not to-night, so there need be no more misunderstanding? I'd rather leave you as my wife than my betrothed. Mother will like it better. I hinted it to her, and she said there was room for you in her love. It will make me a better man, and a better soldier, if I can say 'my wife,' as other soldiers do. You don't know what a charm there is in that word, Helen. It keeps a man from sin, and if I should die, I would rather you should bear my name, and share my fortune. Will you, Helen, when the ceremonies are closed, will you go up to that altar and pledge your vows to me. I cannot wait till to-morrow: my leave of absence expires to-day. I must go back to-night, but you must first be mine."

Helen was shaking as with a chill, but she made him no reply, and wrapping her cloak and furs about her, Mark led her down to the sleigh, and taking his seat beside her, drove back to the farm-house where the family were waiting for her. Katy, to whom Mark first communicated his desire, warmly espoused his cause, and that went far towards reassuring Helen who for some time past had been learning to look up to Katy as to an older sister, so sober, so earnest, so womanly had Katy grown since Wilford went away.

"It is so sudden, and people will talk," Helen said, knowing when she said it how little she cared for people, and smiling at Katy's reply.

"They may as well talk about you a while as me. It is not so bad when once you are used to it."

After Katy, Aunt Betsy was Mark's best advocate. It is true this was not just what she had expected when Helen was married. The infair which Wilford had still declined was still in Aunt Betsy's mind; but that, she reflected, might be yet. If Mark went back on the next train there could be no proper wedding party until his return, when the loaves of frosted cake, and the baked fowls she had seen in imagination should be there in real, tangible form, and as she expressed it, they would have a "high." Accordingly she threw herself into the scale beginning to balance in favor of Mark; and when at last old Whitey stood at the door, to take the family to the church, Helen sat upon the lounge half bewildered, while Katy assured her that she could play the voluntary, even if she had not looked at it, that she could lead the children without the organ, and in short do anything Helen was expected to do except go to the altar with Mark.

"That I leave for you," and she playfully kissed Helen's forehead, as she left the room, looking back when she reached the door, and charging the lovers not to forget to come in their absorption of each other.

St John's was crowded that night, the children occupying the front seat, with looks of expectancy upon their faces, as they studied the heavily laden tree, the boys wondering if that ball, or whistle, or wheelbarrow was for them, and the girls appropriating the tastefully dressed dolls, showing so conspicuously among the dark green foliage. The Barlows were rather late, for upon Uncle Ephraim devolved the duty of seeing to the license, and as he had no seat in that house, his arrival was only known by Aunt Betsy's elbowing her way to the front, and near to the Christmas tree which she had helped to dress, just as she had helped to trim the church.

Aunt Betsy elbowed her way up the middle aisle, her face wearing a very important and knowing look, especially when Uncle Ephraim's tall figure bent for a moment under the hemlock bows, and then disappeared in the little vestry room, where he held a private consultation with the rector. That she knew something her neighbors didn't was evident, but she kept it to herself, turning her head occasionally to look up at the organ where Katy was presiding. Others too, there were, who turned their heads as the soft music began to fill the church, and the heavy base rolled up the aisles, making the floor tremble beneath their feet and sending a thrill through every vein. It was a skillful hand which swept the keys that night, for Katy played with her whole soul—not the voluntary there before her in printed form, nor any one thing she had ever heard, but taking parts of many things, and mingling them with strains of her own improvising, she filled the house as it had never been filled before, playing a soft, sweet refrain when she thought of Helen, then bursting into louder, fuller tones when she remembered Bethlehem's Child, and the song the angels sang, and then as she recalled her own sad life since she knelt at the altar a happy bride, the organ notes seemed much like human sobs, now rising to a stormy pitch of passion, wild and uncontrolled, and then dying out as dies the summer wind after a fearful storm. Awed and wonder-struck the organ-boy looked at Katy as she played, almost forgetting his part of the performance in his amazement, and saying to himself, when she had finished:

"Guy, ain't she a brick?" and whispering to her, "Didn't we go that strong?"

The people had wondered where Helen was, as, without the aid of music, Katy led the children in their carols, and this wonder increased when it was whispered round that "Miss Lennox had come, and was standing with a man back by the register."

After this Aunt Betsy grew very calm, and could enjoy the distributing of the gifts, going up herself two or three times, and wondering why anybody should think of her, a good-for-nothing old woman. The skates and the smelling bottle both went safely to Sylvia and John, while Mrs. Deacon Bannister looked radiant when her name was called, and she was made the recipient of a jar of butternut pickles such as only Aunt Betsy Barlow could make."

"Miss Helen Lennox. A soldier in uniform from one of her Sunday school scholars."

the words rang out loud and clear, as the rector held up the sugar toy before the amused audience, who turned to look at Helen, blushing so painfully, and trying to hold back the man in a soldier's dress who went quietly up the aisle, receiving the gift with a bow and smile which turned the heads of half the ladies near him, and then went back to Helen, to whom he whispered something which made her cheek grow brighter than they were before, while she dropped her eyes modestly.

"Who is he?" a woman asked, touching Aunt Betsy's shoulder.

"Captain Ray, from New York," was the answer, as Aunt Betsy gave to her dress a little broader sweep, and smoothed the bow she had tried to tie beneath her chin, just as Mattie Tuldis had tied it on that memorable opera night.

It was not in Aunt Betsy's nature to keep her secret till this time, and as the exercises were about to close, she whispered it to her neighbor, who whispered it to hers, who whispered it to hers, until nearly all the audience knew of it, and kept their seats after the benediction was pronounced.

At a sign from the Rector, Katy went with her mother to the altar, followed by Uncle Ephraim, his wife, and Aunt Betsy, while Helen, throwing off the cloud she had worn upon her head, and giving it, with her cloak and fur, into Billy's charge, took Mark's arm, and with beating heart and burning cheeks, passed between the sea of eyes, fixed so curiously upon her, up to where Katy once stood on the June morning, when she had been the bride. Not now, as then, were aching hearts present at the bridal. No Marian Hazelton fainted by the door; no Morris felt the world grow dark and desolate as the marriage vows were spoken, and no sister doubted if it were all right, and would end in happiness.

The ceremony lasted but a few moments, and then the astonished audience pressed around the bride, offering their kindly congratulations, and proving to Mark that the bride he had won was dear to others as well as to himself. Lovingly he drew her hand beneath his arm, fondly he looked down upon her as he led her back to the chair by the register, making her sit down while he tied on her cloak, and adjusted the fur about her neck.

"Handy and gentle as a woman," was the verdict pronounced upon him by the female portion of the congregation, as they passed out into the street, talking of the ceremony, and contrasting Helen's husband with the haughty Wilford who was not a favorite with them.

Four hours he had to stay, and they were spent in talking of himself, of Wilford, and of Morris, and in planning Helen's future. Of course she would spend a portion of her time at the farm-house, he said: but his mother had a claim upon her, and if was his wish that she should be in New York as much as possible.

Swiftly the last moments went by, and a "Merry Christmas" was said by one and another as they took their seats at the plentiful repast Aunt Betsy had provided, Mark feasting more on Helen's face than on the viands spread before him. It was hard for him to leave her; hard for her to let him go; but the duty was imperative, and so when at last the frosty air grew keener as the small hours of night crept on, he stood with his arms about her, nor thought it unworthy of a soldier that his own tears mingled with hers, as he bade her good-bye, kissing her again and again, and calling her his precious wife, whose memory would make his camp life brighter, and shorten the days of absence. There was no one with them, when at last Mark's horse dashed from the yard over the creaking snow, leaving Helen alone on the doorstep, with the glittering stars shining above her head, and her husband's farewell kiss upon her lips.

"When shall we meet again?" she sobbed, gazing up at the clear blue sky, as if to find the answer there.

But only the December wind sweeping down from the steep hillside, and blowing across her forehead made reply to that questioning, as she waited till the last faint sound of Mark Ray's bells died away in the distance, and then, shivering with cold, re-entered the farm-house.

Profits of Literary Piracy.

The octogenarian Mr. Charles Henry Clarke, just dead, netted a clear £18,000 out of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." That was in the evil old days when literary piracy was rampant on both sides of the Atlantic and "moral rights" were of less value than waste paper. But Mr. Clarke, having ideas of his own, took the liberty of anticipating copyright conventions by sending Mrs. Beecher Stowe a thousand guineas. Had he acted within the four corners of the law the author's check would have been drawn for precisely £0 0s. 0d.—London Outlook.

Could Not Lie On Her Left Side.

WAS TROUBLED WITH PAIN IN HER HEART FOR SIX YEARS.

Expected Her Friends Would Find Her Dead.

Mrs. C. Bondreau, Campbellton, N.B., was completely cured by

MILBURN'S Heart and Nerve Pills.

She tells of her experience in the following letter: "I was troubled with a pain in my heart and weakness for six years. Most of the time I could not lie on my left side. I consulted a doctor but got no relief and was completely discouraged. I did not think I would live long and expected my friends would find me dead. A friend brought me a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and I took them to please her, not thinking they would do me any good. I had not used half the box when I commenced to feel myself getting better and by the time I had taken two boxes I was completely cured and can recommend them to all sufferers from heart trouble."

RED

Red is the color of danger, whether on the semaphore or on the skin. When the face is reddened by eruptions, when boils break out on the body, or the angry red of sores and ulcers is displayed in the flesh, it is nature's danger signal. The blood is obstructed and tainted by impurities, and there can be no safety until the blood is made pure.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery purifies the blood, and removes the effete matter which clogs and corrupts it. It cures pimples, boils, eczema, scrofula, sores, ulcers and other consequences of impure blood.

"I feel greatly thankful for what your medicine has done for me," writes Mrs. Chas. Hood, of Kalkaska, Mich. "I suffered with scrofula of the head for twelve years. Tried every kind of medicine that I heard of but found no cure. Every one that looked at my head said they never saw anything like it. The last doctor I doctored with before applying to you I got worse every day. Was so miserable that I was unable to do any work at all. After taking two or three bottles of your Golden Medical Discovery and using the local treatment you prescribed for me, I was cured and my head was entirely free from scrofula."

Accept no substitute for Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. There is no other medicine which is "just as good" for diseases of the blood and the eruptions which are caused by the blood's impurity.

FREE. Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of customs and mailing only. Send thirty-one one-cent stamps for the book in paper covers, or fifty stamps for the cloth-bound volume. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

NO SECRET.

There is no secret about Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil. The label tells the whole story. There is a knack in making it. The only secret about it is the secret of its success.

This year, when cod liver oil is very scarce and high, all kinds of cheap, inferior oils are used to take its place, and all sorts of things presented as substitutes. Think of petroleum being taken as a substitute for cod liver oil!—too absurd. Think of the so-called wines, extracts and cordials of cod liver oil!—they are simply the shadow without the substance; no food value in them.

Scott's Emulsion—"The Old Reliable" is the same yesterday, to-day and forever.

Its quality and purity can be absolutely depended upon at all times.

Sales to noon 117,600

Messrs. McMillan & Maguire, stock-brokers, Hunter street, this morning received the following letter from their New York agents:

The stock market this morning was featureless with the exception of U. S. Steel Preferred and A.C.P. The former sold up [illegible] on buying by Schoenberg, who are usually large traders in this stock. Boston interests were reported as buyers of A.C.P. Traders on the floor report to their offices that some good buying appeared this morning, though many are holding back waiting the decision in the Northern Securities case. It is the general opinion that the market will advance as soon as the decision is handed down, whether favourable to Harriman or otherwise. London was reported as buying moderately. The street is still bullish on the Erie issues. Tractions and A.C.P. are also expected to advance with an upward movement in the market. We favour the purchase of all standard stocks on reactions for a turn.—Floyd Crawford & Co.

From Floyd Crawford & Co., New York and Chicago, to Messrs. McMillan & Maguire:

Chicago.—Valentine has been a good bidder in wheat but rather a poor buyer. The selling has been scattered and a general recovery would not surprise us. —F. C. Co.

Chicago, 18th.—Bad reports are coming from Missouri and Illinois where crops were considered good. Trade so far has been extremely light, absolutely nothing doing. Logan and Bryan bought old July Wheat, Pringle sold old July at 87 3-4.

Liverpool close, wheat 1-4 lower, corn unchanged.

BOBCAYGEON.

Later particulars of the disastrous Rockland Hotel fire in Bobcaygeon, show evidences of a dastardly incendiarism. The Independent speaking of the disabling of the fire engine, says:

"Mr. T. J. Robinson was the first to reach the hall, followed by Engineer Moffatt, and the torch was applied to the engine. In a few moments steam was escaping from the blow out, and the engineer found that the tap had been partly turned, emptying the water from the boiler. The fire was immediately drawn but not before the dry pipes had been injured, and the safety plug in the crown sheet of the boiler that was filled with lead, was burnt out. Every effort was made to make repairs, but although the boiler was got to hold water the leakage was too great to make steam. A fall of soft snow covered the ground, and the track of a man was found and traced from the hall to the dam. The back doors had been forced, and it was perfectly clear that the engine had been deliberately disabled.

"Mid-day Tuesday five dogs from the neighbourhood of the fire were either killed or suffered from poison. The supposition is that the poison was placed in the Rockland yard for the big watch dog "Jumbo."

* * *

One of the greatest troubles to housekeepers, is the servant problem. Girls to do housework are literally not to be got for love or money, says the Bobcaygeon Independent. They do not appear to be either grown or educated. Girls cannot be even got for love, for the simple reason that girls do not know how to do housework. They go to factories, stores, offices, anywhere but the kitchen. You will find girls everywhere that you would least expect them but you will never find them in the house, unless they are pounding a piano, or entertaining to a pink tea. The servant problem is in a great measure the cause of the small birth rate. The ordinary wage earner cannot afford to pay the wages demanded, and those who can afford the wages cannot get the help.

TRENTON.

Young Furnia, who was loitering last Saturday afternoon in Forbes basket factory, near the C.O.R. station, put his finger under a wood splitting machine and it was cut off instantly. He put his hand in further to get the finger and his hand was cut off at the wrist. Dr. Kidd was called to dress the wound.—Courier.

CAMPBELLFORD.

Mr. C. Aggett has moved to Peterborough where he will fill the position of distributing agent for the Deering Manufacturing Company and the McCormick Manufacturing Company. He expects to have about 100 cars of farm implements to distribute through this section this season. —Despatch.

ORILLIA.

The municipal power and electric light plant was put out of business by a break in the dam, the estimated cost of repairing which is $7,000. The Orillia Times says:—"The town's revenue from light and power amounts to $1,500 per month, and the cutting off of this revenue means the addition of one mill to this year's taxes for every month that the plant is idle. What the ultimate cost of repairing the dam will be it is impossible to foretell, certainly the total expense will be a large item. The dam was guaranteed for three years by Contractor Patriarche, and the town will dispute his right to any money held back until the costs of repair are ascertained. Mr. Patriarche went to the Rapids on Tuesday to see the extent of the damage."

BEWDLEY.

The Post Office at Bewdley had a narrow escape from going down the lake, as the ice jammed against it, raising the east end of it about three feet from its foundation. It looked so much like being a wreck that the contents of the Post Office and store were removed, but the ice receding the goods were replaced, though the ice is still being watched.

WARKWORTH.

Local interest in the new steam railway which is to serve this town is increasing, and the prospects for the early completion of the railway are thought to be excellent. The bill granting a charter to a company, the prominent directors of which are gentlemen resident in the towns to be affected by the new road, has been given its second reading, and there is now thought to be no very serious danger of the charter not being granted.—Journal.

FENELON FALLS.

The Haliburton train failed to come down on Monday as the road was under water at Burnt River. The water is high in the village and at the power house and slide the sight is simply magnificent. Billows of water pouring in every direction, over the slide, over the dam, over the falls, rushing from Sandford's wheel house and perhaps the most beautiful of all the solid perfect bank of amber coloured water which overflows Needler and Saddler's race and joins the foaming mass of waves below the slide. It is not Niagara, but it is a thing of sufficient beauty to hold one spell bound, and is at present more beautiful than it has been for years.

BUDGET OF BRITAIN

THE PREFERENCE ON WHEAT

Broomhall's Corn Trade Year Book Strongly Argues Against It—Morning Post's Opinion Is Somewhat Different on Tenor—Montague Bribery and Hutton-Neild Enquiries—"Musk Eggs" Now.

London, April 18.—(C.A.P.)—The London Chronicle learns on good authority that the salient points of the budget will be tax on imported timber, petroleum and kindred oils and silk. There will be an increased tax on sugar and a reimposition of the corn duty.

Britain's Wheat Needs.

London, April 18.—(C.A.P.)—Broomhall's Corn Trade Year Book, just published, estimates that in consequence of the unfavorable summer of 1903 only 3,500,000 quarters of English wheat will reach the mills, making necessary an import of 27,000,000 quarters foreign and colonial wheat. Ten years ago England took 70 per cent. of grain from the United States, while in 1903 it was only about 40 per cent., Argentina and Russia taking her place. In each 1,000 quarters, Canada sent 32.29, India 24.29 and Australia 8.60. With eight years ending 1903, the imports of wheat and flour from the countries within the Empire varied between 7 per cent. and 24 per cent. The total import, Broomhall says, illustrates the danger of a preferential tariff if the colonial and Indian crops failed. Arguing that a colonial preference fails in the case of Algeria, Broomhall asks what certainty there is of the modest preference of 2 shillings a quarter doing any good to the Canadian, Indian and Australian agriculturist if the grower on the North African coast with a preference of 12 shillings and 2 pence a quarter in the French markets, which are separated only by a narrow sea has not succeeded in ousting all competitors or greatly extending his hold on the French markets. Britain's imports from all countries for 1903 were 26,960,000 quarters. The corn tax reduced the British export trade of milled flour in 1901 by 467,000 sacks, the registration tax reducing it in 1903 by 259,000.

Canadian Wheat Best.

London, April 18.—(C.A.P.)—The Morning Post, referring to the suggested preference to Canadian wheat, points out the fact that at all the American exhibitions of the past ten years Canada carried off the chief prizes against much more numerous samples. The American development of Western Canada was based on a scientific principle. While ignorance made of the American West a great lone land, it says that all things favor its Canadian rival, who, if established as sole purveyor of wheat for the Mother Country, would be able to sell at a reduced rate.

Musk Eggs Now.

London, April 18.—(C. A. P.)—A telegraphic error, printed in an English paper on Saturday, referring to the G. T. Pacific, made a Dominion member state that the country to be traversed contained only "musk eggs and stunted pine trees."

The Montague Enquiry.

London, April 18.—(C.A.P.)—The Commission appointed to enquire into the charges of bribery against Hon. Dr. Montague opens at Melbourne to-day. G. P. Reid defends the Canadian. Alexander J. Peacock is a witness. Justice Hood of the Victorian Supreme Court is the sole Commissioner.

A board of inquiry appointed by the Government to investigate the Hutton Neild case sits at Sydney this week.

REPULSED WITH LOSS.

Hereros Kill Two German Officers and Seven Troopers.

Berlin, April 18.—A despatch from Col. Leutwein, governor of German Southwest Africa, reports that a superior force of Hereros attacked his column with losses.

The column was advancing on Oviumbo April 13, and was repulsed with loss. The column, however, returned to Otjosasu, as it was impossible to bring up munitions and attend to the wounded.

Two officers and seven troopers were killed and fourteen wounded in the fight, which lasted ten hours.

Dr. Smiles Dead.

London, April 18.—Samuel Smiles, LL.D., surgeon, journalist and railroad man, is dead. He was born at Haddington, Scotland, in 1812.

Samuel Smiles was best known to the world through his books on character building. Among his many published works are the following: "Lives of George and Robert Stephenson," "Self-Help, with Illustrations of Character and Conduct," "Duty," "Thrift," "Life and Labor," "Industrial Biography," "Men of Invention and Industry," and "Life of John Murray; A Publisher and His Friend." He was also a constant contributor to The Quarterly Review and other periodicals. "Self-Help" has been translated into seventeen languages, and was one of the most remarkable literary successes of the nineteenth century.

Acquitted of Murder.

Quebec, April 18.—A jury Saturday returned a verdict of not guilty in the charge of murder against Richard Murray, after one hour's consideration. Murray, who is 19 years of age, stands over 6 feet and weighs 230 pounds, was one of three men arrested for the death of Richard Mann last summer. Murray alone was held. He denied his guilt.

FROM BLACKFOOT LAND.

Facts About Northwest Indian Life—Some Prairie Curios. Jobin Tells of Missionary Work.

A healthy, weather-browned face, a manner bubbling over with enthusiasm and kindly courtesy, a sturdy, active frame that a trained athlete might admire—these are some of the attributes of Alexandre Silvio Jobin, a delightful French-Canadian missionary priest, who was recently interviewed when passing through Toronto.

Monsieur Jobin is back for a while from the Northwest, where his missionary "district" stretches from Winnipeg on the east to the Rocky Mountains on the west. He has brought with him a whole batch of Indian curios for Mr. James Morgan of Montreal.

One of the first was a long and imposing apron-like arrangement that went round the neck and hung down over the breast. "This is something we can't get any more," said Monsieur Jobin. "The Indians are getting lazy, and think these are too much trouble nowadays. They use these for the sun-dance and the war-dance. They have a long Indian name, which you are welcome to if you like, but I call them 'Freemason's aprons,' to save trouble. This belonged to a chief."

Some of the most interesting of Monsieur Jobin's curios are a number of bands worked in patterns with glass beads, and perfectly transparent. "People go wild after these," said he. They were certainly beautiful bits of work, showing no trace of any thread. So fine are the beads, that a needle will not go through them, and the Indians use a particular kind of sharp weed for the purpose.

Monsieur Jobin held up also some curiously worked patterns, beautifully designed.

"The boys make these patterns," he said. "You give them a piece of paper, and they will sit down on the floor and work out these by intertwining colored strips. It passes human imagination to think that these little Indians, without any instruction at all, can make such designs."

It is a mixed population that inhabits the wide Western lands where Monsieur Jobin and his fellow-missionaries work. There in Assiniboia is a colony of Belgians at St. Maurice Belgrade. All along the main line of the railway the population is English. Along the Arcole line are settlers from Ontario. At St. Antomy is a French-Canadian colony, while Icelanders, Russians, Jews and other nationalities also abound. The French-Canadians at St. Antony live in houses made of cut sods, like the farm buildings in Iceland, the Faroe Islands, and some of the Highlands and islands of Scotland. They are beautifully warm, and last about four years. "but," said Monsieur Jobin, "there is a very unpleasant thing about them in summer time. The snakes come through them, and make acquaintance with you in the house."

Two years ago Monsieur Jobin was on the Blackfoot Crossing Reserve, with the Blackfoot Indians. "They don't get civilized very much," he said. "Whatever we do for them now, we should feel the results of only in the generations to come."

It is the Crees who do the work of which the kindly priest has brought back such interesting specimens.

"Are there any adventures associated with these curios of yours?" asked the reporter.

"Well," answered Monsieur Jobin, "this cap you see—it isn't much of a cap?"

It certainly was not the sort of cap one would care to walk down Yonge street in on a Sunday morning, being a peculiar erection of feathers sticking up like a fence all around the edge. At the end of the cap were three little bells, and thereby hung a tale. It seemed that the particular band of Crees from whom this cap came were on the prairie one day, preparing for the sun-dance, when suddenly a dreadful thunderstorm came on. The man who was wearing the cap was struck dead. To appease the rage of the thunder-god, his fellows took the cap, and hung the bells on it, and stuck it up on a pole on the prairie, and made a great sacrifice. The poor, deluded Crees don't offer five cent pieces to the Great Spirit, but heap the best they have round the pole of sacrifice, and then go away and leave the good things to be taken by the Great Spirit at his leisure. "They just leave them there on the prairie to go to ruin," said Monsieur Jobin, "and we take them; and then, when they come in a few weeks' time and find they have gone, they have another dance, to show their gratitude to the Great Spirit for accepting their sacrifice. So it is satisfactory all round."

"The people who travel through the West don't see anything of the Indians if they stop in Winnipeg. The best way to see them is to take a rig and leave the cities, and go through the prairies on the reserves. Then they may see the ways of the Indians at their daily life."

"By the way," he added, "my Indian name is Minipoka, which means 'spoiled child,' because, when I first went among them, fresh from college, the Indians treated me so well, after their fashion."

Unique Bonus Asked.

The bonus idea has reached the limit in St. Thomas. Alma College, a ladies' seminary, directed by Methodists, is asking a subsidy of $15,000 to enable it to avoid closing the doors. The building is a handsome one, that would cost perhaps $50,000. It has been in existence for twenty years or more. The ratepayers are asked to pass a by-law to raise $15,000. The ground of asking is that the institution distributes a great deal of money, and is a great advantage to the city, which indeed it is. It costs about $25,000 a year to maintain the college, most of which sum is spent for the necessaries of the table and fuel. From many standpoints it is an admirable institution to have in a city of St. Thomas size.

ALL QUIET ON THE YALU RIVER

Outpost Lines are Within a Hundred Yards of Each Other—Major-General Pflug Says Statements of the Fall of Port Arthur are Unfounded—Russia Guessing at Probable Course of the Japaneses.

Seoul, April 19.—The commissioner of customs at Gensan reports that a strong Russian force, the number of which is not known, is advancing on the great south road, following the inland coast of the Province of Southhamgyung. The Russians passed to the rear of Sungjin, which was occupied by a scouting party. The main body occupied Poukchyong, 80 miles north of Gensan, on the 17th inst. Flanks and rear were exposed, with the evident intention of drawing a Japanese attack from the Yalu.

Occupy Mountain Pass.

St. Petersburg, April 19.—A detachment of Russian troops which left Southern Ussuri, has reached Mapershan, on the west bank of the Yalu River, 175 miles north of Pingyang without having encountered any of the enemy. The detachment has occupied a mountain pass between Manchuria and Corea, which it is fortifying with mountain batteries.

Quiet on Yalu River.

An official telegram states that there is no change in the situation on the Yalu River. The Russian outposts are now on islands of the river, 100 yards from the Japanese outposts, which are preparing to retire.

Major-General Pflug, chief of the military staff at Port Arthur, telegraphs that all statements regarding a siege and fall of Port Arthur are unfounded.

Vice-Admiral Makaroff's widow has been granted an annual pension of $10,000.

Guesses At Jap Plans.

St. Petersburg is flooded with rumors from all directions regarding the plans of the Japanese, now that the Russian fleet at Port Arthur is unable longer to menace their troop transports. The Associated Press, in a despatch from Port Arthur, Sunday last, gave twenty as the number of Japanese transports reported as having been sighted steaming in the direction of Yinkow, the seaport of Newchwang. Officials of the general staff, while having no information in this respect, would not be surprised if the number should turn out to be correct, or even that a larger number are steaming there.

Gen. Kuropatkin recently inspected Newchwang. He is familiar with the strategic position there and disposed a strong force to contest a Japanese move at that point, and if such a move is made it is believed he will be able to check it.

Baltic Fleet to Go.

Paris, April 19.—"The Emperor, in receiving a visit from Grand Duke Alexis to-day," says the St. Petersburg correspondent of The Echo de Paris, "informed him that he desired the Baltic fleet to be ready to start July 15. Orders have accordingly been sent to Kronstadt to hasten the preparation of the fleet for its sailing on the date fixed, under Rear-Admiral Rojestvenski, unless another admiral, of whom there has been much talk, shall be selected."

SHRAPNEL SHELLS.

St. Petersburg, April 19.—It is asserted here with great positiveness that Russia has purchased two battleships, Atschichau and Elbing.

Paris, April 19.—A despatch to The Temps from St. Petersburg says the Japanese are preparing to cut the Russian line of communication along the Peninsula of Liaotung, at the same time that they cross the Yalu River.

Tienstin, April 19.—From several sources reports have been received here saying that a Japanese fleet of over seventy transports is heading for Kinchou, north of Port Arthur.

St. Petersburg, April 19.—An attempted landing by Japanese troops on the shores of Corea Bay, between Port Arthur and the Yalu River, April 12, was frustrated by the Russians.

CHINA AND CANADA

Emperor Says Naught Touching Restrictive Legislation.

RE. THE BOUNDARY OF ALASKA

Correspondence to Be Published At An Early Date—Resumption of the Grand Trunk Pacific Debate—Mr. Ralph Smith's Proposals on Behalf of British Columbia—Questions and Answers.

Ottawa, April 19.—The Premier yesterday informed the House that he had received no information respecting the report that the Emperor of China had made overtures to the Imperial authorities with a view to upsetting the restrictive legislation regarding the admission of Chinese, passed by the House last year. Another announcement by Sir Wilfrid Laurier was to the effect that he was negotiating with the Imperial authorities, and hoped to be able to publish the correspondence on the Alaskan boundary case in a blue book at an early date. Half a dozen speeches constituted the day's contribution to the debate upon the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway resolution. Mr. Ralph Smith, the Labor representative from Vancouver, B. C., presented the claim from his Province for the insertion of provisions requiring the commencement of the work of construction at the Pacific coast simultaneously with the other sections, and against the introduction of Oriental labor, but at the same time announced his intention of supporting the measure. Mr. Sinclair, the newly-elected member for Guysboro', N.S., whose maiden speech was a very creditable effort, was the only speaker on the Government side. The speakers on the Opposition side were Dr. Roche (Marquette), Mr. R. A. Pringle, Mr. D. Henderson and Mr. Wilmot, all of whom condemned the Government proposition. Mr. Henderson reiterated the contention, which has been frequently advanced by the Opposition speakers during the debate, that the G.T.R. should have been allowed to carry out their original proposition and construct their line from North Bay to Winnipeg and the West. Mr. A. E. Kemp will resume the debate to-day, and it is anticipated that a vote may possibly be reached before adjournment to-night.

Replies to Members.

Mr. Aulay Morrison asked the Government if it had any knowledge of any correspondence going on between the Empress of China and the British Government looking to repeal of anti-Chinese legislation in Canada. Sir Wilfrid Laurier replied in the negative.

Mr. Borden asked if the Government would lay on the table of the House the commission or instructions issued to the Joint High Commission. Sir Wilfrid promised to produce the commission.

Mr. Borden wanted to know if all the papers relating to the Alaskan boundary dispute had been brought down. Sir Wilfrid replied that before the end of the session all these papers would be laid on the table of the House.

Mr. Borden also asked if all the correspondence between the Government and Mr. Blair relating to the latter's resignation had been given to the House. Sir Wilfrid said he thought all the correspondence had been brought down, but promised to make enquiries.

Cattle Guard Commission.

Replying to Mr. Lennox the Minister of Railways stated that the total cost of the railway cattle guard commission was $6,829.

Mr. Clarke was informed that the Government has no record of any application for permission to obtain electric power generated in Canada to convey it to the United States.

Mr. Hackett asked if agricultural delegates, "Gentlemen giving their time and brains to the advancement of the country, should not be provided with free transportation over the I.C.R."

"I am afraid," replied the Minister of Railways, "that our rolling stock would not be sufficient to accommodate all the people who are giving their time and brains to the advancement of the country."

Amended Militia Bill.

Sir Frederick Borden has given notice of several amendments to the Militia Bill, which he will move when the bill is taken up in committee. Most important of these is the amendment which makes the general officer commanding definitely and specially "Subject to the regulations and under the direction of the Minister of Militia."

May Be No Bill.

Ottawa, April 19.—Senator Scott stated in the Upper House yesterday that he spoke without authority in promising an amendment to the Insurance Act this session. A bill had been submitted by interested parties, but the department had not yet endorsed it.

Vladivostock Garrison in Need of Provisions and Money — No Help Forthcoming Because of Flood.

Special C. N. W. Despatches to the Examiner.

WANT IN VLADIVOSTOCK

St. Petersburg, April 19. — The population of Vladivostock is in want of the most necessary kind of provisions, and in consequence of the flooded rivers, which interrupt communication, it is impossible to furnish them supplies. There is also a scarcity of money.

RUSSIANS RETREAT

Shanghair, April 19. — Noon. — Authentic news from Seoul, dated 12th inst., declares the Japanese are in complete control of Korea and that the Russian scouting parties have retired across the Yalu before the Japanese, who occupied Wiju practically without any resistance. The Japanese army is divided into two forces, one for expeditionary purposes and the other for occupation. The former, numbering 45,000, is advancing to the Yalu, and the latter, consisting of 15,000 reserves, is making far-sighted communication arrangements with the headquarters at Seoul, where there is a garrison of 4,000.

A prominent Southern lady, Mrs. Blanchard, of Nashville, Tenn., tells how she was cured of backache, dizziness, painful and irregular periods by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Gratitude compels me to acknowledge the great merit of your Vegetable Compound. I have suffered for four years with irregular and painful menstruation, also dizziness, pains in the back and lower limbs, and fitful sleep. I dreaded the time to come which would only mean suffering to me.

"Better health is all I wanted, and cure if possible. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound brought me health and happiness in a few short months. I feel like another person now. My aches and pains have left me. Life seems new and sweet to me, and everything seems pleasant and easy.

"Six bottles brought me health, and was worth more than months under the doctor's care, which really did not benefit me at all. I am satisfied there is no medicine so good for sick women as your Vegetable Compound, and I advocate it to my lady friends in need of medical help."—MRS. B. A. REAL PROBITION.

A real and not a pretended probibition is to be given to the people of Toronto Junction [illegible] to their expressed wish, says the Globe. This is a line of policy on the part of the Ontario Government which will be generally commended. To suppress the retail trade while continuing the wholesale would merely impose a change of methods, and the people who desire to drink would merely find other places to congregate. Prohibition is a matter that should be regarded seriously, both by the citizens who vote on it and the representatives who enforce their decisions. It is true that we have too little regard for the rights of minorities. The Nihilist belief in the nothingness of the individual has far too strong a hold on the public mind. Every citizen submits not only his property, but his personal habits, his liberty, and even his life, to the will of the majority. This is not as it should be, but the remedy will be found, if at all, in constitutional safeguards, not in defective statutes or lax enforcements. Herbert Spencer has called our belief in the divine right of majorities "the great political superstition." The name is well chosen, but so long as we accept the belief we must retain a serious appreciation of what it entails; and in the abolition of alcholic indulgence the abundant benefits bestowed on the whole community entirely outweigh all considerations of personal predilection. The people of Toronto Junction decided to prohibit the use of alcholic liquors within the area under their jurisdiction. It is a question that has been discussed for more than a generation. Commissions here and elsewhere have exhaustively investigated every phase of it. Almost every imaginable experiment has been tried. Nothing new remains to be said either for or against prohibition, so it is certain that the people acted with a full knowledge of the issue. To some it seemed beset with innumerable doubts and uncertainties, while to others it was clear as noon day. Some saw the balance of advantage on one side and some on the other. But the majority, to whom all are forced to bow, decided in favour of prohibition, and the only sound policy, under all the circumstances, is to make it thoroughly effective.

When such restrictions are comprehensively drafted and rigidly enforced they give the public a due appreciation of their importance. If it is known that prohibition means prohibition it will not be looked upon as a joke, and a vote on it will not be regarded as the expression of an altruistic sentiment. A wholesale liquor store in a prohibition municipality would simply bring ridicule on the law and on those entrusted with its enforcement. It would also encourage the common belief in regarding the expression of public opinion as of little or no consequence. Some sympathy has been expressed for the minority in Toronto Junction, and the feeling is by no means unnatural. Men accustomed to certain habits, usages and indulgences, which they do not regard as wrong in themselves or encroaching on the rights of others feel that they have been unfairly dealt with by the assertion of the will of the majority. It does not answer all objections to tell them that the world is wide and that they can find many communities in which they will be free from restraint. Their business interests demand that they live where they are. But where the will of the majority extends to so many features of public and domestic life there are certain to be individual complaints. If anyone finds conditions intolerable in Toronto Junction there is no resource but to move; and the town will be compensated by a larger influx of those who find altered surroundings conforming to their desires. The best service that can be rendered to the cause of prohibition is to compel its advocates, its opponents and the indifferent many, to realize what it means, and that will be the effect of the Government's policy. Under the present Administration men will see that it does not mean the substitution of one method of purchase for another or the transfer of meeting places from saloons to clubs and private houses. An English statesmen recently called attention to the tendency of the public to vote for laws to which they would absolutely refuse obedience. The mischief of this tendency can best be cured by making all such laws comprehensive and rigidly enforcing them. According to our principle of majority rule, the people of Toronto Junction are entitled to complete prohibition, and the Ministry is to be commended for courageously implementing their decision.

Mr. Gordon Moffat spent Sunday in Toronto.

Messrs. Buck & Walsh shipped this week one carload of hogs to Matthews Company, Peterborough.

Messrs. Finlay & Son shipped one car of rabs to Markham and one car of carriage goods to Montreal.

The death of the late Mrs. Roland Scriver occurred at the family residence, Spring street, on Saturday morning after a short illness. The funeral took place from the house on Monday at 2 p.m., and proceeded to the Methodist church, where the funeral service was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Parker. After the service the remains were interred in the Norwood Cemetery. Mrs. Scriver leaves a husband and nine children to mourn her loss,—William, Albert, Henry, May, Ingle, Gordon, Russell, Grace and Percy. Mrs. Scriver will be greatly missed in the home circle. The bearers were her six nephews of Hastings,—Messrs. Henry Scriver, Lewis Scriver, George Scriver, Bert Scriver, Wm. Clapper and Lewis Clapper.

The house on Peterborough street belonging to Mr. Thomas Armstrong has been purchased by Mr. Ball.

A GUARANTEED CURE FOR PILES.

All druggists are authorized by the manufacturers of Pazo Ointment to refund the money where it fails to cure any case of piles, no matter of how long standing, ordinary cases in six days; the worst in fourteen days. One application gives ease and rest. Relieves itching instantly. This is a new discovery and it is the only pile remedy sold on a positive guarantee, no cure no pay. Price 50c.

If your druggist hasn't it in stock send 50 cents (Canadian stamps accepted) to the Paris Medicine Co., St. Louis, Mo., manufacturers of Laxative Bromo Quinine, the celebrated cold cure.

Submarine Raised.

London, April 19.—The submarine boat "A1," which was run down by the Donald Currie Line steamer Berwick Castle, March 18, off the Isle of Wight, resulting in the loss of her crew, numbering eleven officers and men, was raised yesterday morning and docked at Portsmouth last night.

Blacksmith Issues Writ.

Woodstock, April 19.—C. W. Buckburrough, blacksmith, of Ingersoll, has caused a writ for $5,000 damages to be issued against James Herrendeen of the Calstor House, Woodstock, for alienating his wife's affections.

Railway Commission.

Ottawa, April 19.—A meeting of the Railway Commission has been called for the 26th inst. to hear complaints against the G.T.R. and the Kingston & Pembroke for the haulage of logs.

EMBARGO ON CATTLE

It Is Condemned by the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce.

STRONG RESOLUTION PASSED

Removal of Embargo From Canadian Cattle By Great Britain Would Be An Excellent Thing For the Latter From a Hygienic Point of View, and Would Be Evidence of Friendship For Canada.

London, April 19.—(C.A.P.)—At a meeting of the animal and meat trade section of the Incorporate Chamber of Commerce at Liverpool, a telegram was read from Sir Alfred Jones urging the section to press the Government for the removal of the embargo on Canadian cattle.

The Chairman strongly advocated the removal, on the ground that it would be an excellent thing for this country from a hygienic point in view of the fact that we are sending our best beef stock from this country, and as a consequence our stock are interbreeding, which naturally results in a deteriorating quality of stock.

Also, the embargo might be removed for reasons of friendship for Canada. Mr. J. J. Gilbertson of the Canadian Pacific Railway and others spoke strongly in favor of the section taking action.

Professor Boyce, referring to the health of English cattle; stated that, owing to lack of fresh stock, 25 per cent. of the cattle were infected with tuberculosis.

The following resolution was carried unanimously: "That the present restrictions on the importation of Canadian cattle to Great Britain are unjust, so far as they are based on the dread of disease existing among such cattle, since any outbreak of disease is as rigidly dealt with in Canada as in Great Britain, and no infectious disease now exists in Canada."

The resolution concludes by asking that the present regulations be at once reconsidered.

Churchill a Liberal.

Winston Churchill has decided to stand for the northwest division of Manchester, under the auspices of the Liberal Association.

Quarrel Only With England.

Chas. Devlin, M.P., retorting upon the Irish Secretary, said that Ireland had no quarrel with any nation in the world except England, and would have none with England if she were allowed to manage her own affairs.

Manitoba's Wheat.

The Washington correspondent of The Financial Times says that much interest has been aroused in the United States over the statistics relating to Manitoba wheat growing. Manitoba raised 50 per cent. more wheat per acre than Dakota or Minnesota. One-fourth of the wheat lands of the Northwest would be sufficient to supply three times the entire wheat supply of Britain.

Not Aware of It.

Right Hon. Alfred Lyttelton, Colonial Secretary, replying to Sir Gilbert Parker, said he was not aware that any colonial Legislature had passed resolutions against preference.

Colonial Show in 1905.

Influential support has been secured to repeat and expand the Colonial and Indian Exhibition of 1886 at the Crystal Palace in 1905, in view of the rapid strides of Imperialistic sentiment. Among the advisory committee were the Duke of Argyll, Lord Strathcona and Sir Gilbert Parker.

New Tax Expected.

London, April 19.—The budget statement to be made in the House of Commons to-night by Austen Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, is anticpated with the keenest interest.

Premier Balfour yesterday made an unintentional admission that some new form of taxation is expected, but otherwise the secret is well preserved. It is understood to be quite unlikely that this new taxation will be placed on petroleum.

It is regarded as practically certain that the income tax will be raised, possibly a duty will be imposed on imported flour.

Central Camp Put Off.

Ottawa, April 19.—The idea of having a central camp of instruction this year has now been definitely abandoned. The Minister of Militia is anxious to get the best possible property, but there has been no time yet to examine the free site which was offered the department near Sharbot Lake by the Ontario Government. The winter has been so long and the snow so deep that it has not been feasible to carefully inspect this property. Accordingly, the central camp of instruction has been postponed for the present.

The King in An Accident.

Copenhagen, April 19.—The Nyborg-Fuenen train, conveying King Edward and Queen Alexandra from Copenhagen on their way to London, was derailed yesterday afternoon. The last carriage but one left the rails. Their Majesties were in the last carriage and sustained no damage, the mishap only resulting in a slight delay.

A Good Word for Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"In December, 1900, I had a severe cold and was so hoarse that I could not speak above a whisper," says Allan Davis of Freestone, N. Y. "I tried several remedies but got no relief until I used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, one bottle of which cured me. I will always speak a good word for that medicine." For sale by all druggists.

Ottawa Man Killed.

Little Falls, N. Y., April 19.—While repairing a switch yesterday, Alexander Murray, assistant mechanical repair-man on the New York Central Railroad, became confused by two approaching trains stepped in front of an engine and was instantly killed. Murray's home was in Ottawa, Ont.

Favors Church Union.

Ottawa, April 19.—The Ministerial Association yesterday passed a resolution favoring church union.

BYE-ELECTION DELAY.

Legislature Limits the Time to Three Months—New Taxation Bill Passed—Its Principal Provisions.

Toronto, April 19.—The Legislature yesterday varied the "Soo" aid debate with a day at routine, marked by two important events—the third reading and final disposal of the municipal taxation bill, and the decision agreed to by both sides of the House that the writ for a bye-election must not be delayed longer than three months after a seat becomes vacant.

Beyond this item of business a good day's work was done in the House. A large number of bills passed various stages, and the estimates of the Agricultural Department were passed. To-day the debate on the Soo Guarantee Act will be resumed. Several members are expected to speak yet, but it is expected the House will reach a division to-night.

The New Taxation Bill.

The new taxation bill which passed its final stage in the Legislature yesterday, has these main features:

Exemptions.

Interest of the Crown in any property; churches; public educational institutions; city and town halls; public roads; municipal property; public parks, penitentiaries, poor houses; immigration societies; income from surplus funds of friendly societies; scientific or literary institutions; official income of governors; income of military officers; income derived by a farmer from his farm; fixed machinery for manufacturing or farming purposes, except for production or supply of motive power; dividends from stock in incorporated company, the income of which is liable to assessment; toll road stock; income from personal earnings, in cities up to $1,000, in towns up to $700, non-householders up to $400; rental from real estate, except interest on mortgages; assessment for local improvements; officers of superior courts appointed before March 5, 1880.

Business Tax.

Distiller, 150 per cent. of assessed value; brewers, 75 per cent. of land, except such land occupied as a malting house, which will be 60 per cent. of assessed value.

Wholesale merchant, insurance companies, loan or trust companies, express companies, banker or finance firm, 75 per cent.

Manufacturer, 60 per cent.; not liable to business assessment as a wholesale merchant.

Departmental store, more than five branches, where assessed value exceeds $20,000; coal, wood or lumber, lithographer, printer, club, 50 per cent.; in cities over 100,000, coal dealers 25 per cent.

Barrister, physician, oculist, aurist, medical electrician, dentist, veterinary, engineer, surveyor or architect, agent, etc., 50 per cent.

Retail merchant in cities over 50,000 25 per cent.; other cities over 10,000, 30 per cent.; all other municipalities 25 per cent.

Photographer, theatre, concert hall, skating rink, boarding stable, restaurant, hotel, 25 per cent.

Telegraph or telephone company, electric or street railway, transmission company, 25 per cent., exclusive of plant.

Where assessment of any person under the business tax is less than $250 he shall be assessed for $250.

Income Tax.

Every person not liable to business assessment.

Incomes not derived from the business under which a person is assessable.

Income from business over the amount of business assessment.

Agents of trustee who controls income of persons living outside of the province shall be assessed in respect of such income.

Telephone companies, 60 per cent. of gross receipts in cities, towns and villages; in cities over 100,000, 75 per cent.; in townships, $135 a mile for one wire, each additional wire $7.50 a mile. Lines not exceeding 25 miles are not included.

Telegraph companies in cities, towns and villages, 50 per cent. of gross receipts; in townships, $10 a mile for one wire, $5 a mile for each additional wire.

The act comes into force June 1, 1905.

A Mother's Recommendation.

I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for a number of years, and have no hesitancy in saying that it is the best remdy for coughs, colds, and croup that I have ever used in my family. I have not words to express my confidence in this remedy. Mrs. J. A. Moore, North Star, Mich. For sale by all druggists.

London Woman Deserted.

New York, April 19.—Deserted by her husband, hungry and hard pressed for money, Mrs. Sevaterine Dale, a pretty young woman, collapsed in the Hotel Vendome last night and was taken to Bellevue Hospital. Mental worry has caused her deplorable condition. Her husband is Frank Russell Dale of Chicago, and it is said he is in the city now. Mrs. Dale comes from London, Ont., where she is said to own valuable property. Two months ago Mr. and Mrs. Dale registered in the hotel. A few days later, after a quarrel, the husband went away. Mrs. Dale tried and earned some money as an artist's model and also in writing fiction.

A Wonderful Book.

As a work for family reference there was probably never compiled a more useful book than Dr. Chase's Receipt Book. Besides containing the symptoms of disease, their cause and cure and the great prescriptions gathered during half a century of medical practice, this book is replete with receipts for cooking and has a complete department devoted to the care of farm stock, bees, domestic animals, etc. For full particulars write Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

To Proceed Against Gamey First.

Toronto, April 19.—J. M. McEvoy of London, has decided to proceed against R. R. Gamey first in his slander suit and it will come up in the Middlesex Assizes, in September.

Famous Surgeon Dead.

London, April 19.—Sir Henry Thompson, Bart., the distinguished surgeon, died last night.

Not a minute should be lost when a child shows symptoms of croup. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy given as soon as the child becomes hoarse, or even after the croupy cough appears will prevent the attack. It never fails, and is pleasant and safe to take.

McPherson & McGregor

(Successors to the F. R. J. McPherson Co.)

Take this opportunity of thanking the public for the very liberal patronage accorded the late firm. Trade has been so satisfactory that Mr McGregor decided to increase his interest in the business and, as a consequence, the firm will be know hereafter as McPHERSON & McGREGOR.

Our specialties are:—

Sanitary Plumbing
Sanitary Ventilating
Steam and Hot Water Heating
Electrical Wiring and Supplies

We wish to draw the attention of the public to a few of the many complimentary testimonials received by Mr. McGregor for the high quality of the work he has installed in Plumbing and Heating:—

From the Firm of Bennet & Wright, Plumbing, Heating and Electrical Contractors, Toronto.

This is to certify that Duncan McGregor has been in our employment steady for about fifteen years and during that time we have found him to be steady, honest and trustworthy. He has given every satisfaction as a practical mechanic in each of the following branches: Plumbing, steam and gas fitting, also electrical and conduit work, and for some time has had charge of some of our largest contracts with satisfactory results.

From Illsley & Horn, General Contractors, Toronto.

The bearer, Mr. Duncan McGregor, had charge of the electric wiring at the King Edward Hotel Building. The job was a large and complicated one and by the way Mr. McGregor handled the work he proved himself a mechanic of more than ordinary ability. We unhesitatingly recommend him as a first class mechanic to anyone needing his services.

From Mr. J. Ross Robertson, of the Evening Telegram.

Mr. Duncan McGregor, who has been connected with the Bennet & Wright Co. for some years, and who has superintended the work of plumbing and heating for the Bennet & Wright Co., is not only in my opinion, but also that of my architect, a fully competent mechanic. His work, my architect informs me, has been most satisfactory. Any thing that has come under my own supervision has been likewise satisfactory.

An Extract Taken from the June Number of Domestic Engineering.

During the recent convention of the Canadian Electrical Association held in the King Edward Hotel, a thorough examination was made of all the electrical work in the hotel, and it was pronounced second to none on the continent. Therefore, great credit is due Mr. Duncan MacGregor, who superintended the entire conduit, electrical and power system for the firm of Bennet & Wright, of this city, who were the contractors for all the different branches of the electrical work in the new hotel.

FISH IN ONTARIO.

A Dearth of Herring—Big Falling Off in Last Season's Catch.

According to the report of the Ontario fisheries branch of the Department of Agriculture, the value of last season's catch was $1,537,161. In 1892 the value was $2,012,161. In 1890 $2,009,637. The total value of the fish taken from Ontario waters since 1870 is $37,712,135. The quantity of fish taken last year shows a large falling off in many important classes, and the higher prices resulting from the scarcity were accountable for the increased value of the catch.

The following figures show the catch and the decrease or increase in class:

	Catch. lbs.	Decrease. lbs.
Whitefish	2,632,770	227,900
do. salted	34,400	14,100
Herring	3,088,150	1,993,204

Total	2,134,205	2,366,365

*Increase.

Whitefish increased 66,965 pounds in Lake of the Woods and Rainy River district, 165,607 pounds in Lake Superior, decreased 337,170 pounds in Lake Huron, north channel, increased 10,790 pounds in Georgian Bay, increased 2,812 pounds in Lake Huron proper, decreased 1,000 pounds in River St. Clair, decreased 20,250 pounds in Lake St. Clair and Detroit River, decreased 146,606 pounds in Lake Erie, increased 19,909 pounds in Lake Ontario, and increased 20,100 pounds in Nipissing district.

Herring decreased 75,520 pounds in Lake Superior, increased 1,111 pounds in Lake Huron, north channel, and 441 pounds in Lake Huron proper, decreased 1,625 pounds in Georgian Bay, increased 3,200 pounds in St Clair River, decreased 200 pounds in Lake St. Clair and Detroit River, decreased 791,750 pounds in Lake Erie, decreased 945,519 pounds in Lake Ontario, and increased 14,630 pounds in Nipissing district.

Trout increased 33,576 pounds in Lake of the Woods and Rainy River district, 307,781 pounds in Lake Superior, 496,455 pounds in Lake Huron, north channel, 46,803 pounds in Lake Huron proper, decreased 187,280 pounds in Georgian Bay, increased 2,007 pounds in Lake Erie, and 6,588 pounds in Lake Ontario.

The fishing industry has grown rapidly during the past few years, and last season there were engaged in the fishing business 124 tugs, with 589 men, 1,295 boats and 2,296 nets.

There were 93,701,000 fry distributed in the waters of the province by the Dominion Government from Dominion hatcheries during the year. The total number of fry distributed by the Dominion Government in Ontario waters since 1868 is 1,571,862,200. In 1902 it was 101,895,000.

OMANTIC WEDDING.

Nova S... Returns to Claim the Girl of ... After Making Millions.

A ... ic ending to a lengthy courtsh... has occurred at Glace Bay, when ...derick R Strong, a millionaire mine-owner of South Africa, has just returned and claimed as his bride Miss Mollie B. Newhook, of the Newfoundland village of Tilt's Cove, to whom he became engaged eighteen years ago. They were then a plain country lad and lass of seventeen and fifteen years, respectively. Strong left for the Canadian West, went into the Klondike at the early strike, and made half a million dollars. Leaving Dawson City he went to South Africa, invested in mines, and is now worth two millions. He never forgot the pretty maiden at his old home, and a few days ago returned to Tilt's Cove to claim his bride. Miss Newhook was then at Glace Bay, C.B., and there Strong hastened and the wedding took place, the clergyman receiving a fee up in the thousands. Mr. and Mrs. Strong sailed on the 23rd March for Cape Town.

The Chinook.

The Chinook is one of the peculiarities and one of the blessings of Western Assiniboia and Southern Alberta. It affects the broad belt of territory contiguous to the foothills of the Rocky Mountains, blowing down the slopes as genial breezes in the winter time, and in summer tempering the heat as currents of cool and moisture-laden air. The winter climate of these Provinces is very like that of Colorado, a season of bright, cloudless days, infrequent and scanty snowfalls, and frequent and prolonged breaks of warm weather heralded by the Chinook wind. No doubt the Japan current, which in British Columbia plays the part of the gulf stream in northwestern Europe, contributes to temper these regions.

The Chinook is so called because it blows from the quarter where lies the land once inhabited by the Chinook Indians, on the banks of the lower Columbia River.

French-Canadian Authors.

Out of thirty French-Canadian authors who submitted works of dramatic composition for a competition got up by Mr. Georges Garvreau, of the Theatre National-Francais, nineteen produced pieces considered worthy of public representation. The fact is indicative of the most notable phase of the great literary activity going on at present among the French-Canadians. Almost all these works are in the domain of light comedy, and are more French than Canadian in idea and expression.

Man Dropped to Death.

New York, April 19.—Robert Nolan, aged 29 years, was killed; Charles Morris, aged 49 years, perhaps fatally injured, and Frank Anderson, seriously hurt, yesterday, when a big iron girder slipped from the tackle by which it had been raised 40 feet in the air and fell. The men were on the girder and dropped with it to the ground.

SIGNS OF OLD LONDON.

Few of Them Now Remain as Reminders of Era When Each Tradesmen Tried to Outdo His Neighbor.

The Magazine of Commerce contains an illustrated article entitled "The Romance of the Sign of Old London." The interesting history of these quaint mementoes of bygone days is written by Mr. Colford. When once the system of signs (writes Mr. Colford) as distinctive trading marks gained full headway, each tradesman tried to outdo his neighbor in the size and glory of his particular advertisement, until the ci... became one vast display of decorative humor. Later on, by permission of Charles I., every house had its sign hanging from wooden brackets or iron rods fixed into the walls of the house. The streets of old London were narrow, winding and dark. The houses projected as they rose above the highway until one could almost shake hands with a neighbor across the street. These narrow places were filled with long-armed signs, ponderous in their weight of iron, ridiculous in conception and fantastic in their dress of paint. In storm and wind they groaned and twisted on their rusty hinges, hindering ventilation, making the night hideous, and becoming an absolute menace to the traveler on the street.

In 1762, after many people had been killed by the falling of lumbering things, an Act of Parliament compelled their removal, and they were to be placed level with the wall, or carved in stone and set into the structure. This struggle of illiteracy to make a literature in trade makes a story of surpassing and perpetual interest. Those who could, advertised their name by a rebus, thus a hare and a bottle stood for "Harebottle," and two cocks for "Cox." Those who could not employ a rebus adopted pictorial objects, until they had ransacked the heavens above and the earth beneath. In due course of time the occupant would move from his place of business and leave his sign behind him, and a trade of another order would then be carried on under the old flag.

Addison, writing in The Spectator, enjoins every shopkeeper to make use of some sign that bears some affinity to the wares in which he deals. A tailor at "The Lion," a cook at "The Boat," a shoemaker at "The Roasted Pig," are reprobated by the author, who adds, "and yet, for want of this regulation, I have seen a Goat set up before the door of a perfumer, and the French King's head at a sword cutler's." And then he goes on to enumerate signboard absurdities. "When was there ever such a combination of incongruous objects as 'The Bell and Neat's Tongue,' 'The Dog and the Gridiron?' 'The Fox and the Goose' have met, but what have 'The Fox and the Seven Stars' to do together, and when did 'The Lamb and the Dolphin' ever meet, except on a signpost?"

The time has long gone when the streets of London were filled with blue boars, black swans, red lions, flying pigs and hogs in armor, together with many creatures more extraordinary than any in the deserts of Africa. To study that history is to read the literature of the English people doing business at their great London office at a time when they knew not their alphabet.

It Was a Love Affair.

Montreal, April 19.—"After receiving your letter of March 25, I have nothing more to live for." The above contained in a letter addressed to Miss Halliday, a teacher in the Westmount Academy, by Rev. Colin Dugald, the ill-fated Presbyterian pastor of Maisonneuve, tells the sad tale. The lady had rejected the reverend gentleman's offer of marriage and he committed suicide. He has been in poor health for some time past.

SOUTHERN TOWNS ARE VERY ACTIVE.

In their Agitation for the Construction of a Branch of C. P. R.

Deputation was in Town Last Night on Way to Ottawa—Confident of Getting the Railway.

A portion of a deputation of very considerable proportions was in town last night on its way to Ottawa, where an interview with members of the Government took place this morning at ten o'clock. The deputation was that representing towns from Campbellford to Whitby, along the proposed route of the new railway, under C.P.R. management, which is to be constructed to give towns along the main line of the G. T. R. a competing line of railway to Toronto.

Those who were in town last night were Mayor Fowke, of Oshawa, with a number of aldermen and prominent business men of that enterprising town; Aldermen J. J. Mason and F. Mason, of Bowmanville; Col. John Hughes of Newtonville; Mayor Quinlan, F. Outram, Harold Barrett, A. H. [illegible], F. Holmes, G. H. Hogg, of Port Hope; Mayor Mober, ex-Mayor Floyd, H. T. Holland, of Cobourg.

These were joined in Ottawa by representatives from all the towns and municipalities through which the proposed railway will pass, and this morning, when the Bill granting the charter to the railway came up for its third reading, the deputation was on hand to press its claims.

The members of the deputation were last night interviewed by the Examiner, and all expressed themselves as being in high hopes of the charter being granted, and the railway being constructed. Ald. Mason of Bowmanville, stated that they had received assurances from numbers of the members that the Bill would receive their support, and, as it is believed that those asking for the railway will be able to make out a good case in support of their claim that its construction would greatly benefit the section of the country through which it would pass little difficulty is anticipated in securing the passage of the Bill. It was pointed out that the towns in which the strongest agitation for the railway is being carried on, find themselves greatly handicapped because of the fact that there is but one line of railway connecting them with the outside world, and while this does not materially affect the freight rates, althought undoubtedly it does to a certain extent, the greatest disadvantage is that arising from the fact that in many cases shippers are discriminated against in favour of those towns where there is a competing railway line. In cases of a freight blockade or where there is a scarcity of cars through a rush of business, towns where there are two lines of railway, are provided for first, and those not so fortunately situated have to wait the pleasure of the particular railway with which their town happens to be served.

The towns along the front claim, though it remains for investigation to prove the truth of such claim, that with a second line of railway they would be in a position to offer great advantages to manufacturing firms looking for locations for sites and naturally they are particularly anxious that this, the only missing link, according to their claim, between them and industrial prosperity should be supplied. They are prepared to put up a strong fight for the charter go-day, although naturally the Grand Trunk Railway, in whose territory these unsatisfied towns are, will put in an opposition to the charter, the granting of which, if the railway is constructed, will affect the business coming to their line.

The railway, as petitioned for, is one to branch from the Ontario and Quebec Division of the C.P.R. at or near Blairton, in Peterborough county, and run in a southerly direction until it touches Campbellford, whence it goes to Cobourg, and in turn passes through Port Hope, Newtonville, Newcastle, Bowmanville, Oshawa, Whitby and Pickering, from the latter place going north again until it joins the C.P.R. at or near Agincourt.

While Peterborough has taken little or no interest in the proposed new line, it will undoubtedly have a certain effect on this town. If this new line is as short between the two defleeting points as the main line, and if the road can be constructed with fewer grades and curves than the present line, it will doubtless be used for the bulk of the through traffic, and while there is little danger that this town will be sidetracked, it might do no harm to see that its interests are not prejudicially affected.

MR. E. ELCOME ON "OWLS OF ONTARIO."

Instructive Address Given at George Street Epworth League Last Night.

The regualr monthly Literary Meeting of George street Epworth League was held last evening, when a most interesting talk on the subject "The Owls of Ontario," was given by Mr. E. Elcome. Mr. Elcome exhibited a number of beautiful specimens including the following species:—The snow owl, the cat owl, the great gray and barred owls, the long eared and the short eared owls, the hawk owl, the saw-wood owl, Richardson's owl and a couple of different coloured screech owls.

In the course of his remarks Mr. Elcome explained the construction of the wing of the owl, drawing attention to its noiseless flight. The peculiar construction of the eyes was also explained, while the ear, voice, foot, the nest and eggs, and the prey upon which the owl lives, and its manner of attack all received due attention.

At the close of the address an opportunity was given for discussion and questions, advantage of which was taken by a number present. On motion of Mr. A. R. Kidd, seconded by Mr. Devereaux, the thanks of those present was conveyed to Mr. Elcome for his most interesting and instructive address.

Had Their Photo Taken.

ALL SAINTS' PARISH WANTS NEW CHURCH.

And One will be Erected at No Distant Date.

The Seating Capacity of Present Church is Insufficient—A Committee of three Appointed to Look after Preliminary Matters.

At the adjourned Vestry meeting of All Saint's Anglican Church it was resolved to erect a new and larger church, one which would fill the demands of the parish. This action was decided upon because every Sunday a certain number of persons are turned away from the present place of worship, there being insufficient seating room. As was pointed out by the new Rector, Rev. Wm. Major, the existence of such a condition of things would be very detrimental to the future welfare of the congregation, as persons after repeatedly being turned away would naturally leave the church. The subject was introduced by the Rev. Mr. Major who broke into a discussion regarding the proposed rectory, saying that the needs of the ever increasing congregation should be first attended to. Mr. J. H. McClellan took up the subject by stating that certainly something should be done in the matter. The seating capacity of the church was too small and either an addition to the present building should be made or a new church erected. Messrs. Layfield, Watt, Cuff, Edgar, Maughan, Fitzgerald Bullen and Miss Chamberlen also took up the subject and all expressed their approval of the suggestions put forth by Mr. McClellan.

It was found impossible to make any addition to the present building and Messrs. McClellan, Layfield and Green were appointed to take initiatory steps in the matter.

The proposition is that a lot to the south and adjoining the present church, be bought and a church built there and to turn the present building into a Sunday School and Parish Home. The seating capacity of the church is about 350 persons while the congregation exceeds that number. The Committee will report before the congregation on Monday evening, May 2nd.

SPLENDID CONCERT ON VICTORIA DAY.

A Good Array of Imported and Local Talent will Furnish Programme.

The citizens of Peterborough will have the oppoftunity of hearing the finest concert of the season on the evening of May 24th, "Victoria Day." Such artists as Miss Alice Dean, solo violiniste, of London, Eng., who appeared here with the Harold Jarvis Concert Co., last season, being engaged. Miss Dean is, without doubt, one of the leading violinists of America and is a great favourite here.

Master Clarence Glass, America's best boy soprano will make his first appearance in Peterborough at this concert. Master Glass is soloist at the Sherbourne street, Methodist church, Toronto, and his appearance here will no doubt be looked forward to with interest.

Miss Helen Davies and Miss Florence Miller have been engaged and the people of Peterborough will have an opportunity of hearing their two foremost singers on the same programme.

Mr. Sydney Glass, the new soloist at St. Andrew's, undoubtedly the finest concert tenor in Canada, will be heard in concert numbers on this occasion.

Mr. Alf. E. Young, baritone of St. Andrew's church, who is fast becoming a favourite vocalist here, will render several patriotic selections that night. With this array of talent, it will no doubt prove the most attractive concert of the season.

A PLEASANT EVENING SPENT AT THE Y. M. C. A.

"Citizen's Night" was Very Extensively Patronized.

An Excellent Musical and Gymnastic Programme was Given—Medals Presented to Prize Winners.

The "At Home" and gymnastic exhibition given in the Y.M.C.A. building last night was an unqualified success, and was moreover attended by an exceptionally large number of persons, who left freely expressing their approval of the entertainment, and the manner in which it was carried through. The event is always largely patronized by citizens, but last night eclipsed all previous ones. The gallery in the gymnasium was more than filled, and numbers of the late arrivals thronged the doors, attempting to get as good a vision as possible.

The reception was held in the parlours, commencing at 7.30 o'clock, with Mr. Gliddon's orchestra in attendance. During the evening the orchestra played much delightful music, which was fully appreciated by the audience.

Amateur photograph exhibits and Mr. Webber Turner's valuable collection of rare coins, in the Board Room, attracted much attention during the interval between the reception and the GYMNASTIC EXHIBITION.

This began shortly after eight o'clock with some apparatus work by Messrs A. D. Sawers, W. D. Campbell and N. Miller, three gymnasium leaders, whose efforts were loudly applauded by the onlookers. This number was followed by a fast basket ball game between the Athletics, the city champions, and the Brownies. The latter team showed their superiority from the start and put up an excellent exhibition of the game. The final score was 18—5 in favour of the Brownies, who at half time were in the lead by 8—0. The two teams lined up as follows:

Brownies — Centre, W. Fitzpatrick; forwards, Gordon and N. Miller; defense, R. Hall and A. Boucher.

Athletics — Centre, E. Dillon, forwards, H. Dunsford and H. Morgan; defence, J. Doris and T. Glover.

During the half time interval, Sgt. Major Brittain and Sergt. Stur-Sturgeon, had an assault-at-arms contest. Both men handled their weapons well, and the event created considerable interest. The gymnastic programme was closed by a ten minute wrestling bout between Robert Long of Ashburnham, and A. C. Yokome. Both men were very evenly matched and after a scientific tussle the bout was declared a draw neither man securing a fall. Mr. Chris. Graham was umpire.

Mr. J. H. Conmal, Chairman of the Physical Committee, next presented the Athletics, last year's basketball champions, with their medals. Those who received them were: — T. Glover, E. Dillon, H. Dunsford, J. Doris, W. Cavanagh and Geo. Robertson. Messrs. E. Renton and A. Hudson also received medals for sports at the Field Day.

MUSICALE.

After the conclusion of the gymnastic exhibition, everyone retired to the Association Hall where a musical programme of high merit was given. The accompanist of the evening was Miss Georgia Dennistoun, and the programme rendered was as follows:

Overture ... ...Mr. Gliddon's Orchestra

Piano solo, "Rondo Capriccioso, Op. 14" ....E. Mendelssohn
Miss Wilhelmina Gumpricht.

Violin solo, "Concerto No. 1, 1st Movement, Ch. De Beriot Op. 16"
Mr. Gilbert Markle.

Vocal solo, "Love's Coronation"....Florence Aylward
Miss Gertrude Kendry.

Piano solo, "Grande Polka de Concert in G Flat, Op. 1" .....Homer Bartlett
Miss Wilhelmina Gumpricht.

Vocal solo, "For All Eternity," Mascheroni
Mr Joseph Legg.

Violin, (a) "Slumber Song"... Schuman
" (b) "Serenade" ... ... Pleine
Mr. Gilbert Markle.

Vocal solo, "Awake" ... ...Pellisier
Miss Lillian Moore.

Mr. Jos. Legg was encored and responded with "Tic-Tac-Too." Mr. A. L. Davis, whose name was on the programme for a vocal solo, sent a polite note stating that he regretted his inability to be present, but was prevented by an unforseen occurrence. He also enclosed a handsome subscription, as the proceeds of the entertainment were in aid of the Folding Organ Fund of the Association.

That the musical section of the event was also enjoyed by those present was evidenced in the hearty applause which was accorded both one and all of the various artists. At the conclusion of the programme refreshments were served in the game room. These were served by the following ladies:—Miss Helen Mason, Miss Bella Morrow, Miss Maud Mason, Miss Molly Hall and Miss Marie Elliott.

That the event was so successful was due to the efforts of the General Secretary, Mr. Williamson and the Physical Director, Mr. Aplin, both of whom worked unceasingly in endeavouring to make the affair a most enjoyable one.

ANTICIPATE TROUBLE AT YOUNG'S POINT.

Water is Flowing over Lock Gates—Buckhorn Dam May Give Away.

The residents of Young's Point are fearing that their village may be visited by a rather serious flood. The water at the present time is nearly up to Kearney's Hotel, and is flowing over the gates at the lock. A telephone message received yesterday from Burleigh did not tend to allay their fears. It was learned that the dam at Buckhorn was in rather an unsatisfactory condition, and that the stop logs might be washed out, in which event the water at present held back by them would be let loose, and would supplement that at present passing through Young's Point. This intelligence caused some alarm, and preparations are being made to prevent a disaster. The water at present is much higher at the Point than it has been at this time of the year in the recollection of the "oldest residents."
